(3). Fasting may consist in total, or partial abstinence for a given time; or in refraining from "pleasant bread," as expressed by Daniel. He was so anxious to obtain an "understanding of the vision," that he "ate no pleasant bread, . . . till three whole weeks were fulfilled." Dan. 10: 3. The length of a fast and its rigidness is usually in proportion to the intensity of our desire to obtain that for which we are praying.

When Jonah was sent to proclaim to the Ninevites that in forty days their "great city" should be overthrown, "the king and his nobles" proclaimed a strict fast, saying: "Let neither man nor beast, herd nor flock, taste any thing; let them not feed, nor drink water." In consequence of their fasting, prayer and humiliation, the Lord spared their city from immediate destruction.

When Haman obtained a decree from Ahasuerus to have all the Jews destroyed, queen Esther requested them to fast three days for her, that she might be successful in obtaining a petition from the king in favor of the Jews. During this fast, the request was made by the queen that they should "neither eat nor drink three days, night or day." She said: "I also and my maidens will fast likewise." Complete success followed on the part of the Jews.

When one fasts for spiritual good, the benefit is not usually felt during the fast, but on days following. During the fast, one usually has a clearer view of the heart's condition; an emptiness may be felt, followed by a very sweet peace, resulting from the fasting and prayer.

This is an age of feasting. Fasting is scarcely known. One thing is quiet certain, the feasting of the present age has a direct tendency to produce backsliding, and a dwarfed christianity. The early christians often fasted, besides living on an abstemious diet; the very opposite of the common mode of living at the present day. The ordinary fast consists in the omission of one or two meals; or in abstaining from "pleasant bread," as did Daniel. It is well to spend in prayer the time usually devoted to the meal omitted. M. G.

TEMPTATION.

The Scriptures represent men in this state of existence as being subject to temptation, and therefore exposed to danger. Temptation is liable to ensnare and destroy us; but this depends upon our understanding the presence and nature of the snare and the way to escape it. It is the "simple," the ignorant or unenlighted, who "pass on and are punished."

The possession of eternal life depends upon our relation to temptation; for Inspiration says, "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation; for when he is tried he shall receive the crown of life." That is, by enduring temptation he secures the crown of life. If our acts and position under temptation determines our future condition, the subject should be well understood and thoroughly analyzed by us.

The original idea expressed by the root of this term is "to stretch," that is to test the power of resistance that one thing or being has over another; involving two parties or parts, one exercising forces in opposition to the other. Applying the idea physically, it would be like stretching a cable to test its strength, or the discharge of a cannon to determine its power to resist the force of the explosive, or the test of a steam boiler to know how many pounds per square inch it will bear.

To apply the principle morally, which is the department to which the Scriptures apply it, we shall expect to find moral forces operating against other moral powers, in which one of the agencies will overcome and defeat the other. Temptation is therefore a warfare between two parties, and must continne until one of the antagonistic forces is defeated.

It cannot exist in a world where all beings are directed by one head, so that all are in harmony and peace.

The two leaders and directors of the warring parties in the universe are God and Satan. God directs all the beings and elements of good, and Satan all those of evil.

We mean in these propositions to apply temptation in its primary and unlimited sense, for it is sometimes used in the Scriptures in a qualified and limited sense. God and Satan have each their powers and agencies through which they operate upon humanity, and as they are in opposition in their designs upon man, they must, as long as he is in temptation, use opposing influences upon him, so that he will feel that antagonism in his experience. One will influence him to go to the right, and the other to the left. God will present him his truth for his acceptance, and Satan will as often labor to cause him to reject it.

God uses his Word and Spirit as the most essential agencies through which he gives light and power to lead man in the path of life. Satan employs his spirit and error through which he designs to draw men in the broad way to death.

Every false idea of moral and divine things, presented to the mind through satanic agencies, designed to invalidate and counteract the operation of divine truth, and forced upon the heart by an evil spirit, is a temptation of Satan.

As man is an organic being, and his thoughts, purposes and emotions are produced through the medium of his organs of sense, his body must act a very important part in the department of temptation. The Creator designed that the propensities and desires of the human organism should be so controlled by divine influences, that they should harmonize with his government, and so accomplish the grand purpose of infinite love. But the deceiver, in the first great temptation, succeeded in straining man's confidence in the truthfulness of God's word to the breaking point, thus causing him to accept his lie for God's truth. Thus he yielded himself to Satan, and rejected his Creator. Satan gained this victory, in this first trial of man's strength, by misdirecting his natural physical desires for knowledge and wisdom. These he would have received through the divinely appointed channel if he had remained loyal to his God. But as he voluntarily submitted to God's enemy, the Creator let him fall from his high position, where he could control his fleshly desires, into a helpless condition, where all organic passions are evil, and that continually.

In writing upon this, Paul said, "I see another law in my members [body], warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin which is in my members. . . . So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God; but with the flesh the law of sin." Romans 7: 23-25. The flesh—the organic members—is the channel through which temptation and sin comes to our fallen race. Again Paul says, "They that are after [controlled by] the flesh, do mind [are engrossed with] the things of the flesh; but they that are after the spirit, the things of the Spirit." Romans 8: 5.

Temptation to sin must come through the passions or lusts of the flesh; for every sin is an action of the bodily organs, produced by their emotions. The desire to do wickedly may originate in an inspiration of an evil spirit, or by the sight of the eye, or hearing of the ear. James expressed this truth when he said "Every man is tempted, when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed; then when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin; and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death." Jas. 1: 14-15.

The constitutional desires of the flesh are all evil, when measured by the divine standard, for we, as the offspring of Adam, receive his fallen physical nature; and as he in the fall followed Satan instead of God, so we, being fallen with him, naturally follow evil instead of good. Therefore in the "flesh dwelleth no good thing," no good desires, no holy purposes.

This constitutional sinfulness is called "the old man;" that is, it is Adam's sinful nature transmitted to his posterity. As long as we are under the control of the will and desires of the flesh, we are under the government of the old man—Adam—and therefore under Satan, for Adam became loyal to him. But as Adam lost his place of harmony with God by losing his loyalty to him, Christ steps into his place before he fell, and proved his loyalty in temptation, and so became the "second man"—the "new man"—"the Lord (Ruler of earth) from heaven."

When we accept Christ as our Head, we put on the new man; that is, we exalt Christ as our Lord (Ruler), and put off the old man—Adam—as the ruling nature; for "they that are Christ's have crucified the flesh, with the affections and lusts." The apostle could not mean that the flesh was crucified so that it had no "affections and lusts," for then there could be no temptation; but he meant that Christ by his Spirit so controlled those passions, that the flesh was dead as to the gratification of the lusts in acts of sin. Christ plainly taught this when he said "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me." Luke 9: 23. To deny self is to act contrary to our natural propensities or fleshly desires; and this is to be done "daily," while we are christians, or following Christ.

It is plain therefore that the believers body, after his regeneration, is not dead as to its former propensities and lusts, for then there could be no temptations; but that it is dead as to sinful acts, for he receives divine power to subdue and control the fleshly lust, and this is his victory over the flesh and Satan, through Christ and the Spirit. The old man is put off when we cease to be ruled by our carnal nature, prompted by Satan, and we put on the new man when we commence to be governed by the divine nature, strengthened by Christ's Spirit. This constitutes a warfare between the two natures, and the opposition we feel to the teachings of Christ and the divine nature is our temptation, and must continue as long as the flesh wars against the Spirit. Paul says, "Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfill the lust of the flesh; for the flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh; and these are contrary the one to the other; so that ye cannot do the things that ye would." Gal. 5: 16-17. The passage proves that those who walk after the Spirit have lust of the flesh, which they do not fulfill. Again, it proves that a man's flesh, who experiences the influence of the Spirit, "lusteth against the Spirit" so that he experiences the fact that they are "contrary, the one to the other." James corroborates this testimony when he says, "If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able to bridle the whole body." He uses the figure of bridling a horse to control him. A dead horse, which has no opposing will or power, needs no bridle, neither has a man's body any need of divine restraint when it has no rebellious will or lust to bring into captivity to the law of Christ.

A man cannot be tempted to steal who has no lust for his neighbor's goods; neither can a man be tempted to drunkenness when he has no desire for strong drink. Paul was a holy, sanctified man, yet he had a constant warfare with his body. He said "So fight I, not as one that beateth the air; but I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection (to the Spirit); lest that by any means (any influence of the flesh), when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway." 1 Cor. 9: 26.

It is true, we can gain such a victory over Satan and the flesh, that we may feel by times but little opposition, comparatively, from either, but be assured both are still at war with Christ and his Spirit, and your battle for victory over temptation will not cease until your probation is ended. Let him who thinketh he standeth, because he will have no more lusts of the flesh to tempt him, take heed lest he fall. The sweet assurance falls from the lips of Jesus—"He that shall endure unto the end the same shall be saved." Again the echo sounds from the throne—"I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." Cheer up, tempted pilgrim, for the night of thy fearful conflict is nearly passed; the morning of thy sweet and eternal rest from trial is dawning. Then let the hurricane roar, and thy tempest-driven bark creak at every joint; He who has fought thy battles for thee smiles at the storm, and stoops to bear thee above the reach of the threatening tempest. TO THE BOARD OF MANAGERS OF THE A. A. M. SOCIETY.

Dear Brethren:—In presenting this, my last report of this Mission for the present conference year, I would first of all record my devout thanksgiving to Almighty God for his special goodness to me in giving me health and strength, so that I have been able to preach twice every Sabbath through the year, at different churches and places, besides riding from fifteen to twenty miles through the winter's cold and summer's suns. Notwithstanding my poor wife's wasting disease (being reduced to a mere skeleton), yet I have not lost an appointment during the year on her account, though I have not felt it duty to go a great distance from home, so as to be away more than a night or two at a time.

Brethren and sisters in the Lord, do not cease to pray for her, that she may be restored to health once more. She told me this morning that she had more hope of recovering now than she had at this time last year.

There is evidently an increasing desire throughout this entire section to hear and investigate the truths we, as a people, hold and proclaim. At the Advent Chapel, at Bro. Woodham's, there is quite a fresh impulse given to affairs. Our Methodist neighbors, at a large church near by, have been splitting up a good deal, and the result is a number of them attend now regularly at our church, and have brought their children with them to our Sunday school, which is now in a most flourishing condition. But, dear brethren, we want more S. S. books, more of Bro. Goodrich's Catechism, and the Bible Question Book, by Bro. Carpenter. The Chapel down at Pine Grove has a school, but want books; and the one at Andrews' Mills would have one in operation, but for the want of books, and they are not able to raise the money to pay for them.

Now, having stated the condition of our Sunday schools, may we not reasonably and religiously hope and believe that the blessed Jesus, who is the head of his church, will put it in the heart of some one of his dear followers to send to the Board money enough to supply the wants of our poor children? The Mission I regard in a more healthy condition than at any former period of its existence. God has wonderfully blest the means bestowed in its establishment and perpetuity. We still commend it to the fostering care of Almighty God, and the prayerful consideration of all those who are looking and praying for the everlasting kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ to come speedily with power and great glory. Amen.

I receive regularly the World's Crisis, the Advent Times, the Christian and Little Christian, the Bible Banner, the Biblical Messenger, the Herald of Life, and Union in Christ. God bless you all, my dear ones, for these precious treasures. I read them, and am profited by them; and then others read them and they are blessed; so we will all shout and praise God together before long.

Our State seems to be under some special judgment. All sorts of crimes are constantly committed; fires are burning everywhere. Timmonsville, a town in this county, on the R. R., was partly consumed a short time ago; and last week Darlington, our county town, was visited by a fire that burned fourteen stores, with their contents; so that many families are without shelter, and the worst of all is, we are on the border of a famine. Indeed, I saw in a secular paper the other day, where several persons have already died of starvation. God pity us, for these be the days of vengeance. Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly, is my prayer. Brethren, remember me and mine.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Lydia, S. C. PEYTON G. BOWMAN.

Correspondence.

From Sr. A. S. Barney.

Dear Editors:—Since I last wrote, our new house of worship has been completed, and we met for the first time within its walls last Sabbath, to dedicate it to the worship of Almighty God. Services were conducted by Bro. A. Durfee, assisted by Brn. E. B. Card and A. Warner. Bro. Durfee preached an excellent discourse from 2 Chron. 6: 18; in the afternoon from Luke 15th, on the lost sheep; and in the evening on the parable of the great supper,—Luke 14. God was with us, and blest us, and we desire to give him all the glory, for we feel it is his, when we look back a few short years, and see what he has done for this people in Natick. We remember when a few brothers and sisters met at the different dwellings and praised God. Next they rented an unfinished upper room, and we did indeed feel grateful for that place. Later, we rented a better room, and then God raised up a man to finish the room we formerly occupied, and we again removed to it. It was a nice little room, but very uncomfortable, on account of its lowness. We spent many precious hours there, which will never be forgotten. Now we have a nice, neat, and, to us, beautiful room, in which to worship our God.

So we feel that he has indeed been with us, and given to us faithful ones, through whom he has worked to bring about this great blessing to this people. We owe much to our dear brother E. B. Card, who has labored long and faithfully with this church. Under his labors, they have grown from some twelve or thirteen to an organized church of eighty-four members. Although we as a people are still despised by many of the professed church, yet we do feel that Jesus loves us; and while we thus feel we have nothing to fear. Soon we expect to see our King in all his beauty, and be made like him; and then we shall greet the dear ones we have laid away in mother earth, and turn from mourning and sighing to rest, sweet rest. Pray for us, dear brethren and sisters, that we may live up to the standard, be loving the appearing of our blessed Savior, and so be saved at his coming.

Natick, R. I., May 30th, 1876.

From Sr. M. L. Durand.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:—Having some business with the office, I thought a few lines of greeting might not be unacceptable to the dear household of faith scattered abroad, but looking for, and like Daniel praying with their faces toward home. My health has been very poor most of the last fall and winter, but the most painful and trying ill health has been a severe attack of inflammatory rheumatism in my right hand and arm, making me quite helpless for four weeks; and as I was not born to be an idler, I did wait to get well and strong before I began using it, and writing is especially a severe tax upon the joints and cords of my hand and wrist; but as the warm weather comes, I hope for improvement in every respect. I have felt the effects of the fearful shock to my nervous system from the accident when my left arm was broken, my side and shoulder so badly injured, very much more during the past two years than I did the first three (it will be five years in July since that occurred); and have no encouragement or prospect of being anything but an invalid, until I fall asleep or "put on immortality."

I have here at home about as much gospel work as I have had strength to do, in leading the Union religious services every Sunday afternoon, held under the auspices of the Temperance women and workers of this village, and have seen some blessed results of this labor. I can talk of the coming of the judgment day, and the indications of its nearness, without any feeling of repulse; on the contrary, a deep solemnity always pervades the meetings, and others catch the inspiration, and I am looking for the time to come when the order shall be heard to "break the pitcher," and give the well-kept lamp of the sure prophetic word a chance to give special, as well as general light, more emphatically than at present; but I will say, my honest convictions are that it will not be done by help from any Adventists now living here. I now expect, if the Lord will, to go out some, as health will permit, and may take a trip east before campmeeting, or perhaps remain a little while afterwards. Many letters from dear friends remain unanswered, but I hope to hear from them again, accepting this as meeting all arrearages in that respect. The late news from the great Consumptive at Rome, and the gaunt Dyspeptic of Constantinople, encourages me to subscribe myself your sister looking for speedy redemption.

Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

From Bro. A. S. Burnham.

Dear Brn.:—I feel very grateful for the Pilgrims given me, also the small books. They have given delight, and I trust profit to many a little Irish, colored, or American child. God has opened the way so that I have given ten thousand papers in Haverhill, Lawrence, Groveland, Hamilton, Essex, Wakefield and Bradford, Mass.; Newton, Newcastle, Portsmouth, Kingston and Plaistow, N. H., and in the State of Florida. The colored people have sent them over the South. I have also given one hundred and fifty bound books, one hundred and fifty Bibles and Testaments, five hundred pounds of meat, seven hundred loaves of bread, seventy pairs of boots and shoes, and thirty dollars in money. To the Lord be all the glory. He has stirred up the hearts of people to give to the needy. If any one desires to be happy, let him engage in this work.

I meet with some opposition from the Irish roughs, who attempted to take my papers from me and tear them up. I have been guarded by the police sometimes. I see some strange sights. A widow asked me to go and see her son in Boston. He had not been to see his mother for years. I found him in a cellar on Washington St., tending bar; and young men were shaking dice on the counter. He offered me the choicest liquors. He told me he had $25 a week, but I did not envy him his place. He drank three times in the half hour I was there. My heart was sad to think that one whom I had known from a child had sunk so low, and will soon fill a drunkard's grave, and when the Lord comes meet a drunkard's doom.

Another young man was summoned to his mother's dying bed. He did not reach home before she died. His agony was terrible to witness. We had long ago given up all hopes of human power to turn him from his life of sin. He said his mother would not worry about him any more. We hope God may use this means to turn him from his terrible life. I found a very interesting Irish girl, to whom I had given books and papers. Her brother of fifteen is in prison for setting fire to a building. One night I found her mother lying drunk in one part of the house, and another woman lying drunk against the door, so that the girl could not get into the house.

Haverhill, Mass., May 20th, 1876.

BRO. CHARLES CARMAN, Hamburg, Iowa, writes May 20th, 1876:—We are gaining strength in the West. Bro. Deyo was here last March, and baptized several. We now have preaching every Lord's day, and prayer-meeting once a week."

Obituaries.

WHITFORD. Our aged and venerable brother in Jesus, and Father in Israel, William Whitford, fell asleep at the residence of his son, Dea. G. B. Whitford, Addison, Vt., May 11th, 1876.

He was born Aug. 14th, 1781, married Dec. 25th, 1800, settled in Addison 1802, was a Baptist from 1810 and onward. In 1833, when the stars fell, and Eld. Miller's first book was printed at Brandon, he took his lamp and went forth to meet the Bridegroom, and since the 1843 movement, and the erection of the Advent Chapel in 1849, has been a consistent and intelligent member of the church of Adventists in Addison. His great age, nearly 95, his rare honesty and integrity, his patriarchal demeanor, his long residence (74 years) in one town on one farm, together with his very extensive connection with respectable families, makes his death to form an epoch of interest. He has had born to him ten children, sixty-seven grand-children, fifty-one great grand-children, and it is believed, seven great, great, grand-children. Total, one hundred and thirty-five posterity.

He did not know the writer on visiting his bedside April 23rd; but when asked if he knew Jesus, he presently burst into tears, and began to tell how years ago the Lord forgave his sins. Among his latest ejaculations were the words—"Come, Lord, and come quickly." Assisted by Rev. Mr. Nott and Bro. H. B. Quimby, I officiated at his funeral on the 15th, preaching from the text he himself full ten years ago selected, viz., Psalms 31: 6. He died in strong, full faith of speedy redemption at "That last advent, long desired." D. T. T.

ABBOTT. At Haverhill, N. H., May 6th, 1876, of consumption, Sr. Hannah Abbott, wife of Bro. Thomas Abbott, in the eighty-sixth year of her age.

She gave her heart to God and was baptized sixty years ago, and has lived a devout christian ever since. She was a diligent Bible student, and in her younger days frequently held meetings and expounded the word of God. Her mind was perfectly clear, and her hope firm to the last, and she died with the praises of God on her tongue. Although a believer in the conscious happiness of the spirit in the intermediate state, she was a firm believer in the near coming of Christ, and the resurrection of the body to immortality and glory. Sr. Abbott leaves a husband and two daughters to mourn, but not without hope, either in their own case or that of the dear departed. May God give them grace and strength for all remaining conflicts, and a portion with the redeemed.
I. H. SHIPMAN.

STEVENS. In Garnette, Anderson Co., Kansas, Curtis Stevens, brother of Eld. C. C. Stevens, formerly of Compton, P. Q., aged fifty-six years.

He lived and died a christian, and sleeps in Cherry Mound, and will until the great Life-Giver shall appear, and then with all the ransomed host will have an endless life.

SWEETSER. In Saco, Me., May 3rd, 1876, Bro. James Sweetser, aged forty-five years, eight months and twenty days.

Our dear brother was a most zealous christian, ever ready to work for the Master, but he now sleeps in Jesus. May the grace of God sustain our sister and the fatherless children in their affliction. Funeral services were held in Biddeford chapel, where we endeavored to administer the word to a crowded house.
WM. C. STEWART.

BROWNSON. In Hinesburgh, Vt., April 3d, 1876, Nancy M., wife of Eli F. Brownson, aged forty-four years and eleven months.

She was a faithful wife, a loving mother, and an earnest christian worker; and while her own family mourn deeply her loss, the little church in Hinesburgh, of which she was a member, feel that they have been bereft of one of their brightest ornaments. May the grace of God be found sufficient to enable the mourning friends to heed her dying counsel to meet her when she shall rise from the grave. WM. C. STEWART.

STEPHENS. In Saco, Me., May 27th, 1876, Sarah A., wife of Colver Stephens, and daughter of Joshua and Edith Emery, aged sixteen years, six months and twelve days.

The subject of this notice gave evidence that her trust was in the strong arm of Jehovah. May the blessing of God rest upon the husband and motherless child, and all the mourning friends. She was brought for burial to the home of her childhood, in Kennebunkport, where we tried to comfort the numerous friends.
WM. C. STEWART.

WORMWOOD. In Groton, Vt., April 5th, 1876, of consumption, Evesta, wife of Dan. Wormwood, aged forty years.

She leaves a husband, two daughters, mother, and other relatives, to mourn their loss. Our sister sought the Lord quite a number of years ago, and died in hope of eternal life when Jesus comes. She was beloved by all her friends, and she now sleeps, but not forever. May the blessing of God rest upon the mourning friends, especially upon the companion and little daughters. Words of comfort by the writer, from 1 Cor. 15: 25. JOHN H. EVANS.

MOSES. Fell asleep in Jesus, at Warren Summit, N. H., May 3d, 1876, of consumption, Bro. Jonathan Moses, aged thirty-two years.

The enemy has taken from our number one that was loved and respected by all who knew him. He was a great sufferer, but bore it with christian patience, rejoicing in hope of the glory that awaited him on the other shore. Sermon by the writer, from words selected by the deceased, found in 1 Thess. 5: 9, 10. G. M. LITTLE.

LONDON, June 1. A Berlin despatch to the Times reports that Moukhtar Pasha is about to undertake another expedition to Niscic with 20,000 men. A large force of insurgents awaits him. Six thousand Bulgarians who have been armed from Servian arsenals are reported as approaching the Turkish camp at Niscic.

The Bosnian insurgent leader, Golub, has burned the Turkish tower of Salal, and massacred five hundred inhabitants, and the insurgent leader, Marnovitch, has fired the village of Klis and killed 120 Turks. A despatch dated Giurgevo, Wallachia, June 1st, says a massacre is reported in Trebizond. No particulars have been allowed to transpire in Constantinople. The correspondent of the Daily Telegraph at Paris says, it is now a confirmed fact that the Porte consents to negotiate with the insurgents during an armistice, on condition that Austria shall not occupy Herzegovina or Bosnia.

A despatch from Pesth states that Prince Gortschakoff has telegraphed to Belgrade, warning Prince Milan in the name of the Czar against any rash ventures. The Town Council of Belgrade have issued a proclamation asking the citizens to subscribe to the national loan. They declare the loan is raised to free all persons of Servian descent from foreign yoke.

The Berlin correspondent of the Times asserts that since the deposition of the Sultan, the European powers have been notified of the Porte's positive refusal to approve any propositions contained in the Berlin memorandum. A despatch from Constantinople states that the ceremonies of girding Murad Effendi, the new Sultan, with the sword of Osman, which is equivalent to a coronation, is postponed till next week. A despatch from Berlin says it is stated that Servia refuses to recognize the new Sultan of Turkey on the ground of his irregular accession to the throne, and declines to pay her tribute, two installments of which is in arrears. The same despatch says Bismarck will accompany the Emperor William to Ems, where a fresh conference will be held between Bismarck, Gortschakoff and Count Karoly, the Australian Ambassador at Berlin.

LONDON, June 1. The fastest despatch steamer in the English navy is being got ready to take orders to the Mediterranean. The purport of these orders has not been public.

June 2. It is rumored that an alliance has been concluded between Great Britain, Austria and Italy. This will unite those three countries on the Eastern question, and probably aid in removing the existing complications on the subject between Germany, Russia and England.

Ten English regiments have been ordered by the Government to be ready to embark for Malta at a moment's notice.

LONDON, June 4. The Eastern imbroglio is the all absorbing topic. England's Eastern policy seems becoming gradually bellicose. At no period since the beginning of the Herzegovinian troubles has the situation been so serious and threatening. This condition of affairs is caused mainly by the mutual jealousy of England and Russia. It is generally accepted as a fact that the dethronement of the Sultan was not simply the dethronement of Abdul Aziz, but of Russian influence in Constantinople. Russian journals charge England with being at the bottom of the Turkish revolution. It is believed that England was aware of what was approaching in Constantinople. Rumors of General Ignatieff's recall from his post as Russian Ambassador in Constantinople are not corroborated. It is not likely that Russia will give up the game. Despite England's present attitude Russia cannot afford to pocket defeat on the Sclavonian question. England's attitude in Constantinople can only hasten the progress of events in the tributary provinces of the Turkish Empire. Servia is pushing forward troops to the frontier. The Herzegovinians are determined not to lay down their arms on account of the change of occupant of the Ottoman throne, and will not rest until they gain their independence.

A despatch received here from Constantinople to-night, states that the ex-Sultan of Turkey, Abdul Aziz, has committed suicide, and that considerable excitement prevails in that city.

$10,000,000 of the ex-Sultan's treasure have been seized.

BERLIN, June 4. Advices from the East say Prince Charles of Roumania and Prince Milan of Servia propose to issue a joint declaration of independence, owing to the irregular accession of the Sultan to the throne. The Prince of Montenegro is only waiting the action of the Sclavonic provinces. Russia is preparing her fleet at Cronstadt. England has sent Admiral Drummond to the East with orders to prevent the forcing of the Dardanelles. Unfinished iron clads are being completed with great haste; regiments are under orders to be ready to start at a moment's notice. The insurgents are unwilling to accept Prince Charles of Roumania or Prince Milan of Servia as their sovereign, and have entertained a project of inviting the Duke of Edinburgh, thus through himself and his wife, the Princess Marie Alexandrovia, uniting English and Russian interests.

Let every church where there is no minister located, and every church that wishes occasional or regular preaching, send delegates. If you cannot send Brn. as delegates, send sisters.

Brn. and Srs. scattered abroad, who want a tent or grove meeting in your vicinity, come to this annual meeting, and tell what you want, and what you can do to support one. Our Savior will soon appear, and our work of saving the perishing will soon be past, and our efforts should be increased and untiring until he comes. We hope to see many of the dear saints at this feast, who have not been able to meet with us for a long time. Come praying, in the Spirit, to the first meeting. Come all. Campmeeting.

The annual campmeeting of the Christian Mission Association of Iowa will be held at the old place of meeting, near New Hartford, Iowa, commencing June 23d, 1876, and holding over two Sundays. The lease expires the present year, and hence we desire this meeting to be the best ever enjoyed there. Let every brother and sister contribute to the interest of the meeting by their presence and help. Do not allow worldly cares to keep you away, but come to one more reunion of the children of God, and unite with them in working for the salvation of souls. Every one should be personally interested, and do all that lies in his power to make it a success and blessing to many. Let all who possibly can bring family tents, appropriate and comfortable clothing, and bedding. Arrangements will be made to accommodate those who desire to board on the ground, and every provision made for your comfort and convenience. It is not known what ministerial help will be secured, but we expect to have interesting speakers, who will edify and instruct all who come. E. A. MARSH, Sec.

ANNUAL CONFERENCE.—The annual meeting of the Christian Conference will be held in connection with the Christian Mission Campmeeting, June 26th, 1876. It is desired that all the members be present on that day, as circumstances make it absolutely necessary. A full representation of the various churches should be sent, and delegates elected that will do their duty by co-operating with the members of the conference. Brethren in the ministry, come, and confer together. Let no trivial cause prevent you from attending it. The cause is in a critical condition. We need your help. E. A. MARSH, Sec.

That Book.

Four hundred more subscribers wanted for "Baptism and Rantism," before I can safely venture to publish the book. Orders are coming in slowly, too slowly to insure success, and I would esteem it a favor if all the brethren and sisters, who think they would buy the book if out, would interest themselves to order it at once; and if some brother in each place would favor me by taking other names to send with his own, I would be thankful to him. I believe the book is needed as a standard work among us, covering the ground not yet covered by any book ever published, and yet holding the old ground which wh have occupied as a people for years, of only "one" true baptism; the new ground being mainly of rantism, or the true use and meaning of sprinkling according to the New Testament. Dear brethren, please assist about this matter. The highest cost of the book in paper will not exceed fifty cents. Please send on your orders rapidly to Richmond, P. Q., that I may have the assurance that I can safely send the manuscript to the press.
L. C. MCKINSTRY.

We have need to gird up anew, to fortify our powers mightily, by giving heed to the sure word of prophecy, and exhorting one another to a waiting readiness for the return of the Master. It is expected that Bro. J. G. Smith, of Farmington, N. H., will be present to assist in gospel labor, as also Bro. F. A. Baker, with other brethren in the ministry. ISRAEL DAMMAN.

THE LAKE VIEW CAMPMEETING, Magog, P. Q., Canada, will be held, as per vote of Conference, immediately after the Alton Bay meeting. Time hereafter definitely given. Let those who have promised to build cottages be in time with their preparations. Lots free, and all welcome.

LONDON, May 30. A despatch from Madrid says a Protestant school in the Province of Pontevedra has been closed by order of the Minister of Justice at the request of the Papal authorities.

May 31. Servia, Bosnia, and Herzegovina, acting in the instigation of Russia, will refuse to recognize the authority of the new Sultan, Murad Effendi, and will shortly proclaim their entire independence of Turkey.

PARIS, May 31. The Government with Russia is urging the Porte to surrender Bosnia and Herzegovina and to grant them the privileges of independent States. The alliance between the three powers is regarded as broken.

VIENNA, May 21. The Servian government has issued a decree closing all schools and courts of law during the impending war. Prince Milan has been constituted Generalissimo of the army, and General Vanzach chief of staff.

LONDON, June 1. A Berlin despatch to the Times reports that Moukhtar Pasha is about to undertake another expedition to Niscic with 20,000 men. A large force of insurgents awaits him. Six thousand Bulgarians who have been armed from Servian arsenals are reported as approaching the Turkish camp at Niscic.

The Bosnian insurgent leader, Golub, has burned the Turkish tower of Salal, and massacred five hundred inhabitants, and the insurgent leader, Marinovitch, has fired the village of Klis and killed 120 Turks. A despatch dated Giurgevo, Wallachia, June 1st, says a massacre is reported in Trebizond. No particulars have been allowed to transpire in Constantinople. The correspondent of the Daily Telegraph at Paris says, it is now a confirmed fact that the Porte consents to negotiate with the insurgents during an armistice, on condition that Austria shall not occupy Herzegovina or Bosnia.

A despatch from Pesth states that Prince Gortschakoff has telegraphed to Belgrade, warning Prince Milan in the name of the Czar against any rash ventures. The Town Council of Belgrade have issued a proclamation asking the citizens to subscribe to the national loan. They declare the loan is raised to free all persons of Servian descent from foreign yoke.

The Berlin correspondent of the Times asserts that since the deposition of the Sultan, the European powers have been notified of the Porte's positive refusal to approve any propositions contained in the Berlin memorandum. A despatch from Constantinople states that the ceremonies of girding Murad Effendi, the new Sultan, with the sword of Osman, which is equivalent to a coronation, is postponed till next week. A despatch from Berlin says it is stated that Servia refuses to recognize the new Sultan of Turkey on the ground of his irregular accession to the throne, and declines to pay her tribute, two installments of which is in arrears. The same despatch says Bismarck will accompany the Emperor William to Ems, where a fresh conference will be held between Bismarck, Gortschakoff and Count Karoly, the Australian Ambassador at Berlin.

LONDON, June 1. The fastest despatch steamer in the English navy is being got ready to take orders to the Mediterranean. The purport of these orders has not been public.

June 2. It is rumored that an alliance has been concluded between Great Britain, Austria and Italy. This will unite those three countries on the Eastern question, and probably aid in removing the existing complications on the subject between Germany, Russia and England.

Ten English regiments have been ordered by the Government to be ready to embark for Malta at a moment's notice.

LONDON, June 4. The Eastern imbroglio is the all absorbing topic. England's Eastern policy seems becoming gradually bellicose. At no period since the beginning of the Herzegovinian troubles has the situation been so serious and threatening. This condition of affairs is caused mainly by the mutual jealousy of England and Russia. It is generally accepted as a fact that the dethronement of the Sultan was not simply the dethronement of Abdul Aziz, but of Russian influence in Constantinople. Russian journals charge England with being at the bottom of the Turkish revolution. It is believed that England was aware of what was approaching in Constantinople. Rumors of General Ignatieff's recall from his post as Russian Ambassador in Constantinople are not corroborated. It is not likely that Russia will give up the game. Despite England's present attitude Russia cannot afford to pocket defeat on the Sclavonian question. England's attitude in Constantinople can only hasten the progress of events in the tributary provinces of the Turkish Empire. Servia is pushing forward troops to the frontier. The Herzegovinians are determined not to lay down their arms on account of the change of occupant of the Ottoman throne, and will not rest until they gain their independence.

A despatch received here from Constantinople to-night, states that the ex-Sultan of Turkey, Abdul Aziz, has committed suicide, and that considerable excitement prevails in that city.

$10,000,000 of the ex-Sultan's treasure have been seized.

BERLIN, June 4. Advices from the East say Prince Charles of Roumania and Prince Milan of Servia propose to issue a joint declaration of independence, owing to the irregular accession of the Sultan to the throne. The Prince of Montenegro is only waiting the action of the Sclavonic provinces. Russia is preparing her fleet at Cronstadt. England has sent Admiral Drummond to the East with orders to prevent the forcing of the Dardanelles. Unfinished iron clads are being completed with great haste; regiments are under orders to be ready to start at a moment's notice. The insurgents are unwilling to accept Prince Charles of Roumania or Prince Milan of Servia as their sovereign, and have entertained a project of inviting the Duke of Edinburgh, thus through himself and his wife, the Princess Marie Alexandronvia, uniting English and Russian interests.

State Advent Christian Conference will be held with the church at Springwater, Livingston Co., commencing on Thursday evening, June 8th, and continue over the following Sabbath. Springwater is on the New York and Erie R. R., about fifty miles south from Rochester. We trust every minister in the Conference will be present at the annual gathering, and that they will encourage the churches to send their full number of delegates and quarterly collections to help carry forward the cause of truth. Let every church where there is no minister located, and every church that wishes occasional or regular preaching, send delegates. If you cannot send Brn. as delegates, send sisters.

Brn. and Srs. scattered abroad, who want a tent or grove meeting in your vicinity, come to this annual meeting, and tell what you want, and what you can do to support one. Our Savior will soon appear, and our work of saving the perishing will soon be past, and our efforts should be increased and untiring until he comes. We hope to see many of the dear saints at this feast, who have not been able to meet with us for a long time. Come praying, in the Spirit, to the first meeting. Come all. Campmeeting.

The annual campmeeting of the Christian Mission Association of Iowa will be held at the old place of meeting, near New Hartford, Iowa, commencing June 23d, 1876, and holding over two Sundays. The lease expires the present year, and hence we desire this meeting to be the best ever enjoyed there. Let every brother and sister contribute to the interest of the meeting by their presence and help. Do not allow worldly cares to keep you away, but come to one more reunion of the children of God, and unite with them in working for the salvation of souls. Every one should be personally interested, and do all that lies in his power to make it a success and blessing to many. Let all who possibly can bring family tents, appropriate and comfortable clothing, and bedding. Arrangements will be made to accommodate those who desire to board on the ground, and every provision made for your comfort and convenience. It is not known what ministerial help will be secured, but we expect to have interesting speakers, who will edify and instruct all who come. E. A. MARSH, Sec.

ANNUAL CONFERENCE.—The annual meeting of the Christian Conference will be held in connection with the Christian Mission Campmeeting, June 26th, 1876. It is desired that all the members be present on that day, as circumstances make it absolutely necessary. A full representation of the various churches should be sent, and delegates elected that will do their duty by co-operating with the members of the conference. Brethren in the ministry, come, and confer together. Let no trivial cause prevent you from attending it. The cause is in a critical condition. We need your help. E. A. MARSH, Sec.

That Book.

Four hundred more subscribers wanted for "Baptism and Rantism," before I can safely venture to publish the book. Orders are coming in slowly, too slowly to insure success, and I would esteem it a favor if all the brethren and sisters, who think they would buy the book if out, would interest themselves to order it at once; and if some brother in each place would favor me by taking other names to send with his own, I would be thankful to him. I believe the book is needed as a standard work among us, covering the ground not yet covered by any book ever published, and yet holding the old ground which wh have occupied as a people for years, of only "one" true baptism; the new ground being mainly of rantism, or the true use and meaning of sprinkling according to the New Testament. Dear brethren, please assist about this matter. The highest cost of the book in paper will not exceed fifty cents. Please send on your orders rapidly to Richmond, P. Q., that I may have the assurance that I can safely send the manuscript to the press.
L. C. MCKINSTRY.

All are invited, who love to meet in the name of the Lord, and so much the more, as they see the day approaching. We have need to gird up anew, to fortify our powers mightily, by giving heed to the sure word of prophecy, and exhorting one another to a waiting readiness for the return of the Master. It is expected that Bro. J. G. Smith, of Farmington, N. H., will be present to assist in gospel labor, as also Bro. F. A. Baker, with other brethren in the ministry. ISRAEL DAMMAN.

THE LAKE VIEW CAMPMEETING, Magog, P. Q., Canada, will be held, as per vote of Conference, immediately after the Alton Bay meeting. Time hereafter definitely given. Let those who have promised to build cottages be in time with their preparations. Lots free, and all welcome.

REST.

A. F. BROWN.

When sounds the evening call,
And shadow curtains fall,
What peaceful transport fills the weary breast,
As with the sinking sun
We turn from labor done
And welcome in the holy hours of rest.

Along each changing height
The voice of coming night
With soothing power repeats its mellow song,
And by the latest glow
Strange forms of beauty show,
That tell the approach of dreamland's happy throng.

At length, 'mid silence deep
Ascends the power of sleep,
And with the movement of his magic wand
A transitory rest
Possesses every breast,
While active life is banished from the land.

But when Aurora's eye
Looks from the eastern sky,
Night quickly passes to his western lair,
And sounds of waking life
Proclaim new toil and strife,
As peaceful sleep gives way to restless care.

The em'rald nations grow
And naught of sorrow know,
For thankless nature beams with painless light;
And every heart, shall find
At last, a refuge kind
In that silent rest—oblivion's night.

But on the thinking man,
Sin's unrelenting ban
Bestows a legacy of passion strong,
That clouds the fairest day,
And serves to drive away
Those heavenly thoughts which make of life a song.

Still, God's unchanging might
Will guard us through the night;
No present grief or sunless day to come,
Sufficient pain can bring,
To break the soaring wing
Of one whose spirit is redemption's home.

We look with vision free
Across the changing sea,
Where Christ prepares a mansion for the blest;
And death, seems but a gate
That gives for those who wait
An easy entrance to the perfect rest.

REPORT
OF THE
"Conditional Immortality" Conference.

On Monday, 15th of May, the believers and friends of the gospel proclamation that eternal life is a Divine gift, bestowed upon persons accounted worthy of the same, and denied to the impenitent and unbelieving, gathered together in Cannon Street Hotel, to fraternize one with another, and to give a distinct and emphatic testimony that the Lord Jesus is the only hope for a vital and conscious, as well as a holy and happy, eternity.

The proceedings took the form of a breakfast, followed by a public meeting.

The breakfast scene was one full of real encouragement. The large hall of the hotel, capable of seating nearly twelve hundred persons, was utilized for the same. There were three long tables running the length of the room, and at the end a cross table, at which sat the venerable chairman, General Goodwyn, accompanied by Mrs. Goodwyn. The seats were nearly all taken up, and the countenances of those assembled seemed to beam with satisfaction. Friends were recognizing friends, and many became acquainted for the first time with those of whom they had long heard, and whom for their writings and labors they had come to esteem; so that the meeting was one of thorough enjoyment to all. If there was any one in that assembly who appeared solitary, he or she certainly escaped our eye.

Among the friends present we noticed the following:—General Goodwyn (Chairman), Messrs. S. Minton, M. A.; H. Constable, M. A.; Edward White (of Hawley Road Chapel), W. Leask, D. D., B. Heard, B. A., M. W. Jones, G. A. Hayward, M. A., J. F. Tinling, M. A., J. B. Rotherham, W. Kellaway (Editor of Bible Echo), R. P. Hammond, J. Freeman, Wardlaw Scott, J. Waylen, W. Maude, H. Burnett, C. Underhill, J. J. Hobbs, H. J. Ward, J. Skelton, W. Lewis, T. Grimes, J. Aplin, H. Clarke, F. Moore, E. Haughton, M. D., W. Rowton, J. Martin, J. Smith (Wallingford), W. Ellison, Prof. Barrett (Trinity College, Dublin), N. Starkey, R. Blyth, W. Chamberlain, W. Jackson (Camberwell), C. Weale, F. Bowser, H. Davis (Liverpool), H. Foley, W. Powis, E. Burdett. Besides the above, there were many others whom we did not know personally; hence, we regret to say, we are unable to mention their names. The ladies were numerous, and added to the sociality of the gathering.

But the breakfast was the smallest attraction of the programme—the after service and the speeches being the chief. Thus as each one became satisfied, he withdrew into the smaller hall adjoining. Soon all were together in this lesser room, and it was then seen to be nearly filled. Upon the platform were—in the chair, General Goodwyn; supported on his right by Messrs. Constable and Heard; and on his left by Messrs. S. Minton, Edw. White, and W. Leask. These were afterwards joined by Mr. A. Mursell, who came in late, but not too late to receive an ovation from the meeting, and to give in his adhesion to the cause espoused.

Of the speakers and speeches it will not be necessary for us to treat at any considerable length. Mr. Minton was far beyond his usual self, his emphasis being so whole-souled as literally to inspire the audience; never did he in our hearing so powerfully proclaim the grand old truth of conditional immortality. Dr. Leask, editor of the Rainbow, was at his best in his treatment of the subject from the missionary standpoint, and, as will be seen, elicited on various occasions the approval of the audience. Mr. Edward White was, in some parts of his address, overwhelmingly grand and persuasive, and in speech acquitted himself as a man. Mr. Constable, in able and solid fashion, poured out words of true soberness that went home to the hearts of his hearers. Mr. Heard was racy and entertaining, and relieved the audience with very apt illustrations. Mr. Mursell proclaimed his courage in a few chosen words. Mr. Tinling and Mr. Starkey also added their testimony; after which the Chairman occupied the time of his audience with a speech appropriate to the occasion.

We now present to our readers the addreses that were delivered by the speakers: The Chairman (General Goodwyn) called upon Mr. Constable to offer prayer; after which he read a letter from Dr. Weymouth, expressing his regret at not being able to attend the conference, but at the same time giving cordial expression to his sympathy in the cause which it had met to promote. He then continued as follows:

My beloved friends:—When I see so many assembled to-day in this room, I cannot help thinking it is a joyful sight indeed, and a most happy augury for the success of the great undertaking we have in our hearts. I welcome you all in the name of the Lord; and trust, what I cannot help thinking, that the majority of those whom I see here must be promoters of the great truths that the Lord has laid before us in his word. We are here at the inauguration of an additional May meeting (applause). I am sure that I echo the desire of all here, that it shall be the precursor of many others of a similar character, and for a similar purpose (cheers). Those christian friends who have considered the matter, have thought that it would be attended with less formality, with less appearance of ostentation, to invite those who are like-minded with ourselves to come in this social manner to discuss those great truths that are now before us; that we might reciprocate testimony, that we might encourage and exhort one another, and that we might give assurance of good fellowship (cheers). And we have also a further object in view, which is to bring to light, and if possible to the persuasion of the christian churches, the convictions of our own hearts, that those deeds that have already been done by means of the periodical called the Rainbow, an increasingly valuable work (cheers), and those works which have been already written by several good servants of the Lord, have been written in the spirit of truth, and will pass the minutest scrutiny of the light (hear, hear). In order to carry out these two objects, I will first call upon some of the disciples of our great Master to address you upon this occasion, concerning the eternity of life as the gift of God through faith in Christ; or, as the motto of our tickets has it—"This is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son." There is no other life. I will then invite others who are deeply interested in this matter, in meekness of spirit and gentleness of heart, to give their views upon it, with the proviso that such should be strictly confined to the subject on the ticket; and that, too, irrespective of those minor differences which exist among us (hear, hear). I hope you will bear this in mind, because I intend strictly to enforce whatever authority is invested in me as chairman of this meeting. I beg now to call upon Mr. Minton to address you.

Mr. Minton, who was received with loud and prolonged cheers, then rose and said: Ladies and gentlemen, I wish first to add to the letter which the Chairman has referred to, another which I intended to put into his hands, but which I unfortunately forgot to do. It is from the Rev. G. Copeland, Vicar of St. Stephen's, Walworth, an excellent clergyman of that neighborhood, and a man who has performed prodigies of energy in the building of churches, schools, etc., in that poor district. He is entirely with us, and wishes me to say, that he would have had the greatest pleasure in being present at this meeting, but at this early hour on a Monday morning, it would be impossible for him to do so. The speaker then continued: I have been asked to make a brief statement of our main position; but the extreme difficulty of condensing within the limit of the time alloted to me, necessitates absolute silence upon a host of subsidiary questions which arise at nearly every point. That we differ among ourselves on many of these minor questions, no more disproves our foundation theory, than the differences among christians disprove Christianity, or than the differences among atheists disprove Atheism. Some believers in conditional immortality may not agree even with every part of the following statement. I profess to give only what I believe is in the main the expression of the substantial belief of those who are represented by this assembly.

The very first article of our creed is,—That God only hath immortality inherent in himself; and that all creatures are sustained in being through various outflowings of Divine energy, simply at their Creator's will. "For Thy pleasure they exist, and were created." That this was so in man's case, is shown by the first account of him in the book of Genesis. Whether that account be understood literally or figuratively makes no difference to the present argument. The tree of life was either the means of preserving man in immortal vigor, or represented his being so preserved. It was not that once eating it, would ensure his immortality, or he might have taken its fruit first, and the fruit of the forbidden tree afterwards; thereby fixing himself in an immortality of wretchedness. To be secured against death he must continue to eat of it; and that he would be allowed to do only so long as he remained obedient. If he sinned, he would forfeit his life; he did sin, and the sentence was executed upon him virtually, by debarring him from access to the tree of life. That exclusion abundantly fulfilled the warning, "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die;" inasmuch as nothing more was needed to ensure his return to the dust. That the death threatened him would be a painless one he could hardly have expected. That the prospect of it would cause him great anguish of mind, was a matter of course. But that he must have understood the death-penalty to mean entire deprivation of being is as certain as the narrative can make it. There was no hint of its being enforced to one part of his nature only,—not a hint of his being partly mortal and partly immortal; and we assert it to be utterly inconceivable if the real penalty of sin had been endless misery, that not a word was said about it; that Adam's attention should have been exclusively fixed, both before and after the fall, on such a comparatively insignificant preliminary to it as bodily death. What matter could it make to him whether his body returned to the dust or not, if his soul, without access to the tree of life, was to live forever in a state of sin and misery?

Take what view you like of man's nature, and of the effect produced upon that nature by bodily death, it seems absolutely impossible, if the slightest moral credit is to be attached to the primary record, that the death which is the wages of sin can involve the everlasting misery of any part of man's being. This is our first position; and we maintain that the whole tone and tenor, letter and spirit of Holy Scripture, from its first to its last page, does everything to confirm that position. The main purpose of revelation is to illustrate the nature and consequences of man's fall, together with the nature and consequences of Christ's salvation. On the general aspect of these subjects there are no distinctive differences between us and our brethren; but so far as we differ from them our creed is this,—we hold that the object of Christ's work is to restore to man the two things which he has lost, holiness and immortality, or eternal life; such immortality being necessary, both from the nature of the case, and from God's revealed purpose to bring all evil to an end. We further hold that the actual enjoyments of these benefits by any human being to whom the gospel comes, depends upon his acceptance of it; involving, as that does, his seeking for glory, honor, and immortality, by patient continuance in well-doing. We hold that those who, by refusing to do so, judge themselves unworthy of eternal life, remain under the original sentence of death, but liable to additional stripes in the execution of it, on account of the special guilt they have incurred through rejecting the proffered mercy; an aggravation of their punishment, which is obviously suggested by its being called "destruction," and represented, literally or figuratively, as being effected by the most terrible of all destructive agents, fire. We hold it also to be distinctly revealed, that some men will to the last—whenever that last opportunity may be supposed to occur in any particular case—receive the grace of God offered them through Christ in vain, and, consequently, perish for ever. All this is not a theory which we propound as the probable solution of some difficulty; it is not a "view" to which we lean. We regard it as the plainest of all possible truths (cheers), declared as positively as human language could declare it, and written, as with a sunbeam, upon the whole face of inspiration (cheers). There are points of detail upon which questions may be asked that we are unable to answer even to our own satisfaction, and which, probably, only the event will clear up; but as to the great principles and the main outline we have not the slightest shadow of doubt (cheers); and we deny that there is any appreciable difficulty about them whatever (hear, hear), moral or exegetical.

On the exegesis of the question, it is impossible for me now even to touch. If any one wishes to see it exhaustively treated he has only to consult that grand standard work—one of the greatest theological productions of the present day—which has lately been published by our valued friend, and my father in this faith, the Rev. Edward White (prolonged and renewed cheers). I may just say, however, that most of us would be willing to stake our whole case on the prima facie meaning of the words "life" and "death," "immortality" and "destruction." These, with their cognates, are the key-words of the controversy, occurring so frequently as to exceed tenfold all other words and expressions used together, that are employed to describe the consequences of receiving or rejecting Christ. Life or death! This is what runs through the Bible from beginning to end, and constitutes the great mass of its testimony on the question at issue.

LETTER FROM BRO. R. H. GRESHAM.

To the dear ones in Christ, I send christian greeting:—A considerable number of you have written to me of late, asking if I am sick, or what can the matter be, that I do not write oftener for the Crisis and other papers? In answer to these enquiries I will say that I rather read letters from others than to write letters for publication, and I find much else beside writing for the papers that demands my time and attention.

I am now about to leave this pleasant place, situated on Homony Creek, perhaps never to return in this life, except it may be in the providence of God, occasionally, for a day or two at a time. I have both pleasure and sadness at the thought of so soon bidding adieu to this lovely mountain retreat. I am glad in anticipation of soon going to meet loved ones whom I have not seen for many days; and I feel sad to leave the precious few in this immediate vicinity, who have gladly received the word of truth. I am satisfied that by the grace of God they are determined to strive to stand firm in all the truth they have learned, and to learn as much more as they can from the word of truth; yet they will have much opposition, many misrepresentations and buffetings to contend with; and they desire the earnest prayers of all the faithful ones in Christ, that they may stand firm and unwavering in the truth as far as they have learned it; and that they may constantly obey the injunction in the 2nd Epistle of Peter, 1: 5, 6, 7.

The opposition of certain sectarian persons is now very earnest, and even bitter, against me and against them, and they suppose that the enemies of the truth will oppose the Apostolic teaching even more earnestly and adroitly after I have departed, than they are doing now.

In order to give to you some small conception of a part of the opposition to the truth by many persons in this community, I will state a few of the misrepresentations, and wrong acts on the part of those who are blindly led by sectarian superstition. One man to whom I had given a copy of the Crisis and Bible Banner, met me in the presence of several persons, and said that the paper I had given him taught in an Editorial that a part of the New Testament reads verbatim with a part of the Mormon Bible; thus supporting, defending, and upholding Mormonism. This you are satisfied is untrue, as the Editors of the Crisis or Banner would scorn to uphold or defend Mormonism. A few weeks ago I gave an old copy of the Bible, the common English version, to a young woman, who said she was anxious to learn, and was unable to purchase a Bible. I also gave her twelve or fifteen assorted tracts on the Kingdom, and other subjects; and very soon the report went abroad that I had given her a Bible of my own make, made to suit my new fangled theory (as they call the gospel of the kingdom of God), and that it was very different from the Bible in common use.

Not many weeks ago, I sent to Joshua Curtis, Superintendent of a Methodist Sunday School, several papers, one copy each, I think, of The Christian, The Little Christian, The Bible Banner, and The Young Pilgrim. He soon requested one of his friends to say to me that the papers taught rotten doctrine, and that he had burned them.

A few months ago I was at a Baptist meeting, and before the worship commenced I was outside the chapel, talking to a few persons, and distributing tracts, when one of the deacons came up and urged the people to take all they could get of the tracts and burn them. Many kinds of evil reports are put in circulation about me, without any foundation in truth. Some say that the doctrine of the soon coming kingdom, as I teach it, is of my own invention; others, that I am only acting as a forerunner for Roman Catholicism; others that I deny the resurrection; others say that I teach that there is no soul of man; some call me an infidel; some say that I deny the operation of the Spirit of God; some say that I have taught that a man, righteous or wicked, is only a beast, and that when he dies that will be the last of him to all eternity. All of which is untrue. And I might enumerate many other of their untrue speeches about me. Failing to censure me by the word of God, they by misunderstanding, or willfully, circulate a great many kinds of untrue reports, which are calculated to stop the ears of most people to the truth which I teach. This is distressing; not on my own account, but on account of some persons who otherwise might hear the word in its purity, receive it into good and honest hearts, and finally gain an admittance into the great and glorious kingdom of God soon to be established on the land promised to Abraham and his seed.

Mine host and hostess, with whom I have boarded here, have always been polite and accommodating to me, yet I have not succeeded in causing them to fall in love with the true way that leads to the kingdom, and to walk therein.

I will leave this place with a feeling of sadness, as I have become personally attached not only to those persons who have gladly received the word of truth in the love of it, but also to other well disposed persons, who are so befogged in sectarian superstition and priestcraft, that it seems almost an impossibility for them to comprehend the truth as it is in Jesus. My heart is sad to see so many persons who are seemingly desirous to be honest with themselves and with all others, yet without Christ. While I am sad at parting with those who have gladly received the word, yet I rejoice to know that they seem determined, by the grace of God, to stand firm in all the truth they have learned, and to continue to learn as they may find time and opportunity. They will bear witness that I have striven to walk blameless during my sojourn here.

As to those preachers, and others in this neighborhood who have wilfully or ignorantly misrepresented me, and spoken evil of me and of the glorious gospel of the kingdom of God, and that without any just cause, I am truly sorry for them.

When our brethren pass through this village, I wish they may stop at the Post Office, and inquire the way to A. F. Walton's and to James D. Bartlett's. They and their families are among the precious few who are not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, and they will be glad to welcome any worthy brother or sister to their humble dwelling places.

Hereafter, my correspondents may address me at Highlands, Macon Co., North Carolina, the place of our new colony, the place for good water, delightful atmosphere, and good health, one of the most healthy and romantic spots that I know of on the globe. A few of our brethren are there now, and doing well as farmers. Many other brethren have written me that they expect to locate there soon. Should this age continue yet for several years, we expect, Providence permitting, to have a good school, and a large church there. Many brethren are writing to me about that country. I love to reply to them, but shall not remain there constantly, and will therefore suggest that they write to Mr. S. T. Kelsey, Highlands, Macon Co., N. C., and enclose ten cents for a descriptive pamphlet.

My heart is made glad by good reports from the learners of the truth at Bright's Creek, Polk Co., N. C., where I spent two months last winter. Bro. Lankford Huggins and family, and some others at that place, are working earnestly in the cause of truth. They want, and need that some one of our able preaching brethren should visit them, and sound aloud the glad tidings of the kingdom. This year will be a year of great excitement among the masses of this country, and all of us who have come into the one faith and one hope should be ever very careful to obey the injunction, to "keep ourselves unspotted from the world." That such may be the case with each one of us who have put on Christ, is the earnest prayer of your brother.

THE LOVE OF GOD.

L. C. KERR.

"We love Him because He first loved us."

The reason why we love God is here given, "because" he loved us before we loved him. What cause did God have to love us? Not any. Why then did he love us? Because "God is love." How did he exhibit this love? "God commendeth his love toward us, in that, while we were sinners, Christ died for us." How was this brought about? When man had sinned and incurred the penalty—death—God saw it and interposed, and made provision for his restoration, that he and all his posterity might avail themselves of the means of salvation and escape death.

But suppose man shall fail to make use of such means of escape, and thereby perish, does it not militate against the love of God? No, not in the least. If I see a man drowning, and throw him a rope to rescue him, and he will not take hold of it, but chooses to drown, and does drown, which of us does the blame fall on? I think I hear you say "him." Well, then, be consistent, and do not cast the blame on a God of love, if miserable man does not make use of the means of his salvation.

God's love does not manifest itself in saving the race, but in providing the means for that salvation. Then, after all, His love is not manifested in the salvation of all mankind, but in the ample provision made for all mankind.

See how large this provision is. "Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth; for I am God, and there is none else." (Isaiah 45: 22). Here the goodness and love of our God is manifested in the invitation, and not in compelling all to accept of that salvation.

"O well," says one "it is not love to create a race of beings for destruction, and therefore as he has created them he must save them." The premise and conclusion are both wrong. God did not create a race of beings purposely for destruction, and hence is not responsible for their destruction. He created man for a wise purpose (not destruction), and put before him an eternal blessing, obtainable for the low price of obedience to his commands. A perfect test of man's appreciation. He could not have put a lower price upon this greatest of all blessings. "Just simply obey my word; do what I tell you, and I will give you all the blessings you can wish for."

What servant is there, who does not obey for wages? He works with the idea that he is going to give the value for his money; but not so with man; he "cannot give to God a ransom," and thereby purchase his salvation. Paul would not admit it for a moment, but pronounced it a "gift," where he said, "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life." (Romans 6: 23). This gift is bestowed upon God's creatures by virtue of obedience to him. Could you ask anything more of him? Surely if a child will not obey its parent, it cannot show a greater mark of disrespect and disregard for that parent. While he persists in rebelling against him, does he not merit his disapproval? So it is with the relation we bear to God. If we disobey him we thereby manifest our disregard of him. And such a disregard is the greatest insult we can offer him. Disobedience to the Great I AM! Disloyalty to such a Lord is the greatest offence possible.

When man does not obey his Maker, he is simply placed back in his original condition. Consigned to the elements from which he came. "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." (Gen. 3: 19). And this shows the love of God fully, to save those who are fit to live, and those who are not, to let them die.

BAPTISMS OF THE HOLY GHOST.

To the honor of God alone I will tell a little of my own experience in this matter. I was powerfully converted on the morning of the 10th of October. In the evening of the same day, and on the morning of the following day, I received overwhelming baptisms of the Holy Ghost, that went through me, as it seemed to me, body and soul. I immediately found myself endued with such power from on high that a few words dropped here and there to individuals were the means of their immediate conversion.

My words seemed to fasten like barbed arrows in the souls of men. They cut like a sword. They broke the heart like a hammer. Multitudes can attest to this. Oftentimes a word dropped, without my remembering it, would fasten conviction, and often result in almost immediate conversion. Sometimes I would find myself in a great measure, empty of this power. I would go out and visit, and find that I made no saving impression. I would exhort and pray, with the same result. I would then set apart a day for private fasting and prayer, fearing that this power had departed from me, and would inquire anxiously after the reason of this apparent emptiness. After humbling myself, and crying out for help, the power would return upon me with all its freshness. This has been the experience of my life.

I could fill a volume with the history of my own experience and observation with respect to this power from on high. It is a fact of consciousness and of observation, but a great mystery. I have said that sometimes a look has in it the power of God. I have often witnessed this. Let the following fact illustrate it: I once preached for the first time in a manufacturing village. The next morning I went into a manufacturing establishment to view its operations. As I passed into the weaving department, I beheld a great company of young women, some of whom, I observed, were looking at me, and then at each other, in a manner that indicated a trifling spirit, and that they knew me. I, however, knew none of them. As I approached nearer to those who had recognized me, they seemed to increase in their manifestations of lightness of mind. Their levity made a peculiar impression upon me; I felt it to my very heart. I stopped short and looked at them, I know not how, as my whole mind was absorbed with the sense of their guilt and danger. As I settled my countenance upon them, I observed that one of them became very much agitated. A thread broke. She attempted to mend it, but her hands trembled in such a manner that she could not do it. I immediately observed that the sensation was spreading, and had become universal among that class of triflers. I looked steadily at them, until one after another gave up and paid no more attention to their looms. They fell on their knees, and the influence spread throughout the room. I had not spoken a word, and the noise of the looms would have prevented my being heard if I had. In a few minutes all work was abandoned, and tears and lamentations filled the room. At this moment the owner of the factory, who was himself an unconverted man, came in, accompanied, I believe, by the superintendent, who was a professed christian. When the owner saw the state of things, he said to the superintendent: "Stop the mill." What he saw seemed to pierce him to the heart. "It is more important," he hurriedly remarked, "that these souls should be saved than that this mill should run." As soon as the noise of the machinery had ceased, the owner inquired: "What shall we do? We must have a place to meet, where we can receive instruction." The superintendent replied: "The mule room will do." The mules were run up out of the way, and all of the hands were notified to assemble in that room. We had a marvelous meeting. I prayed with them, and gave them such instructions as at the time they could bear. The word was with power. Many expressed hope that day; and within a few days, as I was informed, nearly every hand in that great establishment, together with the owner, had hope in Christ.

This power is a great marvel. I have many times seen people unable to endure the word. The most simple and ordinary statements would cut men off from their seats like a sword; would take away their bodily strength, and render them almost as helpless as dead men. Several times it has been true in my experience that I could not raise my voice, or say anything in prayer or exhortation, except in the mildest manner, without entirely overcoming those that were present. This was not because I was preaching terror to the people; but the sweetest sounds of the gospel would overcome them. This power seems sometimes to pervade the atmosphere of one who is highly charged with it. Many times great numbers of persons in a community will be clothed with this power when the very atmosphere of the whole place seems to be charged with the life of God. Strangers coming into it, and passing through the place, will be instantly smitten with conviction of sin, and in many instances converted to Christ. When christians humble themselves, and consecrate their all afresh to Christ, and ask for this power, they will often receive such a baptism that they will be instrumental in converting more souls in one day than in all their life-time before. While christians remain humble enough to retain this power, the work of conversion will go on till whole communities and regions of country are converted to Christ. The same is true of ministers. But this article is long enough. If you will allow me, I have more to say upon this subject.—Pres. C. G. Finney.

POSITIVE PREACHING.

In these days, when there are so many conflicting opinions in every department of thought, the almost universal demand is: "Be positive in expressing what you believe." It will not do for a man to pursue the "Artful Dodger," to balance himself upon the tight-rope of shrewd evasion, and endeavor to make men believe that he agrees with no one in particular. Such a policy may be quite successful for a time, but, in the end, it must inevitably fail; for people do "want to know, you know," despite all the scientific and theological "Circumlocution Offices" in the world; and if they are not speedily gratified in this respect, they will tell Mr. Protoplasm, or the Rev. Mr. Shifty Schemer, to stand aside and give place to one who is not afraid to tell exactly what he believes. And if this demand be made of any one, it is of the christian minister, or the man styling himself as such. It may please the floating population that, for a time crowds his church, that he never touches debatable topics, but expresses himself in such a pleasant, non-committal way, that every one is ready to claim him, although all are obliged to confess that he is not so explicit as they would like him to be. But such preaching as this will not please, and cannot feed the longing, hungry heart that would be sure of something, and that refuses husks when there is "bread enough and to spare." In the long run too, such preaching will fail to draw even the floating population referred to; it will desert him, at the first opportunity, to follow after some newer, and, for the time being, more attractive sensation. That this is true, the records of a score of ministerial careers will testify, and it is about time that this fact won greater recognition than, in a number of instances known to us, it has.

The gospel of Jesus Christ is one that must be preached positively. Its great founder did not deal in evasions, nor did he content himself with speaking in such a light, indefinite way, that people were at a loss to to understand what he meant. He preached emphatically and to the point, as did the apostles who followed him, and in no other manner could christianity be proclaimed, to conquer the world as it did. This, let the preacher of to-day remember. Let him be charitable in his treatment of the opinions of others; but let him remember that the christian religion, to be presented successfully, must be presented positively. What it seems clear to him that religion teaches, let him be quick and bold to proclaim. Then the world knows exactly how to understand him, and the soul, sick of mere negations, and fine, rhetorical nothings, will be in a fair way to be made whole.—Chris. Leader.

CHANGE OF RESIDENCE.

"Here I "have no continuing city," or permanent abiding place. The only house in which I ever have or ever expect to own a share, is one "not made with hands." At twenty years of age I started forth with the unpopular message, which I still delight to proclaim. As yet, I have found no time nor place to stop and labor to become rich in the things of this world. It is true I have labored much with my hands, but this has been to supply my family with the necessaries of life, and to be able to preach a free gospel.

Five years ago this spring I bade farewell to the place of my nativity (Natick, R. I.), and located in York Co., Me. Since that time, my labors have been almost entirely confined to that county. During my stay there, God raised me up many kind friends, whom I shall always hold in sweet remembrance. May it be my happy lot to meet them all in the soon coming kingdom of God.

Duty has now called me from Maine to New Hampshire, where I hope, under God, to be instrumental in doing some good. At present, I feel like a stranger in a strange land. In my immediate neighborhood there is only one family that has manifested any real love for the "present truth." Some other families are friendly; but most of the professed christians here manifest a disposition to hold me at a distance, because of the name by which I am known to them. So far as my faith is concerned, they know but little about it. Perhaps, when they come to hear a statement of it from my own lips, I may not appear quite as frightful to them.

I am to preach half of the time at Water Village. We there have a goodly number who love Jesus and his speedy coming. They are still enjoying fruits of the revival interest with which God blessed them during the winter. As there are many isolated brethren within a circle of a few miles of that place, I would hereby earnestly invite them to "come over and help us" in our efforts to hold aloft the standard of truth in Water Village. I think you will be amply repaid for any sacrifice you may make to meet with us from time to time.

I write these lines for the information of friends, in all of whose prayers I request a special interest. Pray that I may be dead to sin, alive to God, and always faithful in the performance of duty. C. H. SWEET.

THE larger part of our trials, disappointments and discouragements arise from conflict with God's will. If there is not direct opposition, still there is a want of harmony. We want to be what God don't want us to be; we want to have what God don't want us to have; we want to go where God don't want us to go; and the result is disquiet and unrest. We go to the class-meeting, and talk of trials, when we are only as spoiled children, and complaining because we can't have our own way. Let us, accepting the situation, put ourselves into the channel of the divine purpose, and float along.

IF thou considereth the worth of the Giver, no gift will seem little, or of too mean esteem. For that is not little which is given by the most high God.

HOME AND HEALTH.

SCHOOL-ROOM POISONING.

Few parents are aware of the injury which their children are daily suffering in the school and recitation rooms, where they spend six hours of their time, five days of each week. We are not exaggerating the matter in the least when we assert that there is not one in ten among the educational institutions of the country, in which the students do not suffer as much physical damage from the unhealthful conditions and surroundings as they receive benefit in the direction of mental training and culture from the educational advantages afforded them.

We wish to call attention to a very few of the evils to which school children are exposed, and some of the results of the same.

1. Notwithstanding the abundance of fresh air, and its cheapness, there is scarcely an architect in the country who can be made to appreciate the importance of providing for a liberal supply in the construction of school buildings. Paneled doors, magnificent stair-cases, and elegant seats are prepared, but no adequate or efficient means is provided for the admission of oxygen. Neither is any proper means provided for the removal of the foul excretions resulting from respiration. Penned up in close rooms, the delicate lungs of children are made to inhale over and over again the poisonous emanations from a hundred pair of lungs, from the surface of a hundred bodies, from foul stomachs, and rotten teeth. A mouse, shut up in its own exhalations, will soon die. Is it any wonder that so many delicate children die?

Suppose our school-room is thirty feet wide, fifty feet long, and twelve feet high, and contains one hundred students; how long would the air remain fit to breathe if not changed? The problem is a very easy one. Each breath renders unfit for breathing—or, in other words, poisonous—three cubic feet of air. Children breathe, upon an average, at least twenty times a minute. In one minute, then, each child would poison sixty cubic feet of air. One hundred children would poison one hundred times sixty, or 6,000 cubic feet of air per minute. A room of the dimensions described would contain just 18,000 cubic feet of air. If one-third of this is poisoned in a minute, the whole air in the room would become unfit to breathe in just three minutes.

We do not mean that the air would become so foul as to produce suffocation, in so short a time, but only that it would become so charged with poisonous matters that it could not be further used without producing disease.

In view of such facts, who can wonder at the apparent dullness and stupidity of many students, and the complaints of headache, lassitude, and unaccountable lack of energy which many students utter? Every human being requires 3,000 cubic feet of pure air every hour for the purpose of respiration; and when deprived of this abundant supply, suffering and disease result. Breathing air which has been rendered impure by previous respiration is recognized as one of the chief causes of that grave malady, consumption. Thousands of victims who yearly die of this disease, received the first germs of it in the school room. One of the great crimes of perverted civilization is the deprival of growing, developing humanity of "God's free oxygen."

2. Another one the most prominent evils to which school children are subjected, is the breathing of dry air. The presence of a certain degree of moisture in the air is essential to health. This the air naturally contains. It amounts, in two hundred pounds of air, at 32 degrees, to about one pound. If the temperature of this air is elevated to 59 degrees, it will contain twice as much moisture as at 32 degrees, provided it can get it. If no other means of supply is provided, it will abstract the extra pound required from the skin and mucuous membrane of the air-passages of those who breathe it. This causes dryness of the skin and mouth, irritation of the air-passages, sore eyes, and numerous other disturbances.

We are glad to see that the members of our State Board of Health are agitating this question and calling the attention of the people to it. It cannot receive too much attention.—Health Reformer.

A sure cure for Ivy poisoning, says a correspondent of the Country Gentleman, is caladine—commonly called "touch-me-not." Its botanical name is Impatiens fulva. It commonly grows where the ivy does. Bruise the leaves and apply the juice. It never is known to fail when thoroughly applied.

THE best time to make great exertion is about two hours after a meal. It is not a good time before breakfast, although moderate work may then be performed. The body is weakest before breakfast.

SATISFIED.

When ended this my earthly race,
The goal attained, through Jesus' grace,
And I behold him face to face,
I shall be satisfied.

When safely landed on that shore
I meet the loved ones "gone before,"
And fear no partings evermore,
I shall be satisfied.

When these dull eyes receive new sight,
And sweet surprises, glories bright,
Shall fill my soul with "pure delight,"
I shall be satisfied.

When Christ shall tune my voice to sing,
That it may blend with seraphim
In praising him, our heavenly king,
I shall be satisfied.

When in his image I appear,
No taint of earth or sin to fear,
And his sweet welcome meets my ear,
I shall be satisfied.

O Savior, help me watch and wait,
And heaven's joys to antedate,
Till thou shalt ope the pearly gate,
And then be satisfied.

THE ATONEMENT.

From the "Plan of Redemption."

We come now to inquire in what part of the work of Christ, in his official character, is this law of life based; for the Son of God is presented in the Scriptures in three successive official capacities.

FIRST. In his Prophetic or ministerial office.

SECOND. In his Priestly office.

THIRD. In his Kingly office.

I. Moses says, "The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me; unto him shall ye hearken." Deut. 18:15, 18; Acts 3:22; 7:37. And in this capacity he was typified by the Paschal Lamb, selected from the flock on the tenth day of the month, and slain on the fourteenth day of the month. Jesus was introduced by John, from among his brethren, as "the LAMB OF GOD that taketh away the sin of the world." John 1:29. Also by the Father, at his baptism: "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." Matt. 3:17. This was the fourth year before his death for the redemption of the world.

II. In his Priestly office, in which he is now acting at the right hand of the Father; for of him, Paul says: "The apostle and HIGH PRIEST of our profession, Christ Jesus." Heb. 3:1. Under him, therefore, we receive our law and profession." Again, the apostle says of him: "He became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him; called of God an high priest, after the order of Melchisedec." Heb. 5:9, 10. Again, the apostle while speaking of the inefficiency of the typical sacrifices to cleanse, says,—"But Christ being come an high priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building, neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood, he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us [believers]." "For if the blood of bulls and goats, and the ashes of an heifer sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh, how how much more shall the BLOOD of Christ, who, through the eternal Spirit, offered himself [gave himself up a sacrifice] without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works [works of death, Em. Diaglott], to serve the living God." Heb. 9:11–14. "And on this account he is the mediator of a new covenant, so that death having taken place for a redemption of the transgressions against the first covenant [which held the race involuntarily in death], those having been invited [through the new covenant] might receive the promise of the aionian [eternal—Common Version] inheritance." Heb. 9:15. Em. Diaglott.

In all the above passages of Scripture the Savior is presented in his official character as high priest, in heaven itself [the antitype of the holiest of all on earth], officiating with his own blood; for he said, "If he were on earth he should not be a priest;" and here we repeat, that priests never carried the body of the victim sacrificed into "the holy of holies;" it was left in the outer court, to be used as food, or burned on the altar, while the blood was offered by the high priest in the holiest of all, to obtain forgiveness.

Therefore the blood of Jesus affects no one except those who have transgressed the law of faith voluntarily, and who repent, believe, and obtain mercy through the blood of the Lamb. (Infants and imbeciles, having never violated this law of faith, having no conscious guilt or sin to be forgiven, they "are an heritage of the Lord, and . . . his reward," by virtue of universal redemption, by the death and resurrection of our Savior, and not by his blood; while all voluntary rejectors of offered mercy and grace perish in the second death.

This official work of Christ is shadowed forth in the law types of the atonement, especially in the Lord's passover. 12th chap. of Ex. The blood of this lamb was not to save the congregation of Israel from the plague of the destroying angel, but the first born in every house, a small portion of the people. They typify God's elect, chosen people, washed from sin by the blood of the Lamb. Rev. 1:5.

We would here press upon the attention of the reader, that while the flesh of the lamb served as food to nourish the body, and was eaten by all the people, yet only two of that vast multitude (children excepted), entered the typical land of rest; even so the flesh of Jesus, which he gave for the life of the world, to bring the physical man from the dark grave, will not secure eternal life to any responsible person of the human race. On the other hand, as the blood (which was never to be eaten on pain of death; see Gen. 9:3; Ex. 17:10, 12) of the paschal lamb saved none of the Israelites, except the first born in every house, so the blood of the Lamb of God will save none except the repenting, believing, God-loving company, who have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb (Rev. 7:14), under the new covenant; for thus it is written of Jesus by the evangelist (when instituting the Lord's Supper, which is the gospel or new covenant passover, to continue to signify the same great truths contained in the passover of which he was then eating, and which was then and there to pass away). "And he took the cup and gave thanks, and gave it to them, saying, Drink ye all of it, for this is my blood of the NEW TESTAMENT, which is shed for many for the remission of sins." Matt. 26:27, 28. "This cup is the New Testament in my blood, which is shed for you." Luke 22:20. Two facts are here especially stated:—

1. This blood is shed for remission.

2. That it is of and in the New Testament, showing that it does not belong to the old, or law covenant, as that admitted of no forgiveness; for it required the death of the offender; while the law of faith was established in mercy for the forgiveness of sins, and therefore required blood to cleanse from guilt; consequently, the Scriptures declare, "Without the shedding of blood there is no remission." "How much more shall the blood of Christ purge your conscience from dead works." Heb. 9:14, 22. "Now the God of peace, . . . through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect in every good work to do his will." Heb. 13; 20, 21. "Redeemed . . . from your vain conversation . . . with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot." 1 Pet. 1:18, 19. "But if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, . . . the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." 1 John 1:7. These passages, and many more we might quote, show conclusively that the second branch of the atonement, or law of faith (which by many readers is too often blended with the first branch, and which was accomplished by the death of Christ), is accomplished by the blood of Christ in the New Testament, and is limited to believers exclusively, resulting in eternal redemption; even the forgiveness of sins here, and the resurrection to immortality and eternal life when Jesus comes. Our subject then sums up thus:—

1. The adult portion of our race are brought under a new covenant and law of faith, called also the law of the spirit of life.

2. This law has no claim on infants and imbeciles.

3. It requires repentance and faith on the part of all accountable persons.

4. It is the only law under and through which we can obtain God's righteousness, justification from our sins, and eternal life.

5. The transgression of this law is wilful unbelief.

6. This law condemns all accountable unbelievers to eternal punishment (which is shown in the Scriptures to be the second death), as they reject the atonement.

7. This law is written in the hearts of all true believers in the living God.

8. This law is established in or by the blood of Christ, for the forgiveness of personal sins against this covenant, of and in which Christ is the High Priest, who ever liveth to make intercession for us.

9. That the application of this blood is limited to believers, and is the second branch of the atonement.

10. This branch of the atonement will be accomplished, or completed, when Jesus shall have finished the work of his mediatorial office, and will make his second advent into this world; and will result in the final redemption to immortality and eternal life of all who "have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb."

KIND WORDS.—None of us value sufficiently the vast influence of kindness. We do not think how those around us stand in need of it; we feel only for ourselves. Alone, unwitnessed save by God, many conflicts take place; the poor human heart struggles with sorrow. Let us try, then, and do all we can to make those about us happy, if only with a kind word.

SET UP ARGUMENTS.

WM. SHELDON.

Sometimes, either for a want of information, or through a desire for the mastery in argument, both speakers and writers resort to the unjustifiable practice of erecting men of straw as targets to waste their ammunition on, and thus amuse themselves and friends in showing their competency to demolish them. But after the men of straw are gone, the real men represented by by them remain unscarred. This practice is sometimes resorted to for the purpose of obliterating the theory of the pre-existence of God's Son.

1. It is said that Christ cannot be the eternal Son of God, unless he was co-eternal with the Father. In the first place, if that were true, then we can never be eternal, or have eternal life, as we were not co-eternal with the Father. The term eternal does not always mean a past eternity, but sometimes only a future eternity. But in the second place, the theory of Christ's pre-existence does not include the theory of his co-eternity with the Father, but simply makes him the divine Son prior to human or angelic history.

2. It is affirmed that such a pre-existent, deific nature could not have died for man. This would be true without a miracle, and right here we have the foundation stone of the atonement; by blending humanity and divinity "for the suffering of death," it was rendered possible for this divine Son of God to die as a sacrifice for the race. But though this is an unsolved mystery, the mystery is no greater than in the other view, which affirms that the divine nature, as an offshoot from the Father, was merged in humanity at conception; and it would be no more impossible for Divinity to die in the one case than in the other; if it did not die, we are left with simply a human sacrifice—one, only, for a race. That one divine sacrifice should atone for a race is no wonder; but that one human sacrifice should suffice, would be inexplicable. If Deity imparted at conception as a component part of a being could die, by the aid of a miracle, certainly a Divine Son, by a similar miracle, after becoming a component part of a human being, could just as really die. Right here our opponents find themselves under the very censure they sought to shower on us.

3. It is also affirmed that the theory of pre-existence paves the way for the doctrine of a dual nature in man. Far from it, for it is not claimed that there are two persons in Christ, but that the two natures were inseparably merged in one, making a unit of two ingredients, but not personalities—one person made up miraculously of both the human and the Divine; being thus related both to God and to man, being both the seed of the woman, and the Son of God; living, dying, being resurrected as one. Nor is there any more mystery in this union than in the theory of imparted Divinity at conception; and the miracle would be no greater in the one case than in the other, for human wisdom could not fathom it in either case.

It is sometimes affirmed that the life which Christ paid as a ransom for man must be part of the same nature of man's, and therefore could not have been a pre-existent life. This assumption is the essence of weakness; for if Christ gave no higher life than man possessed, it would have taken a distinct Christ to have rescued each separate man. The very reason why one Christ would suffice for the whole race, was the fact that his one life was so much higher than man's, as to be an equivalent for the life of the combined race; and therefore could purchase salvation for the whole. Angels were higher than men, but Christ was higher than all, and met the whole demand of the law in one offering.

The claim that Christ existed prospectively only in the purpose of God, makes the Savior's prayer sound strangely: "Glorify me by recinding my existence, and remanding me to my former non-entity, where I shall have only a prospective existence and glory," instead of "the glory that I had with thee before the world was," as a reality. If he had that glory only in prospect, surely he never lost the prospect of glory, and could not pray for a restoration of the prospect.

The claim that he existed as a "word," or utterance of the Father, is incorrect, for he existed, rather, as "the word"—ho logos—for "his name is called (ho logos) the word" (Rev. 19:13), and this logos was a thing of life: "In him was life"; and finally this living logos was made flesh," and for a time "dwelt among us." Before this, he was the "word of God" by name, and still is.

THE LEAVEN OF DISHONESTY.

BY BISHOP F. D. HUNTINGTON.

Among the characteristics of the times we are living in, there is one not much mentioned by the many popular speakers, who seem to think the men they speak to are to be benefitted chiefly by being assured how much wiser and better and more "progressive" they are than any of their fathers were, who suppose the age is to be instructed by being flattered, and that the country needs to be glorified rather than to be purified, which was certainly not the way of the old prophets. The characteristic I mean is dishonesty. I am not discrediting any of the actual modern merits—intelligence, enterprise, invention, philanthrophy. Grant all these, in large degree. Nevertheless, they do not bring with them honesty in proportion. Falsehood and fraud flourish along with them, in spite of them, and in some cases by the help of them. From the vulgar sediment of society up to its highest summits there spreads a tremendous force of self materialism—call it sharpness or call it crime—by which men reach after and snatch and call their own, for use or for show or for hoarding, what is not theirs. It is stolen property, only stolen ingeniously and indirectly and in such ways that the old forms of law, which undertook to punish downright robbery, fails to overtake them. If there is the least doubt about it, turn to the files of your public journals, and find one day if you can when there was not an allusion to some conspicuous corruption of the public conscience. Not in a few rare spots, but in every spot where two or three hundred people live together, a part of these people consume, or lay up, or waste, what belongs to other people, and what they have managed to get by some species of deception. What natural production of the earth is there, meant for the sustenance or comfort of man, that is not adulterated by some degrading mixture, or shortened in the measure? Do not the devices of Anglo-Saxon traffic repeat, in faithful exactness, the devices of the Jew, denounced by the prophet, making the ephah of the seller small, and the sheckel of the buyer large; selling the refuse for wheat, and "falsifying the balance by deceit?" What line of mechanical work is there, where the base material, or the shabby construction, or the overcharge, does not disgrace the handicraft? What branch of commerce without its delusive labels, its broken promises, its advertising fictions, its postponed payments, its calculated bankruptcies, its hollow contracts? Men who will not suffer their respectability to be challenged, look one another in the face, and with a mutual jugglery of knavish tricks conspire to grow rich by villainy. The brilliant audacities of the great commercial centres have their lame and creeping copies, hardly less cruel or calamitous, back in the little rural villages in sight of graveyards, where sleep the ashes of clean-handed ancestors, living and dying, in their day, in the faith of a God who has righteousness and judgment for the habitation of His throne. Outside the church are financial Ahabs and social Jezebels. Inside are Ananias and Sapphira, tacitly agreeing together to lie to the Holy Ghost, pretending to give to God, for missions or Bible societies, a hush-money fragment of what they have seized from their fellow-men. Too often there is no Peter with the courage to search out their sin—"Tell me whether ye sold the land for so much?" The grand difficulty with popular piety is, that it is still trying to find a way, in this nineteenth century of the gospel, and close to the centennial of a nation founded in the gospel's name, of serving two gods together.

Brethren, it seems to me that if our national Christianity is to maintain its respect, or if it expects to go over into another century, with much honor on its head or much authority in its voice, it will have to deal with these abominations somewhat more directly, more fearlessly and more personally than it is doing now. Greatly to their credit, our contemporary moralists have undertaken to investigate crime, its sources, its statistics and its correction. But the criminals are of two classes. One class, ill bred, ill fed, ill clad, with little knowledge, bad examples and strong temptations, take what they have no right to take, and render no equivalent. Another class, better clothed, better educated, with a better chance of living honestly, perhaps holding offices, and entertaining flattering assemblies, do precisely the same thing. The first class perform their lawless work in the dark, and so do these. The detected felons sometimes put on masks; and what else but a mask are good manners over an unprincipled heart? The vagrant robbers occasionally come together and lay out their schemes and count their booty. The gentlemanly robbers who haunt the lobbies of Legislatures, the municipal chambers, and bribable courts—tramps of the commercial highways—understand each other with an instinct just as keen, and a cunning just as infamous. Now, if this is all true, and if the habitation of the living God is righteousness and judgment, then what is sure to come by and by, when the King, patient as he is, uncovers that throne, and the Judge finally brings these souls, one by one, to the reckoning? Are we any safer than Ananias and Sapphira? Is this a safe count? With all its advantages, its anniversary pagents, its celebrations of what it it has done, and its loud predictions of what it is going to do, is America resting secure and approved at the foot of God's righteous judgment-seat?

Zion's Advocate.

LOOKING UNTO JESUS.

J. W. THOMAS.

"Looking unto Jesus."—HEB. 12:2.

The sailor must have something to look at if he would steer his vessel in the right direction. The channel along the coast is marked by buoys and light-houses. Guided by these he shuns the rocks and sand bars. Looking ahead far out in the distance, he sees a light sparkling through the darkness, and beckoning him on and he steers toward it. Christian mariners, you are sailing along the coast of Time. Yor need an object toward which you may lay your course. It is night here, and dangers abound. Look ahead. Christ is the Light. Sometimes when away out on the ocean where there are no lights to be seen mariners steer by a certain star. Pointing the vessel toward that, they know in what direction they are sailing. They cannot steer by every star, for stars are numerous and not fixed, but by one prrticular star, the "northern star," or "morning star" it may be. Keeping their eye on that, they bound joyfully forward over the billows. Christian, there is only one star toward which you can safely steer; it is the "bright and morning star." "Looking unto Jesus."

"Once on the raging seas I rowed,
The storm was loud, the night was dark;
The ocean yawned, and rudely blowed
The wind, that tossed my foundering bark.
Deep horror then my vitals froze,
Death struck, I ceased the tide to stem;
When suddenly a star arose,
It was the star of Bethlehem."

Look unto Jesus. In him there is hope, and peace, and comfort. He can banish all your fears, bid all your dark forebodings cease, and give you deliverance in every storm. The reason why some make shipwreck of faith, and sink in the deep waters of despair, is because they take their eye off from Jesus. They undertake to sail by some other star. I heard of a sea captain who placed an Irishman at the helm of his vessel with orders to steer toward a certain star which he showed him. The captain retired. After awhile he awoke and found the vessel tossing about in a fearful manner, nearing the breakers. "What is the matter," said he to Pat at the wheel, "where is the star toward which I told you to steer?" "O" said Pat, "I have not sailed by that, I saw a brighter one." Now there are a great many like Pat. They think they can get along without Jesus; they set him one side, and steer by some other star. They see no atonement in his blood, no divine authority in his teachings, no power in his grace, to save. The infidel, the atheist, the Spiritualist reject him. They are not governed by his Spirit, nor controled by his teachings. Is it any wonder that they get into trouble? Is it any wonder that one should say in view of his own death, that "he was to take a leap in the dark?"

There is no star whose bright ray sheds light on the grave, and lights up the future with hope except Jesus. In him is life, and the life is the life of men. They who follow Him shall not walk in darkness, but have the light of life. Christ has been exalted high above the heavens, and is seated at his Father's right hand. He sheds light on this dark world. His birth, his life, his example, his death, his resurrection, his ascension, his gospel, his Spirit, are the light, guide, and comfort of his church. His coming, and glorious reign is her crown of rejoicing hope. Guided by this hope she will reach the port of everlasting rest.

"Tossed on the deep by restless storms,
And driven by tempests from afar,
The sailor's heart with gladness warms,
To hail the glorious morning star."

"Looking unto Jesus." I have heard it said, that from the bottom of a deep well stars can be seen in the day time. Are you in deep affliction, look up by faith and you will behold the Star. Look away, look away. Ever look unto Jesus.

GIFT OF THE SPIRIT.

The following interesting experience of Bro. J. F. Joy, will be read with interest by those who love Jesus. After having a common christian experience some eight years, he decided to make a full consecration to Christ, and writes as follows:— M. G.

I melted down in self-abhorrence, and cried with throbbings of the Spirit within me that Jesus would work in me that holy work he was given to do without the touch of self. "Believest thou I am able to do this great work for thee?" "Yea, Lord." "Wilt thou trust all, and submit as clay in a potter's hand?" "Lord, I want thy holy work, let it cost what it may." Then I was called anew to consecrate all. This was easy so far as once done. But as one thing after another was emptied out which seemed as really taken from me forever as if burned or cast into the sea, I thought nothing would be left. I was about to lay my hand on his arm and say, "Stay, Lord, a little; too much, nothing will be left me." O, what a soul struggle for a short time! I can but die! I returned to my closet and said from the very depths of my heart, "Be thorough, Lord. I will go to India, or anywhere you clearly call me. I give my whole self to thee in an everlasting covenant to use me, and all mine, as thou wilt. My feet to go, my hands to work, and my tongue to speak for thee in any land, on any sea, with any people. Occupy and possess me fully; reign in and rule over me constantly. Choose life or death, health or disease, and take any or all at thy pleasure. Will for me forever, and let me never have a self will. I surrender soul, spirit and body, and deliver all over into thy hand, to use, mould and control forever. Amen and amen."

Nignt after night, I was awake as if some one had awakened me, and the visions of the Holy Ghost were glorious. Friday night I got glimpses of Canaan. I spied the promised land; the grapes of Eschol were delightful. Still the work went on in the heart; and Saturday night he finished by crucifying self. It actually seemed I was dying, but no nails in my hands, no spear in my side. Jesus had paid it all. I had a heart experience of Christ's work; "crucified with Christ." I awoke from unconsciousness, and knew I had passed the Jordan into Canaan, the soul's rest. When, Sabbath morn, I met a brother minister and his wife, I said, "I rest." O, what a rest! What a Sabbath! Language is powerless to express. What assurance! "Joy unspeakable and full of glory." "The full assurance of hope." Full to the brim. It seemed I should perish through very fullness of glory, for days and weeks together. I had tasted "the powers of the world to come"; and for some time knew not whether henceforth I was to be in the world to come or this. I then knew if I blasphemed I should commit the sin against the Holy Ghost. I never before supposed it possible for mortal to enjoy such in the body. It passeth human knowledge. Not only was I crucified, but also raised with Christ. "For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection; knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him," Rom. 6:5, 6. Raised to a new life, a higher christian life. Not of works, but faith. I could glory only in the cross of Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world." Crucified means put to death, and not merely curbed and sometimes subdued. All my deeds and toils and sacrifices vanished in view of Christ's all glorious, perfect work. I was ashamed to say I ever made a sacrifice. When all was done, and all claim on self relinquished forever, it was only my reasonable duty. I was not my own, but bought with a price—an unprofitable servant. All my righteousness was rags, but Christ's all glorious, spotless, and white, imputed to me through faith; and I cried, Grace, grace, unto it.

"Oh, to grace how great a debtor, Daily I'm constrained to be!"

Friends became more dear, food and raiment better satisfied, however little or poor. This is the soul's rest—the rest of faith in God. I could "read my title clear." Every right sensibility was greatly vivified. . .

It is now two years since the foregoing experience. Time enough to review and weigh the whole matter; and what shall I say? O that every one, who has not, may experience and enjoy this full assurance; and then you will know the one-half has not been told. It is all so true, so real, so precious. The ecstasy and first dazzle of glory has passed, but the inexplicable rest and peace abide. It does not puff up, but enables one to say in heart, "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me and I unto the world." "Crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; . . . that no flesh should glory in his presence."

"I'm a poor sinner, and nothing at all,
But Jesus Christ is my all in all."

"I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." Jesus says to every doubting, trembling, perplexed, burden-bearing, tossed one, "Come unto me, ... and I will give you rest." Don't stay near Egypt, nor anywhere in the wilderness, where food is given by measure. It is beyond Jordan, in Canaan, you may find cities thou buildest not, houses thou didst not fill, wells thou diggest not. and vineyards thou didst not plant. "There remaineth (abideth forever) therefore a rest to the people of God." Not unrest, but rest to your soul, now, in this present time, amid all kinds of storms and in every circumstance of life; Christ subduing all things for you, day by day, unto himself. . . . .

O, it pays, so much for a little! "And the Lord whom ye seek shall suddenly come to his temple." "Know ye not that ye are the temple of the Holy Ghost?" The enduement of power, which is the baptism of the Holy Ghost, is the promise of the Father. Have ye received the promise, the Holy Ghost, since ye believed? "For the promise is unto you and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." It is the gift of God, and not human growth. But does one grow any after he is filled with the Holy Ghost by the sanctification of the spirit? As birth gives to the child a higher, more illustrious life, so does sanctification to the christian. Christ came not only "that they might have life, [but also] that they might have it more abundantly." . . . .

And through the Eternal Spirit I asked in the name of Jesus that human theology might be taken away, and the theology of Christ the Prince be written on the table of my heart.

"THE LAST TRUMP."—1 Cor. 15:52.

J. P. MARQUAND.

Some time since our brother S. S. Brewer preached from this subject in our city, and we have not forgotten his sermons. For the last thirty years all close students of prophecy have studied the Scriptures with a view to ascertain the revealed will of God; and amply have we been paid for our research and labor.

The book of Revelation, of all others, becomes to us marrow and fatness, sweeter than honey or the honey-comb; as we see there portrayed the history of the world and of the church down to the end of time. We have in that book the seven churches, the seven seals, the seven vials, the seven thunders, and the seven trumpets; all these have their beginning in the Christian dispensation, in the times of Jesus and the apostles, and they run along consecutively for eighteen or nineteen centuries, until the mystery of God shall be finished in bringing in his kingdom under the whole heavens, establishing everlasting righteousness, and perfecting his saints. We see plainly that we are now living in the times of the seventh church (Laodicea), fitly described by lukewarmness, and also spoken of by prophets and apostles as a degenerate plant of a strange vine (Jer. 2:21), and as a woman sitting on a beast, the mother of harlots, etc. (Rev. 17).

This church is spoken of as being neither hot nor cold, loving pleasure, living deliciously, glorifying herself, etc. We also, in the writings of Paul, Peter and Jude, have an account of the condition and character of this Laodicean church. They are represented as lustful, corrupt, covetous, adulterous, unclean, selfwilled, heady, high-minded, contentious, sensual, boasters, malicious, unthankful, unholy, false accusers, without natural affection, traitors, having a form of godliness but destitute of its power. We see plainly that we are in the time of the seventh seal, filled with the wrath of God; also in the days of the seventh trumpet; and this brings us to our text—"the last trump." This is the last one that shall be given, and closes up the probation of mortal man, ushering in the resurrection and the day of God.

O for a pen to write these thrilling scenes in such a manner that humanity might be aroused to vigorous thought and action in view of the impending judgment. In Matt. 24:30, 31, we have an account of Christ's coming, the sounding of the trumpet, and the gathering of the saints. In 1 Thess. 4:16 we have the coming of Christ, the sounding of the trumpet, and the awakening of the dead, and also in our text the same thing. Here you will notice that the three things—the sounding of the trumpet, the coming of Christ, and the resurrection, are simultaneous. We fully believe that we are near these sublime events, that our God will come, and will not keep silence; a fire will go before him; the judgment will set and the books be opened.

"The last trump" brings in the sweet morn of the resurrection, the mystery of God, the raising of the saints, the changing of the living ones in the twinkling of an eye—bone to its bone, sinew to sinew. This is the whole house of Israel; not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. These are the heirs to the promised inheritance—the true seed, which have come out of great tribulation, and are without fault before the throne of God, having washed their robes and made them white. They have overcome through Jesus Christ and the word of their testimony; they stand on a sea of glass, having the harps of God. They sing a new song, known only to the redeemed.

Oh, dear fellow pilgrim, do not be discouraged, but press on; call things by their right names; say no to every false way, and listen not to the tempter; fix your eye on Jesus Christ, and call upon him for aid and help. Go in secret and plead the promises. Do not look back; remember Lot's wife. Stand still and see the salvation of God.

New York City.

INK DROPS.

J. ALBERT LIBBY.

Cheap men—community is full of them, from the highest to the lowest grade. They infest society, and like half-decayed peaches, are put at par value. Now it is rottenness somewhere that makes men cheap. A defective spot is seen, and there is a great fall in the human market. Moving men are not blind. Hucksters cannot lie and cheat, and nobody know it. The liquor seller's good clothes cover not his character; and

"The libertine, from his night-time sin,
Is known as such when the day breaks in."

Such characters are cheap; they look cheap, talk cheap, and walk cheap. Many of them have brass, but brass is cheap. Many of them show guilt; they want to look away from a good man's face; there is something in his eye that troubles conscience.

It is the life that tells. I am done judging men by what they believe. It is not belief of any truth, or of all truth, simply, that will save one. In the day of reckoning do you suppose the long creeds of men in classes will be read, and rewards meted out according to their fidelity or infidelity to these? By no means. Now, I do not ignore beliefs, but I think I have seen many who have talked and acted as though they thought God would be rather obliged to save them, because they were all right in faith—all right in their own estimation; but perhaps quite wrong when tried by the letter of the Scriptures. Is it not written that we shall give an account some day for our deeds and words? Then it may be that unseen hands transcribe our lives, and we may look upon our pages of mortal history, and find our final destiny to turn upon it, when the books are opened. Let us remember that it is the life that tells.

If sinners were beset to sell their chances for repentance, for the short space of even one year, at what high value would they be held? yea, with the most of men, no price would buy; and yet, hour by hour, and day by day, these chances slip away unimproved, and thousands, by sheer neglect, expire to sleep in Christless shrouds, waiting the day of doom.

What if thou art abused?
Be done with harshness;
Mellow tones are best
To soothe an angry spirit
To a state of rest;
'Twas kindness Jesus used.

NOAH'S ARK vs. INFIDELS.

Infidels urge against the truthfulness of the Bible that Noah's ark was not large enough to contain all the animals that are said to have been in it, therefore they say that the Bible is not true. Bishop Horne gives a most satisfactory answer to this petty objection; and for the satisfaction of all, we give it in his own language:—

"On accurate computation, the contrary has been proved; so that what was an objection becomes even an evidence for the truth of the Mosaic record. The dimensions of the ark were three hundred cubits in length, fifty in breadth, and thirty in height; and it consisted of three stories of floors.

"Reckoning the cubit at eighteen inches, Dr Hales shows it to have been of the burthen of 42,413 tons. A first-rate man-of-war is between 2200 and 2300 tons; and consequently the ark had the capacity or storage of eighteen such ships, the largest in present use, and might carry 20,000 men with provisions for six montns besides the weight of 1800 cannons and all military stores. Can we doubt of its being sufficient to contain eight persons and about two hundred or two hundred and fifty pair of four-footed animals; a number to which, according to M. Buffon, all the various distinct species may be reduced, together with all the subsistence necessary for a twelve month? To these are to be added all the fowls of the air, and such reptiles and insects as cannot live under water.

"Other calculations have been made to show that the ark was of sufficient capacity for all the purposes for which it was designed, but as they are longer than that above given, they are here designedly omitted."—Horne's Int., Vol. 1, p. 75.

MANY people rest short of clear evidences of their acceptance in Christ. It is not only our privilege to have one or two evidences, but to abound in them—and resting short of a clear state of acceptance. is insincere in us, for God is willing to bestow all the inward satisfaction we can need or require.

The very essence of truth is plainness and brightness; the darkness and crookedness is our own.

DIVINE PROVIDENCE.

Providence is the act of providing for the future—a readiness for coming want—and oversight and care for those who are dependent for necessary things. Divine providence is God's manifestation of love for and care over his creation. He is connected with all things as Creator, Benefactor, Father, and Savior. It is natural for intelligent beings to regard all things of their production with particular favor and care. The mechanic regards with more interest the machine of his own invention and manufacture, than any other. The farmer looks with more delight upon the productions of his own soil, the fruit of his own toil, than upon those of his neighbor. So does the Creator of all things watch with infinite love and care, the worlds and beings of his creation. This love and care makes him the Benefactor of all.

The father loves the fruit of his own body, the representative of himself, the one wearing his nature, and exhibiting his characteristics, better than he can love another. So does God look upon the works of his hands, the fruit of his infinite wisdom, power, and love, which he designed should represent himself. The same care which provides for angels, provides also for men, beasts, and insects. It numbers and protects the hairs of our heads, and guards the fall of a sparrow.

Man at his creation was raised to a high grade in the infinite variety and classification of God's creatures. The Creator designed him to fill a very important place amid the countless throngs of his moving, living creation. He elevated him to a glorious likeness of himself, putting the stamp of his own "image" upon him, reflecting the divine attributes of intelligence and love. Upon such a being the Infinite heart is fixed with undying love. That love has been manifested in the providence of God, through all the saddening changes and conditions of fallen humanity. It rolled out a flood of compassion and boundless mercy, in giving the dearest object of God's affection to bend low in humility, and die in ignominy, for the rebellious race. Its sweetest and most attractive sound is heard in the gospel, where every inspired sentence, sermon, prayer, and song, speaks of God's fatherly care and special providence over the work of his hands.

It is most gloriously exhibited in the presence and work of the Holy Spirit, as a heavenly messenger sent to this fallen world, to breathe love and good will to helpless, wretched beings, and strengthen them to rise from the pit of filth and death to peerage with angels, and to enjoy eternal felicity.

When the human mind, arrested by divine revelation and the power of the eternal Spirit, mounts above, and views Deity upon the throne of the universe, running his omnicient eye through the measureless space occupied by the wheeling worlds of his creation, flashing their heavenly radiance through his holy temple, like the reflection of mid-day rays from a rolling sea of polished diamonds, it begins dimly to comprehend the majesty and glory of Jehovah. When he is seen measuring the distance that each planet runs, and the exact orbits of every sweeping world, so that not a moment of time is lost, or a collision made through all the ages, we adoringly confess the infinite perfection of God's attributes, and of his ceaseless and universal providences.

The interest of the subject is intensified when the glass is brought down to view this deranged world, demoralized by sin, and darkened by the fall of death. Amid the howling darkness of the curse, are seen bright beams of hope emanating from the face of a loving God. His eye runs over this troubled world, viewing its scenes and creatures distinctly through the mist of ages, giving the history of its changes—mapping the rising empires—the reign, glory, and fall of kings—the victories and defeats of armies—the building and destruction of cities—the bondage, persecutions, triumphs and glory of his people—the story of the patriarch—the leadership of Moses—taking of the goodly land—the dispersions of Israel—the appearing of the Messiah—his wonderful history, tragical death, and glorious resurrection—the planting of a virgin church upon the Eternal Rock, her perilous and stormy journey through bloody seas, and over frigid mountains, counting the watches of a restless night until she reaches the mount of observation, where, glass in hand, she sweeps it across the eastern heavens, and, with joyful heart, beholds the morning star, the harbinger of coming day—all, all, by the guiding hand and superintending providence of an ever loving God. He takes forethought, and, by the administration of his infinite government, provides for every want he has caused to exist.

First and dearest to him are his chosen people. He guards them with sleepless care, and measures out his exhaustless store-house, by an invisible and sometimes visible hand, every blessing they need. He prepared the first garments for Adam, and kindled the first altar-fires of purgation. He caused safety to be provided for Noah and his family, when the watery grave swallowed up the human race. He sent his heavenly messenger and led Lot out of Sodom, when the fires were kindling over her head. He guarded Joseph in the pit and prison, that he might lay up bread in storehouses for the patriarch and his sons. He once watched a strange cradle in Egypt's river, that the baby occupant might become the liberator of Abraham's enslaved heirs, and lead them to their fathers. He drove back the waters of the sea, and ordered Jordan to cease its flow, that he might lead his people in a safe path to their promised home. He sent heavenly guards to protect his faithful servants amid mighty foes. He sent bread from heaven, and quails from the desert, to feed them in a howling wilderness where no corn grew.

And when the people had rested in the land of milk and honey, and enjoyed the richness of divine providence until the children had forgotten the God who taxed the earth, beasts, and men, for the deliverance and support of their fathers; and they had turned their hearts to serve other gods; a wicked king arose in Israel, who established worldly, pompous, state religion, pulled down the Lord's altars, and raised beautiful images in ornamented groves, in opposition to God and his divine worship.

But the Lord had one faithful prophet, Elijah, who true to his word and worship, boldly denounced the blasphemies and abominations of this false religion, until the wrath of the king and queen, and those wicked priests, had driven Elijah from the habitations of men, to find safety in the solitude of the wilderness.

God selected the fugitive's resting place on the bank of the murmuring brook "Cherith." There was the man of God, solitary and desolate, with the silent palm branches over his head, and the rustling reeds and rippling waters at his feet, sounding like the requiem of his race. No table is spread before him—no friend to provide a loaf. There was none but his God to care for him. And had he forgotten him in the distress of his persecution? Does he count his tears, and weigh the sorrows of his heart? Will the God who feeds the young lions, and watches the sparrow's flight, fail to protect his faithful servant, who had thrown his life, reputation and all into his hands for the sake of truth and eternal salvation? No; Jehovah's faithfulness can never fail. Ever true to his changeless government, he dispatches ravens, laden with bread for his needy prophet; changing their timid natures so that they fearlessly wheel on the wing, and lay by his side the heaven-sent food. Reader, reflect that the scene of which we speak was once an existing fact, ordered and directed by the God of the universe.

He who thus fed his prophet, causes his countless worlds to wheel in their unbroken ranks, so timed by Deity's unvarying clock, that not a moment is lost or gained through all the ages of their marching. We see in all this, unmistakable evidences of the infinitely wise purpose of God's creative hand, from the tallest seraph to the tiniest insect. Not a movement is seen in organic or inorganic matter, unprovided for by this wise Dispenser of power, who designs every being and body to move in exact harmony with all other beings and bodies. O thou divine One, we lay ourselves on thy providential arm, and devoutly pray: Bear us safely through the storms of the curse, and give us eternal rest in thy Eden of love, where there will be no famishing prophets; for thy people "shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more."

J. C.

CHANGE OF TIME.—Bro. Jer. Carr writes the time for the Pittsfield (Me.) Campmeeting is changed from Aug. 27th to Aug. 20th.

M. G.

BRO. J. MILLAR, St. Louis, Mo., wishes to withdraw his proposition for preaching, as given in the Crisis, May 31st. M. G.

CORRECTION.—In the beautiful lines of poetry by Bro. I. K. Lombard, in the last Crisis, on the first page, the fourth line of the first stanza should read—"Lighting all the way," instead of "Lighten all the gloom." In the last stanza, last line but one, change "so" to hence. M. G.

ROMANISM.—Those who wish a live paper on Romanism, will do well to take "The National Protestant," published monthly, at 67 Liberty St., New York. Price $1.00. It is ably edited, and filled with interesting matter relating to the Papacy. M. G.

NAMELESS ARTICLES.—We frequently receive articles for the Crisis with no name, or only the initials. Such writers must not expect their communications will be inserted. If the name is withheld from the paper, it should be sent with the article, and known at the office. Please remember this. M. G.

A GOOD PAPER.—The Advent Christian Times, published at 91 So. Green St., Chicago, at $2.20 per year, is a good paper, well conducted and edited by Bro. Frank Burr, who has just been re-elected for another year. M. G.

BACKSLIDING.—In the Signs of the Times, published at Oakland, Cal., May 25th, Eld. James White says, in a "Conference Address," when speaking of the Seventh-Day people:—

"As a people we are backsliding from God. The spirit of sacrifice is departing from us. Our wealthy brethren generally lay their plans for interests, and gains, and to the crease their wealth, which reach far into infuture." M. G.

"CONDITIONAL IMMORTALITY."—The report of the "Conditional Immortality" conference, recently held in London, England, and furnished us by Bro. W. Kellaway, will pay for a careful reading. The speeches of Brn. Minton, Leask, White, Constable, and others, are worthy the consideration of all christian men and women. Thank the Lord that light and truth, from the Sacred Scriptures, are spreading gloriously. M. G.

WORTHY OF CONSIDERATION.—A close observer of the effects of sectarianism says:

"The present writer knows whereof he speaks, when he says that dissension among christian brethren is an abomination in the sight of the wicked, and is especially discouraging to AN OUTSIDE BARBARIAN."

Whatever separates true christians must be unchristian in its tendency. The legitimate result of sectarianism is to divide the flock of God into parties, and thus cripple their influence for good. All who have the spirit of Christ should be one in him, ever ready to labor together to save sinners, and to help each other in the christian pilgrimage. M. G.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.—The interest in the "Eastern Question" continues to increase. The present indications show that it must soon come to a crisis, which will be startling. Great political interests are involved, both in Europe and Asia. It is not expected it can be settled without some terrible fighting between the leading nations of the world.

The indications are quite strong that the Lord has begun to deal with Turkey in a special manner for her bitter persecution of Christians, as he also is doing with the Papal power. If this be so, we may expect a thorough work, that will result in the destruction of these enemies to the cause of Christ. He has borne with them long; but the hour of their judgment is at hand, and no human power can cause its delay. As these noted anti-christian systems are to continue to the close of the present dispensation, and as the signs indicate they must end soon, then it follows that the coming of Christ is a near event. M. G.

STILL COMING.—We keep our eye on the "Three Months List." The stream keeps flowing; but can we not have a freshet between now and the 4th of July? Do not forget, this is the noted "Centennial year"; the only one we shall witness. Other denominations are building centennial churches, colleges, etc.; individuals are setting "centennial trees," and all sorts of centennial things are advertised. While others are doing great things in their way, let us do something for Jesus, by trying to persuade some new one to be ready to meet him at his coming. The small sacrifice of 50 cts. to send the Crisis to some one for three months, may accomplish this result. Try it. Blessed results have already been accomplished by the "Three months" list. Look at it: sixteen hundred and sixty-five up to June 7th. Three hundred and thirty-five more will make it two thousand. Let that be our number on the 4th of July. Come, all give a hearty lift. Instead of a centennial tree, set the eternal truth in some new heart,—that Jesus is soon coming.

M. G.

SECTARIANISM.

Sectarianism is anti-christian in its spirit and influence, hence Satan does his best to introduce it into the heart of every professed follower of Jesus. When persons are lukewarm in the cause of Christ, they are very liable to become sectarian, and dogmatic on points of theology. They are then in a condition to start a new church, where their peculiar views can be freely advocated, and the opposite held up to contempt and ridicule. The cause of Christ has been terribly hindered, mangled, and even destroyed in many places in this way; but thank the Lord, true christian men and women, in all evangelical denominations on both continents, are waking up to the great evil that has resulted from the spirit of sectarianism. This is a bright omen in favor of the fact that the bride is getting ready for the coming of the Son of man.

While the hosts of Satan are uniting their forces in every possible way, to fight against the cause of Christ, is it not time for true christians to unite also against their common foe, and no longer divide and quarrel over some doctrinal point, about which equally good men may honestly differ; while at the same time they are all consecrated to Christ, ready to do his will, so far as they understand it.

He who has the Spirit of Christ, though he may be ignorant of much truth, is the one with whom to unite, rather than with him who holds the truth in unrighteousness. "Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." Rom. 8: 9.

M. G.

ANCIENT RELICS.—Recently some valuable discoveries of ancient relics have been made, which confirm the correctness of the Bible accounts of events, which some skeptics have endeavored to overthrow. Whenever they seem to think they have accomplished their object, some new discovery is made among the ancient ruins, that puts to silence the bold objectors. Among the ruins of ancient Nineveh are found witnesses confirming the Bible records of the flood, and other important events mentioned in the sacred Scriptures. The recent discoveries of Dr. Smith are of great value, and for ever put to silence some of the strong infidel objections to the Bible records. This is particularly true in relation to the flood in the days of Noah, as he has found a traditionary record of that event on the clay tablets at Nineveh. M. G.

CHURCH DEBTS.

Church debts stand in the way of the spiritual prosperity of many churches. The Catholics will not dedicate a house till it is paid for. Protestants may well imitate their example in this respect. When a church is in debt for its house of worship, or for any other cause, it is a continual burden; and often completely cripples its power of usefulness. Various means are employed to raise the money, and frequently very unhallowed ones; and thus Satan secures the controlling power, while the faithful are discouraged; the unconverted are disgusted with the tricks and traps to raise the money, and are thus led to look upon religion as a farce, or a priestly device for their own selfiish interests. We do not wonder at their conclusion, when we look at the great extravagance of many churches the last few years. There seems to have been an earnest strife to excel in church edifices, popular music, and eloquent preachers. As the result, a state of cold formalism, pride and covetousness have gained the controlling influence; and vital godliness has been rapidly departing, till it has become a sad fact that when young converts unite with such churches, they are quite sure to die spiritually in less than six months, and are then harder to reach than before their conversion. A reform, a radical reform is needed; is a necessity, if salvation is the object to be secured.

The following, from a New York correspondent of the Boston Journal, will give a faint idea of the evil:—

"The financial condition of things is working disastrously on our benevolent and church life. Our missions among the lowly are very greatly crippled. Many of our prominent benevolent societies find their work at a stand still for want of funds. The City Mission work of Brooklyn is nearly demoralized. In New York men have been dismissed and women put in their places because their pay is lower. Some of our fashionable churches are terrifically in debt, and several are under foreclosure. Next week Mr. Hepworth's Church is to be sold, the debt upon it being $189,000. The Church of the Heavenly Rest is under a mortgage of $150,000. This is a small but gorgeous church, with a frontage of only 25 feet on Fifth Avenue. St. Thomas's Church has a debt on it of $250,000. Young Tyng's Church is in debt $225,000. Dr. Robinson's society have just paid $100,000 on their debt, and there is yet remaining $150,000 more. The 57th Street Reformed Church, the First Baptist Church, and Thirty-fourth Street Reformed Church, are equally heavily laden down. The Fifty-third Street Baptist Church was to have been sold to-day under foreclosure, but the sale was put off to another day. And these are only specimens. M. G.

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. H. S. MITCHELL writes:—"The Lord is at work still in St. George and Rockland, Me. Last Sunday (June 4th) I baptized seven happy converts, and the first Sunday of July we are to have another baptism, if it is the Lord's will. I am in Rockland once in two weeks, and more or less are forward for prayers. At St. George the meetings are good. Since last October, I have had a baptism every month up to June; and the glory all belongs to God and his Son. Pray for us."

BRO. H. B. SEVEY writes:—"I am yet confined at home with a lame foot. I ask Brn. and Srs., that can get faith, to pray for me, that I may be able to labor in the Master's cause, if it may be for his glory, the few months we have in this life."

BRO. J. H. HARDING writes, June 5th, from Strafford, Vt.:—"Dear Brn. and Srs. scattered abroad, I am in my new home among strangers, but find them interested in the cause of Christ. We have a few to journey with us to the house of the Lord, and some hearts that beat with sympathy in our affliction. My oldest daughter lies sick; we fear unto death. O, ye that have faith, pray, that God will interpose and rebuke the disease, and thus spare us the stroke."

THE TRACT FUND.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN PUBLICATION SOCIETY, at a meeting on Springfield camp-ground, August 11th, 1875, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

Correspondence.

From Bro. A. Eglin.

The Lord has been blessing us abundantly in the southern part of this city, for three months past. From twelve to fifteen souls have been truly converted, and are earnestly laboring with us to bring others to Christ. We commenced an effort to labor for the salvation of souls. A few of us who are looking for the speedy coming of the Lord, a Free Will Baptist minister, and a primitive Methodist brother, met several times to pray for a revival. In the mean time, others joined with us, and a real burden was felt for sinners. At our first meeting of consecration for the work, at brother Hackett's house, on the river road, one youug man was convicted of sin; and at the next one, he with two others found the Savior to the joy and rejoicing of their hearts. In our third meeting, others gave up to the Lord, and are now happy in his love. Many more have been added to our numbers, until we have become a strong working band of brethren and sisters. A large number are looking for our Lord's soon coming, others who as yet have not seen the evidences of his near approach, but all united exhibiting a great interest in the spread of the good work. We have had meetings every Sabbath regularly at the Ward-house, in ward four, since last Feb. Preaching a part of the time by brother Geo. W. Randall. He felt a special duty to come and labor with us, and has been a successful helper. I can say that in the seven years I have lived in the city, I have never seen so good a work; such a united band of praying, working, loving, brethren and sisters. The interest has not abated at all, but is on the increase rather.

Sunday, May 28th, was a most blessed day to us all. While we gathered around the table of the Lord—many for the first time—we received a special blessing. Seventeen spoke at the table, and a verse of some appropriate hymn was sung occasionally. Tears flowed from many eyes, and it was a solemn and interesting occasion, long to be remembered. We have two meetings during the week, and two on Sunday regularly, sometimes more. Have a very interesting Bible class at the close of the Sunday forenoon service. The door is open for the Lord's ministers who come in his name. May the Lord help us to be faithful workers; especially as we see the time is so short, ere the last word of prophecy shall be fulfilled, our work finished, and we meet our Judge. If faithful to him, having obeyed all his commandments, we have a sure promise of everlasting life when he comes. O hail, happy day! From my heart I can say, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly." He is surely coming. He will not tarry long. O may we be ready, having on the wedding garment, clean and white.

"We'll watch, and wait, and wonder,
Till Jesus comes;
O let my lamp be burning,
When Jesus comes."

Dover, N. H., May 29th, 1876.

From Bro. A. Damon.

To friends scattered abrord:—As many may be anxious to know my whereabouts, I take this way to inform them, that after more than two years labor with the church at Bridgewater, Vt., in the providence of God I moved to Hinesburgh, Vt., on the west side of the mountains, as pastor of the church at this place, three fourths of the time; where I hope, by the blessing of God, to prove a blessing to the church and the cause of Christ at large. There are a few here who are endeavoring to hold the fort until the arrival of the great King, whom they believe will come soon to gloriously finish up the great plan of redemption, which was had in contemplation in paradise lost, and appoinied to be accomplished in paradise restored.

Beloved, this is a precious hour. Perils new and strange are rising on every hand; all of which are calculated to draw christians from the service of God, thereby plunging them into unbelief of the Scriptures. The antitypical fulfillment of Nahum's prophecy, 2: 1, seems to have its place in our times; and certainly, the injunction connected with it. Hear his words:

"He that dasheth in pieces is come up before thy face; keep the munitions or (amunitions), watch the way; make thy loins strong; fortify thy power mightily."

Let the church watch the way, and make their loins strong, by girding on the whole armor of God; especialy be careful to gird them up with truth, for this will have a great deal to do about our standing firm in these days, when, as God says, "Thine enemies shall be found liars." "Happy art thou O Israel; who is like unto thee, O people saved by the Lord, the shield of thy help; and who is the sword of thy excellency; and thine enemies shall be found liars unto thee; and thou shalt tread upon their high places." Duet. 33: 29.

The great battle of time is almost ended; but the last fight will be the severest. Beloved, we shall need the presence of Michael to stand up (or on our part); and thank God we have the promise of it; for God will right early send deliverance. Fainting ones, cheer up; give no place to the devil, but resist him, and he will flee from you. His object is to cool down the warm-hearted christian, and he especialy looks with hatred at young christians, full of holy love and zeal, and says, I will soon cool your zeal by bringing you in connection with some worldly pleasure. This is his constant aim, to draw into sin; and he has the advantage of age and experience, for he has followed the business for about six thousand years. Bunyan says, Christian had to go down the hill of humiliation, and he was told that if he slipped, he should meet with difficulties at the bottom; and so it was. He had a slip or two by the way, and a battle with Apolyon was the consequence, and it was the most dreadful fight he ever saw. Let christians take warning.

Hinesbnrgh, Vt., June 1st, 1876.

From Bro. P. C. Marsh.

Dear Editors, and all who love the Lord Jesus Christ with sincerity:—We are still pressing toward the mark, here in Hamilton, with the eye of faith firmly fixed on the prize at the end of the race; and the indications are that the race is very nearly run. We have had many heavenly sittings together in Christ since we re-organized this little branch of the Lord's church, in Feb. last. I baptized three in Burlington Bay one week ago to-day—May 14th, and received two of them into the church the same evening; the other will be received on next Friday evening with a sister eighty years old, whom I baptized to-day, making six in all since last fall. Praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men. We have been richly blessed with a perfect spirit of union, which may the Lord continue, is our fervent prayer.

There are many here who are searching into the truths that we as a people love, and many are already believing them, but, like the chief rulers and scribes, many of whom believed on Christ, yet did not confess him for fear of being cast out of the synagogue, so with them. But it will be a sad thing for those who are ashamed of Jesus when he comes. Let us watch and be sober.

Hamilton, Ont.

From Bro. Geo. A. Streeter.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—I take this opportunity to say that the Lord has seemed to lead me into a new field of labor, and I have bid the old Bay State good-bye, to take up my abode in Maine. After living and laboring the most of my time in the ministry the past sixteen years in Mass., it seemed hard to say farewell, if only for a season. I have at quite a sacrifice moved my family to Lewiston, Me., where I wait the moving of the cloud.

Dear Brn. and Srs. in Maine, I have come among you at God's bidding, as a servant, to labor in his cause. I feel an interest in the cause of Christ, and wish to build you up in the most holy faith. I am ready to labor anywhere, wherever the door is opened. Let me have your prayers.

Brn. and Srs., traveling through Lewiston, remember we keep a pilgrim's home still, a bed and stool for the prophet. We live on Horton St., Thomas' Block. Shall be glad to see or hear from any of the dear and tried friends. God bless you all. We are nearing the coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. How careful we ought to be. How near to the cross we ought to live. How much zeal and earnestness we need. And above all, how much of the Holy Spirit we need to help in preaching, talking, praying, singing, and living. God help us to have on the whole armor, and to be ready to meet Jesus when he shall come. God help us to be steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord. Amen and amen. Your Bro. in Christ.

Lewiston, Me.

From Bro. M. Batchelor.

Dear Brethren:—I am still confined to the house, and much of the time to my bed; but the Lord is good, and I will praise him for all his mercies and dispensations to me. Yet while lying here I think, Oh, if I could go out now, and sound the alarm, and tell my brethren and all how surely the God of heaven is fulfilling his word. I want to tell them, that the seventh trump is about to sound; and the Turkish rule to end in that land promised to Abraham. I am hoping, with the blessing of God, to get up again, and be here when the Lord comes; but my pains continue, and my bed is one of suffering. Pray for me my dear brethren. Yours in trial.

New Bedford, June 9th, 1876.

From Bro. J. Blaisdell.

Dear Brothers and Sisters:—I have long been thinking as I have read the Crisis and the letters from those that loved the truth, that it might be right for me to say a word. I am trying to live out the principles of the doctrine of Christ. The way looks good to me. How could it be made better? I feel to say with the poet, I had

"Rather be the least of those
That are the Lord's alone;
Than wear a royal diadem,
And sit upon a throne."

Dear friends, let us get the whole armor on, that we may be able to stand. How thankful we ought to be that we are not left in darkness, but have God's word, which, if we are willing to obey, is a lamp to guide us in this world of darkness and unbelief. I am truly thankful that God has a people that love the truth, as it is taught in his word. What blessed promises are there. I believe with all my heart he will fulfill them. He says, "Fear not, little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." I am glad the way is just as it is. We have only to give up our own selfish ways, be in subjection to the will of God, ask daily for his Spirit, which he says he is more willing to give us than earthly parents are to give good gifts to their children. He says, "As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God."

My dear friends, let us be in earnest in this good cause. There is everything to encourage the true believer in Christ. The signs declare plainly that Jesus is soon coming to give eternal life to his people. Dear reader, shall you and I be counted worthy to receive it? We may, if we will; for it is free to all. He says, whosoever will may come. He will in no wise cast out. The way will grow brighter and brighter until the perfect day.

Rome, Me.

From Bro. L. B. Cummings.

Dear Brn.:—I take so much comfort in reading the letters in the Crisis I thought that perhaps some one might like to hear from me in the same way. I have been greatly blest in many ways since I came right out, and took a bold stand for Jesus and his truth. I don't have any time to waste studying new doctrines and theories, and am not riding any hobbies. Jesus says, "If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love." "This is my commandment, that ye love one another." He says "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you." Then let us do whatever he commands, and we shall be friends to Jesus.

Let us love one another, and do as we would be done by. Let us "take the name of Jesus ever, as a shield from svery snare." "Precious name, O how sweet; hope of earth and joy of heaven." We are living in perilous times; in a world of sorrow, sickness, pain and death. But this earth is not our resting place. We read of a new heaven and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. I long to be there.

Dear friends, let us be faithful, and do our duty, and in a little while, we shall reap if we faint not. My business is such as calls me away from home most of the time. I have met with many that are looking for the coming of the Lord, this last winter and spring; and it is a blessed privilege to me, to be where I can hear this glorious truth, that is so clearly revealed to us in the Scriptures. I mean to try and be faithful, and hope we shall all so live, that when he who is our life shall appear, we shall also appear with him in glory.

Milford, N. H.

From Sr. T. B. Weaver.

Dear Ones in Jesus:—While lying here today, thinking of the dear ones that meet in different places to worship God, I thought how blessed and cheering it would be to me to see some of them, and have them meet here in my room, around my bed; but I do not know as that ever will happen. How much I love God's dear children; how I prize their society. And now, while my dear friends, Bro. and Sister Streeter and family, have gone far away from me, and I have none of like precious faith nearer than ten miles, save an aged couple, who are not able to get out much. I hope the dear ones will not forget poor Theria while she lies here suffering, and can see no one, only as they come to see her. Above all, pray for me, for I need your prayers now, if ever I did. I am resting in Jesus, casting every care and burden upon the Lord. If it would look dark to look ahead, I just leave that all to Jesus, knowing that he can bring light out of darkness, and he will never leave nor forsake those who trust in him. I have enjoyed perfect peace of mind, and have cast every care upon Jesus; and sometimes my peace of mind is so perfect, I have no fear about what I may need, or what is to come. My confidence and trust in God is so perfect, that sometimes the enemy will whisper, "There is an awful trial ahead for you"; but I will not let him get one single foothold, but say to him, "The Lord will provide," and, Get thee behind me, Satan," and he will leave me.

I do love to live for Jesus, and know all the time I am his. O it is so sweet to feel that we are safe all the time. He will keep us. What a blessed thought; kept by his loving Spirit; kept in the hour of temptation from being led away with the wiles of the enemy. When the storms and tempests rage around us, we are still left in his arms of love. Thank the Lord for this keeping power, this sweet resting place. Blessed be his name. I will follow where he leads me, and

"Surely the Captain may depend on me,
Though but an armor-bearer I may be."

I am safe from all danger while under his wings. What a glorious thought that we are so soon to see him face to face, live with him, and enjoy his presence forevermore, where no more pain, sorrow or trial, toil or want, can ever come.

Obituaries.

PAGE. In Hampton, N. H., March 14th, '76, of consumption, Charles Franklin, son of Bro. Oliver Page, aged twenty-one years.

Bro. Frank sought and found the Savior, and left bright evidence that on the resurrection morning, he with four brothers and sisters, sleeping with him (who died happy in Christ) will come forth to immortality and eternal glory. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer, from John 11: 25. ENOCH MORRILL.

BROWNELL. In Mt. Vernon, Me., March 29th, 1876, of lung fever, Mary E. Brownell, aged eighteen years.

Emma was a good girl, beloved by all. Bro. and Sr. Brownell are called to mourn by the enemy coming again into their family. Five of their children have fallen. They have two to mourn their loss with them. May they be prepared to meet where death cannot come. Words of comfort by the writer were spoken at the funeral.

H. B. SEVEY.

LEWIS. In Boston, Mass., April 10th, 1876, Georgie, youngest son of George W. and Susan F. Lewis, aged two years, seven months and ten days.

They sorrow not even as others which have no hope. M. F. BERRY.

STONE. In Eastford, Ct., April 23d, 1876, Sr. Sophia, wife of Bro. Levi H. Stone, aged seventy years.

Sr. Stone has been a christian for many years. In her early christian experience she united with the Baptist church in Southbridge, Mass., and in 1843 she embraced the doctrine of the speedy advent of Christ, with other kindred Bible truths, since which time she has been associating with the people who are "looking for and hastening unto the coming of the day of God." For a few years past she has been confined at home in consequence of feeble health, and was thereby prevented from associating with people of God, or attending meetings as much as she desired; yet she found the Lord precious at home, and his promises, "yea and amen in Christ Jesus." She died in full hope of immortality when the great Life-Giver comes. She leaves a dear companion, three daughters, and a large circle of friends to mourn their loss, yet not without hope. At her funeral the writer presented the Bible hope of life and immortality only through Christ and the resurrection.

P. S. BUTLER.

KIMBALL. In Hopkinton, N. H., April 27th, 1876, Emma B., eldest daughter of Elbridge G. and Mary Kimball, aged seventeen years.

Although the first born is taken from the family circle, yet the parents sorrow not as those without hope, for Emma sleeps in Jesus.

C. W. SARGENT.

SMITH. In Dalton, Mass., May 13th, 1876, Bro. J. Sullivan Smith, aged sixty-nine years.

Bro. Smith was an every-day christian. Though very quiet and undemonstrative in his nature, he was an earnest lover and faithful advocate of the doctrine of the Bible. He was found, when summoned by death, with his work done; having fought a good fight, finished his course, kept the faith, he calmly fell asleep in Jesus, with sweetest anticipations of a speedy resurrection to immortality. He leaves a wife and eight children, who deeply feel his loss, as well as a large and sympathizing circle of relatives, with the entire community. Words of comfort and hope were spoken at the funeral by the pastor of the Methodist church of his town. "Blessed are the dead, who die in the Lord."

E. A. WARREN.

PARLIN. With what pleasure we press the hand of a friend as we meet them after a long absence. How safe we felt in our childhood when led by a mother's hand. How soothing was that kind hand to our fevered brow in our sickness.

When death had commenced its work on Sr. Emma Parlin, of Jay, who died April 8th, 1876, aged seventeen years, she said, "Take my hand, mother, in yours. Feel my pulse; tell me when it stops beating."—Thus one of God's saints fell asleep in Jesus in the midst of a life of usefulness. Many will remember her counsels and devotedness in the Evangel Tent last fall. She leaves many friends to mourn. May the blessed hope which held her be theirs. Funeral attended by the writer in the Union M. H., where many listened to words of eternal life through Christ and the resurrection, only at his coming, founded on Paul's words in 1 Cor. 15: 20. By man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead."

H. B. SEVEY.

HODGDON. In Manchester, N. H., March 12th, 1876, of paralysis, Bro. Amasa T. Hodgdon, aged fifty-six years.

Bro. H. was a great sufferer, the disease coming on gradually, and constantly increasing. He has been for a number of years a strong believer in the soon coming of Christ to raise the dead, and set up his everlasting kingdom on the earth, and has devoted a considerable portion of his time in preaching the gospel and inviting perishing souls to prepare for the judgment. He died in the triumph of faith, and we trust his flesh rests in hope. He leaves a wife, four children, and two sons-in law to mourn their irreparable loss. He was brought to Walden, Vt., for burial. Funeral sermon by the writer, assisted by the resident ministers. Text, John 11: 25, 26.

MILO DURFEY.

BRAMAN. Fell asleep in Jesus, at Worcester, Mass., May 15th, 1876, Bro. Bradish Braman, aged eighty-three years.

For more than thirty years Bro. Braman had loved and looked for that "blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ," and was seeking for glory, honor, immortality and eternal life. He had many favorite passages of Scripture that he often referred to, such as these: "In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you; I go to prepare a place for you; I will come again and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there you may be also." "Peace I leave with you. My peace I give unto you. . . . Let not your heart be troubled; neither let it be afraid."

G. E. MERRILL.

LADD. In Post Mills, Vt., May 3d, 1876, Sr. Sarah Ladd, aged seventy-three years.

Sr. Ladd was for a long time a worthy member of the congregational church. Three or four years ago, during a series of meetings in her neighborhood, she embraced the doctrine of immortality through Christ alone, and ever since has been a firm believer in the soon coming of the Lord to raise the dead and reward his people. She sleeps sweetly in Jesus. Words of comfort to mourning friends were spoken by the writer, from words of her own choice about a year before she died. (Isa. 54: 7, 8.)

O. BECKWITH.

FIELD. In Falmouth, Me., April 22d, 1876, Sr. Albina I. Field, daughter of William and Barbara Field, aged twenty-seven years.

May the consolations of the gospel sustain the sorrowing kindred, and lead them all to meet Albina in the Eden home when Jesus comes.

R. R. YORK.

HURLBURT. In Clarkville, May 3d, 1876, after a long illness of nervous debility, John Hurlburt, son of Miles and Millie Hurlburt, aged forty-six years.

Funeral attended by the writer.

D. N. CHADSEY.

FOREIGN NEWS.

LONDON, June 1. Preliminary work on the channel tunnel to connect England and France has been begun at Langotte, France. Shafts have been sunk to the depth of forty metres. When these reach a depth of one hundred metres below the sea a gallery one kilometre long will be made in the chalk. If this is successful and nothing indicates the impracticability of the project, the tunnel will be definitely begun.

June 6. A despatch from Paris says Russia has agreed to recognize Murad as Sultan of Turkey. The Ruski Mir, the organ of the St. Petersburg Sclavonic party, already regards war as imminent, and begins to discuss in what localities the Austrians will probably be concentrated to resist a Russian attack. The fact of such an article being published with impunity is serious matter for reflection. The Times' despatch from Rome says that the Bersagtiere (Italian newspaper) reports that 20,000 men were in readiness to embark from Odessa when the orders were countermanded in consequence of the suicide of the Sultan. A Paris despatch to the News says the French journals are singularly unanimous in disbelieving the report that Aziz committed suicide, and point out many alleged discrepancies in the official account. Although the official telegram announced that the late Sultan would have a splendid funeral, it was subsequently admitted that he was buried by night and his death kept secret from the public for fear of disorder.

The Times, in its leading article to-day, says the English people have thought a good deal concerning Turkish affairs. No one can doubt that very earnest feeling has been aroused, and there is a resolve that Russia shall not, with impunity, tear up the treaty of Paris and renew the aggressive policy which was interrupted by the Crimean war; but on the other hand is a deep conviction that no political interests of our own should induce us to disregard the principles of justice and humanity. If Russia is the champion of Christians in their aspirations for liberty and civilization, she must prove a formidable enemy to any power placing its own advantage in their oppression and debasement. The Government which does not communicate this feeling to the Porte will imperfectly represent the British, French and Italian people. We may assume that it will be communicated, and the Porte be warned that a radical change is the only chance of salvation.

June 8. A despatch from Vienna reports that the Servians have declared their independence, and the Servian army has crossed the Turkish frontier. The report causes excitement here.

June 9. The Governments of Austria, Russia, and Germany have recognized the new Sultan. The united diplomatic representatives of the European powers have prevented Servia from declaring war against Turkey. A pamphlet by Gen. Ignatieff, the Russian Ambassador at Constantinople, has created a sensation. It proposed to split up the Turkish Empire into five principalities, to be named respectively, Bulgarian, Albanian, Servian, Bosnian and Grecian.

CONSTANTINOPLE, June 6. The Porte has promulgated an offer of full amnesty to all insurgents who shall lay down their arms and renew their allegiance to the Turkish Government during the six weeks' armistice.

BELGRADE, June 7. Two batteries of artillery and a detachment of infantry started for the frontier by way of Kvaguwevatz, to-day. General Tchenajeff and the general staff have also left for the Bosnian frontier.

PRAGUE, June 7. The political newspaper states that a strong Russian force is concentrating at Bender and Moldavo on the Turkish frontier.

MADRID, June 9. During the debate yesterday in the Senate on the new constitution, the Bishop of Salamanca said the Spanish prelacy would always oppose religious toleration as incompatible with Catholicism.

LONDON, June 9. The Echo has a special telegram from Berlin stating that the Czar has prevailed upon Servia to adopt a peaceful policy. Turkey spontaneously offered the insurgents the two conditions included in the memorandum, namely: Three months' armistice and direct negotiations.

June 10. The Berlin and Vienna correspondents of the Times agree in stating that all danger of immediate outbreak on the Servian and Montenegrin frontiers is removed.

A dispatch from Paris says it is reported that the new Turkish Constitution will establish equal rights for all persons, irrespective of nationality or religion, abolish the office of Grand Vizier, create a responsible ministry and organize a Representative Assembly composed of delegates from the various local councils of notabilities.

PARIS, June 9. A dispatch to La Republique Francaise from Lyons reports a violent thunder storm at Valonne. Three soldiers of a regiment encamped there were killed by lightning, eleven paralyzed and one blinded.

LONDON, June 11. The danger of war in Turkey between the Mussulmans and Slavs seems more imminent than ever. A telegram from Belgrade says that Prince Milan has only a choice left between invasion of Turkey or flight.

June 12. The Paris correspondent of the Times says that La France, a journal very hostile to Turkey, publishes a telegram from Constantinople, reporting that the eldest son and mother of the late Sultan have been murdered.

In regard to Servia and Montenegro, the Sultan's demand that they shall lay down their arms and loyally await reforms, will hardly be supported by Russia or accepted by the insurgents. The final pacification depends on the negotiations of the powers. If no agreement is reached, the question may revive in an aggravated form after the six weeks armistice.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

New York, June 5. It is stated that the European correspondents of bankers here telegraph today that it is doubtful if war can be averted.

Omaha, June 6. A dispatch dated Fort Laramie, 7th, says the Indian Courier brings this report:

Just before he left an Indian arrived from the mouth of Tongue River. He found there 1273 lodges under Sitting Bull, Crazy Horse and others. They were on their way to Powder River to fight General Crook. On his return he saw the same band that Eagan saw on May 17. They told him they met Custar's troops and fought them all day, many being killed on both sides. No result reported. This occurred eight days ago.

Alton Bay Campmeeting.

The Alton Bay Campmeeting is appointed to commence August 26th.

J. COUCH.

The Beebe Plain Adv. Campmeeting.

The first annual session of this campmeeting will be held at Beebe Plain, P. Q., at the Stanstead Junction of the Passumpsic R. R., commencing Saturday, June 24th, and holding over two Sabbaths. The grove is a beautiful one, unsurpassed for campmeeting purposes; a real leafy cathedral. The ground is smooth and dry, and the trees large, spreading rock-maples. The location is convenient of access, the cars leaving the people at the grounds, on a platform built by the railroad company on purpose for our accommodation.

There will be good board provided for all who wish it on the European plan, or each having what of plain substantial food he wishes, and paying only for what he has. We shall also make the best possible provision for lodging all who come unprovided for. Stabling and feed will be provided for horses; 25 cts. for hay and oats, or half that price for either, and 75 cts. a day.

All the railroads will carry passengers for half fare, or fare one way. All along the line of the Passumpsic and South Eastern railroads, passengers will purchase the regular tickets to Stanstead Junction, and receive on the ground, of the Secretary, free return passes.

On the line of the Central Vt. and Montpelier and Wells River Roads fare is also reduced. Inquire always if tickets are sold to STANSTEAD JUNCTION; if not, purchase tickets to points intercepting with the Passumpsic Road, and then purchase again to Stanstead Junction. Purchase the regular tickets, and receive free return passes on the Camp Ground. Fare is reduced one half as far south as Concord, N. H., by the B. C. & M. Road, and as far as Vernon, Vt., on the Central Vt. Passengers below White River Junction on the Central Vt., purchase tickets through to Stanstead Junction via the Conn. and Passumpsic Roads. Those near St. Albans, purchase to West Farnham, then to Stanstead Junction. Those on the Montpelier and Wells River Roads, purchase to Wells River, then to the Junction. Those on the Shefford and Chambly Road, purchase first to West Farnham, then to the Junction.

On the line of the Grand Trunk Railway, east of Montreal, and on the International, Quebec Central, and Boston, Concord and Montreal Rail Roads, purchase Campmeeting tickets for Stanstead Junction, and receive through tickets for fare one way; good to return on, and subject only to be countersigned by the Secretary.

Fare is also reduced on the Portland and Ogdensburg R. R., and free return passes will be given via of St. Johnsbury.

Arrangements will be made with other local Roads, if persons living on the lines of such, who desire to attend the campmeeting, will inform the Secretary of the fact at Richmond, P. Q. All tickets will be good from June 14th to July 5th inclusive, so as to give all who build tents the opportunity of doing so.

Be careful always in changing cars to see that baggage is re-checked.

We have made arrangements for procuring lumber, so that we can furnish it to brethren desiring to build tents, for a lower price than it can be bought of lumber merchants in the immediate vicinity, as we have it brought us by the Passumpsic R. R. Co. free of transportation; and we furnish it to those desiring to build at cost. Lots are also free, and every facility will be offered to assist all, who wish to build, to put up tents as cheaply as possible; and we hope many will avail themselves of their privilege of doing so.

All persons who purchase the through tickets will change cars as follows, when they come from points beyond the limits of the Passumpsic R. R. Those who purchase them in Montreal will call for them via St. John, and take the train via the South Eastern R. R.; and all who purchase them east of Montreal, on the Grand Trunk R. R., will call for them via Sherbrook, and change cars at Sherbrook or Lenoxville.

Those coming by the Boston, Concord and Montreal R. R., go via Wells River, and change there for the Passumpsic cars. Call always for Campmeeting tickets.

We expect prominent preaching brethren from abroad will be present. We anticipate the presence of Elds. J. Couch, Wm. H. Mitchell, E. A. Stockman, I. C. Wellcome and others. We hope for a large gathering of the brethren and sisters to this great feast of truth, to hear the Word from his servants, and we hope all will pray for God's special blessing on the meeting, and come in these last moments of time to labor for union in Christ, and to save the perishing.

M. A. Potter, President; R. W. Warner, Vice President; C. L. Percival, Treasurer; L. C. McKinstry, Secretary. Lewis Bergoine, John Elliott and John H. Carbee, Campmeeting Committee.

ANNUAL CONFERENCE.—The annual meeting of the Christian Conference will be held in connection with the Christian Mission Campmeeting, June 26th, 1876. It is desired that all the members be present on that day, as circumstances make it absolutely necessary. A full representation of the various churches should be sent, and delegates elected that will do their duty by co-operating with the members of the conference. Brethren in the ministry, come, and confer together. Let no trivial cause prevent you from attending it. The cause is in a critical condition. We need your help.

M. W. CORLISS.

Campmeeting.

The annual campmeeting of the Christian Mission Association of Iowa will be held at the old place of meeting, near New Hartford, Iowa, commencing June 23d, 1876, and holding over two Sundays. The lease expires the present year, and hence we desire this meeting to be the best ever enjoyed there. Let every brother and sister contribute to the interest of the meeting by their presence and help. Do not allow worldly cares to keep you away, but come to one more reunion of the children of God, and unite with them in working for the salvation of souls. Every one should be personally interested, and do all that lies in his power to make it a success and blessing to many. Let all who possibly can bring family tents, appropriate and comfortable clothing, and bedding. Arrangements will be made to accommodate those who desire to board on the ground, and every provision made for your comfort and convenience. It is not known what ministerial help will be secured, but we expect to have interesting speakers, who will edify and instruct all who come.

THE STRONGHOLD.

"The Lord is good, a stronghold in the day of trouble." NAHUM 1: 7.

O Lord, my God, by thee
My lonely path is made!
Why do I shun thy cross?
Why am I thus afraid?
The storm may howl in wrath,
And clouds obscure the light:
Thou guidest still my path;
'Tis ever in thy sight.

Before me thou wilt go;
Thou keepest watch above;
Thou know'st the way I do not know,
And all thy ways are love.
O thou sweet Dove of peace!
My sinking spirit fill;
Show me, though comfort cease,
That Thou art with me still.

Thou art my strength, O Lord!
And here, with grief oppressed,
I trust thy faithful word,
My stronghold and my rest!
My hiding-place I find,
My shadow from the heat,
My shelter from the desert wind—
All, all at Jesus feet.

Anna Shipton.

REPORT OF THE "Conditional Immortality" Conference.

(Continuation of Bro. Minton's speech.)

Now, common sense would tell us that here we must look for an answer to that question—that this is what the Spirit would impress upon our minds; that by the burning light of these reiterated declarations we must interpret the few other isolated expressions which are also used in the same connection. Can anything, for instance, be more ridiculously perverse than to begin by taking the phrase "everlasting punishment," which is only found once in a very difficult parable, and attempting to decide the question upon that? (hear, hear). We maintain that the Spirit of God manifestly intended us to be guided, first and foremost, by the natural meaning of life, death, immortality, destruction, with other words of like import, that he manifestly regarded as words intelligible and absolutely decisive;—that he meant by these expressions to make the practical issue before us as clear as daylight to unprejudiced minds, and to leave no room whatever for any reasonable doubt (cheers). We assert that, if allowed to speak for themselves, no more intelligible and decisive words could be found in human language. We regard it as truly incredible that what constitutes the very warp and woof of Scripture teaching on such a vitally important subject should be meant to be understood in a secondary or figurative sense (hear, hear), eternal life and immortality representing an everlasting condition of holiness and happiness; death and destruction an everlasting life of sin and misery.

We do not for a moment deny that figurative language may properly be used even on such a subject as this; but it is impossible to conceive that the main bulk of God's revelation as to our future destiny, which St. John emphatically calls "the record which God hath given of his Son," should be conveyed in language which, from its very simplicity and familiarity, would necessarily mislead any unprejudiced, unsophisticated mind that went to Scripture with an honest desire to understand its meaning.

With reference to the moral question on which we are assailed,—chiefly from the right, a position of honor that we must do our Universalist opponents the honor of assigning them,—we confess ourselves unable to see any force in the objections made, either to the theory of human perishableness, or to the belief that some human beings will actually perish. Some of the objections can be distinctly answered now; and the rest, we can easily believe, will be answered abundantly by the result. Briefly, we say, that to pronounce it a degradation to humanity for any single human being not to live as long as the Creator himself, is surely the ne plus ultra of human self-exaltation. The great marvel, we hold to be, is, that any creature should do so. But to suppose that every member of the entire race, and that a fallen one, must necessarily have an everlasting life of some kind or other, we maintain to be as arbitrary, as unreasonable, and as extravagant an assumtion as could enter into the mind of man (great cheers). Furthermore, if this great gift of immortality was to be bestowed on any creature, we see nothing inconsistent with the Divine character, but everything in perfect accordance with it, that the gift should be made conditional on such creatures being accounted worthy to obtain it; and whether the question be approached from the side of Divine sovereignty, or from that of free will, it seems equally unlikely that every member of such a race as ours would be thus approved and have right to the tree of life.

As to the nature and duration and severity of the suffering which will have been undergone by the finally impenitent before the last moment of their existence, or as to the means by which and the circumstances under which they will be put out of existence, we know very little indeed; and we are wholly unaffected by any difficulties that have been raised in connection with such matters of detail, being confident that God will ultimately justify all his proceedings, whatever they may be, to the entire satisfaction of the intelligent universe (loud cheers). What it would or would not be right for this or that person to suffer within the limits that revelation renders possible, we cannot tell; but we can see as plainly as any moral truth can be seen by such visions as ours, that neither love, justice, nor anything else, requires the Creator to continue to a creature the highest trust that can be committed to him, that of life, if he persistently abuses it (hear, hear).

On the whole we declare, that the doctrine of conditional immortality satisfies our minds; and we know that it has brought unspeakable relief and comfort to thousands of our fellow christians; and we have no hesitation in asserting, what indeed must be the case supposing the doctrine to be true, that, if it fails to satisfy any of our christian brethren who really understand it, the fault must be in themselves. They have set up, however unconsciously, an imagination of their own, not in harmony with the mind of God, to which they will make everything bend; the consequence is, that they either wrest the Scriptures to make them say the very reverse of what they cry aloud with a thousand voices (hear, hear); or else they raise an artificial mist around the whole subject (hear, hear, from platform), and then attribute to God the intention of leaving man's future destiny in doubt and obscurity.

We do not for a moment deny that by our defective way of stating the doctrine, possibly by errors which we may have engrafted upon it, we ourselves may be responsible for some of the misunderstanding that prevails upon the subject (hear, hear). But we believe that so far from there being anything "hideous," "revolting," "miserable," or "degrading," in the doctrine itself—I am quoting, of course—it is in the highest degree honoring to God, and in perfect accordance with the truth of man's nature, whether as regards its creaturely weakness or its high capabilities. We believe that in addition to the positive mischief of giving such a representation of God's character as is involved in the popular view, or of assuring every man that he will necessarily enjoy an eternity of happiness, the gospel loses much of its power by the offer of immortality through Christ to those who seek it being eliminated from its message; and that the record which God has given of his Son, that in him we have eternal life, is incomparably a more powerful instrument for the conversion of sinners and the edification of believers than anything which can be substituted for it by the wisdom of men.

Believing this, we earnestly appeal to all who know the truth,—especially ministers, teachers, and preachers,—openly to avow their faith (hear, hear). What is the use of uttering Scripture language, if we know that it will be all misunderstood by the bulk of our hearers? How will the declaration that "the wages of sin is death," and that "the gift of God [in Christ] is eternal life," enlighten those who have been taught from infancy to regard "death" as meaning misery, and "life" as meaning holiness and happiness? What is this, but using words to conceal our thoughts? If the doctrine of life in Christ be the very truth of God, surely it ought to be declared plainly, openly and forcibly (cheers). Why is it not so declared by some honored brethren who believe it? There is one reason, sometimes frankly confessed, on which I, at least, have not the heart to speak. Soon after avowing my own conviction, I received a letter from an evangelical minister, in which he said he held precisely the same views, but that he dare not proclaim them, because he and his family would be brought at once to beggary, his whole congregation would leave him, and he would have absolutely nothing to depend upon but his pew rents. It would be hypocrisy in me to pretend that I have suffered nothing in this cause; but as God in his mercy has not seen it needful to put me to any such severe test as that, my voice, at least, refuses to condemn a christian brother for shrinking from a trial which I am very far indeed from being sure I should be able to face myself (hear, hear).

There is another reason however for silence, still more frequently confessed, on which I can speak more freely. It is a fact, very well known to some present, that honored and successful christian workers, lay and clerical, have been and are afraid of confessing this faith, lest it should injure their usefulness in other ways. Some would refuse any longer to support them, others any longer to hear them. Now I have no wish to escape any blame that may justly attach to myself for my long silence. I made a clean breast of it in a Fragment of Autobiography, published eighteen months ago; and by that I am willing to stand or fall. The truth compels me to say, that the whole aspect of the case has vastly altered in the last few years. At that time (I speak of nearly thirty years ago) the question was hardly, as they would say in Parliament, "before the house"; now it is one of the blazing questions of the day (hear, hear); and we may fairly ask all our brethren to consider whether, under existing circumstances, it is not every one's duty, before God and man, openly to declare himself in this great cause (cheers); and more especially we would ask those whose position is strong enough to bear the shock, whether it is honest, manly, or Christ-like for them to stand by sheltered behind their own silence or reserve, while their weaker brethren—weaker in natural resources, though stronger in faith and self-sacrifice—are being knocked down and trampled upon for preaching a faith which they themselves secretly hold (cheers). I knew a man who lived and died acting thus. One word from him would—I do not say have changed the creed, but—have silenced the tongue of condemnation, and paralyzed the arm of persecution throughout a wide circle of devoted christians (cheers).

Usefulness! do we really think that God cannot carry on his work without us? or that he would have us retain some apparent vantage ground, at the cost of helping to imprison the truth, refusing to take the part of an oppressed brother in the faith; lest we should lose the support and draw upon ourselves the vengeance of his oppressors? We admit the entire purity of the motive which leads some honored brethren to say by their silence, "I do not know the man!" There may be those who dread being put out of the synagogue, because they love the praise of men more than the praise of God; but there are others who firmly believe that they are doing God the best service by adopting such a course. We must however pronounce it a false expediency, and earnestly pray that they may be shown the duty of throwing off all reserve, and girding themselves for the battle (cheers).

"Brother! up to the breach,
For God's freedom and truth;
Let us act as we teach,
With the wisdom of age, add the vigor of youth.
Heed not their cannon balls;
Ask not who stands or falls;
Grasp the sword
Of the Lord,
And—Forward!"

(Cheers; a voice: "We will"; renewed applause.)

MY SOUTHWEST TRIP.—No. 5.

P. S. W. DEYO.

Feb. 19th, I began meetings at Pen Centre, Madison Co., Iowa. This is the field where Bro. D. S. Clark has labored. Emigration has made the numbers small. I found the church at peace one with another, and the prospect for the first week was good, all things considered. Feb. 25th, I was taken sick, so that I nearly failed while preaching; and the congregations were small, so many being sick with the measles. The like I never saw. Schools are broken up all around, and some families of the brethren are not able to attend. Feb. 26th, Bro. Moses Chandler came to fill his regular appointment, and was a timely help.

March 1st, Bro. Chandler had to leave to fill other engagements, and I remained over a few days. This week, the weather was very unpleasant and bad for meetings; and there were a number of deaths, so that, all put together, we concluded to close on Mar. 5th. I trust that the brethren were helped on the journey. We had good meetings.

Our next meeting was at Greenfield, in the large, nice Court House, as there is no chapel in the place. Each church was to have it in regular turns. As there were four societies besides ours, it was agreed that when any of us came along, that church should give way; and if a protracted meeting was to be held, all should give way. When Sunday came, the Presbyterians would not stand to their contract. In the evening the Disciples gave way, and I spoke.

March 15th, Bro. Monahan took his team to take me to Creston, on the B. & M. R. R. It was a foggy day. We soon got lost, and must have traveled about five miles, and came back within a mile of where we started. Then we had to make a long ride of twenty miles. I shook with the cold all the way. I felt greatly depressed in spirit. Bro. M. returned. I went on to Nodoway, and called on Bro. Peckham. I took a hard cold, was sick, and could not go on. So I preached in a private house.

March 17th, Bro. Mallory took me to Eld. Wm. Patten's. Learning of the funeral of Bro. Ford's child, and that Bro. Kent was to be there, we went over. Bro. K. would not let me off, so I spoke, although much afflicted. March 18th and 19th, I spoke in the school-house, and one arose for prayer. Our next meeting was at Hamburgh, commencing March 21st, in J. T. Davis' hall. We have his hall free. He began about a year ago to gather in the children of the poor to teach them on Lord's day, which has proved a success, and become quite a popular work.

March 22nd. Bro. Kent arrived to-day, and as the hall was occupied, we went to the Baptist prayer-meeting. We were kindly treated, and much liberty given. The meetings in the hall were continued till March 26th. March 29th. Bro. K. went home today, and we attended to the ordinance of baptism. On account of the breaking np of spring, the roads were bad. I continued the meeting till April 4th, when I left for Omaha. The amount of good done the Lord only knows. A large number arose for prayers. There were eight baptized, and nine united with the church. Bro. Hamilton, Bro. Carman and Sister Brower, are to keep up regular appointments.

While at Omaha, I called on Bro. S. A. Roberson; got two subscribers for the Crisis, and left April 5th. I stopped at Dunlap, and preached in the M. E. church, the pastor and the Congregationalist preacher assisting in the services. Had a good time, and was warmly received. April 6th, arrived at New Hartford, and stayed over Sunday.

I arrived at home April 13th. My wife has been very sick, and not yet well. Thus, after an absence of over two months, I close my southwest trip, leaving the result with the Lord, and trusting him for the future; thanking him and the friends who have assisted me on my journey. Yours in the blessed hope.

Charles City, Iowa, May 25th.

NOTES BY THE WAY IN NORTH ALABAMA.

To the A. A. M. Society.

Dear Brethren:—My last left me at Valley Head, on the 16th inst. The same evening, I spoke to a house full at the house of Bro. Wm. Lee. Wednesday, by special request, we ascended Sand Mountain, to Crow's church, where we had a blessed outpouring of the Holy Spirit. In the afternoon, Bro. F. R. Bankson came with horses to take me to Cherokee Co., but I had an appointment for next day at Beene's schoolhouse; so we stopped over, and after preaching on Thursday, the 18th, we took dinner, and bid adieu to Bro. Beene and family. Mounted our horses at two o'clock, P. M., and started for Bro. Bankson's, on Spring Creek, in Cherokee Co., thirty miles. We rode hard, crossed the war-famed Lookout Mountain, and reached his house at ten, P. M. Next day, I rested and visited old Mother Bankson and family, and Bro. L. O. Bankson and family, who seemed indeed glad to see me. What a privilege it is to meet old mothers in Israel, who have been long in the way. Here is mother Bankson, and in Arkansas is mother Edmonds, and mother Coffey in North Carolina, as well as several good old mothers at Ooltewah, Tenn., who always make me resolve to be more faithful.

Friday night, I tried to preach in the new house, built by the brethren since the great trouble when I was here a year ago. The law suit for old Unity Church house had passed away, and the brethren had built another house free for all Father's children. When I arrived, I learned, to my great sorrow, that Satan has been at work in the community to keep up prejudice among the people. Saturday, we tried to preach again, also at night. Sunday morning, the 21st, the young people assembled at nine and had a pleasant singing session. At 11 o'clock, I spoke to a full house, after which I formed a church of nineteen members, and I do pray God that since they were excluded from the popular churches for believing the truth, that they may be so entirely devoted to God, as to be a blessing to themselves and the vicinity. Pray for them. Spoke again at night.

Monday morning, with Bro. Livingston (a Baptist heretic), started for Yellow Creek, and stopped for Bro. F. R. Bankson to go, but he was busy in his cotton field. So I went and helped hoe cotton till done, then we three "soul sleeping preachers," as we are called here, started for Yellow Creek church, ten miles. We arrived at Bro. Mackey's just at sundown, where I found another old christian mother. Here, too, I met Bro. S. R. Hood, who is indeed a fatherly old minister, and really loves God and all his children.

At night so many people came, that Bro. Mackey's dwelling was too small; but we found a pleasant place in the yard for the brethren, while the sisters sat on the porch. Tuesday, the 23rd, Bro. Bankson and Livingston left us to return home. I started home with Bro. Hood. We came to the church for preaching. The Baptist brethren here, who had excluded Bro. F. R. Bankson for heresy, had at the last meeting passed a resolution to allow no soul-sleeper to use the house; so it was locked against us; but God had made a very pleasant shade under some nice white oak trees, near the church, where the people gathered to hear the truth; and while some sat on logs and chairs, others sat on the bare ground, and listened patiently for one hour. May God work here till all prejudice shall be removed. After preaching we rode seven miles to Bro. Hood's for dinner.

At night spoke at Bro. McClusky's, one mile from Bro. Hood's, where I staid over night. This morning, Bro. Hood came on with the pony loaned me by Sr. Sarah Bankson, of Spring Creek, and we started for this place, a distance of eleven miles. We came a mile and borrowed a buggy from Bro. John B. Croft, at Oak Hills, to which we harnessed the pony. We reached town about half past ten this morning, and as no definite hour had been given for preaching, it was thought best to wait till night. So we stopped with Gen. Terrentine (where I am now writing), who, with his very amiable family, bid us a hearty welcome. They belong, as I learn, to the Methodist church, but prove that religion is charity. I am waiting for the hour of preaching in the Court House, and I pray God that he will be with us, and give us a hearing.

I have been from home eleven days, have tried to preach sixteen times, and traveled in five counties; in all a distance of over a hundred miles. I had one dollar when I left home, and have since sold two hymn books. My fare thus far has cost me nothing. The people treat us with great kindness. The one great thing that grieves me is, they are not so truly devoted as I wish to see them, and as I do really think they ought to be, to be ready for the Lord's coming. O pray for us. I yet have two weeks' work before I can return home. I feel more than ever resolved to be wholly the Lord's. Pray for me that God may sustain me, and take care of my loved ones at home. I see no room for idleness. I do not wish to be sleeping when the Master comes. Love to all saints. Your Bro. in tribulation.

TRUE GROUNDS OF CHRISTIAN UNION.

Union is strength. Christian union is religious strength. Mere uniformity of organization is not christian union. Cold may freeze dissimilar things together, but heat unites those of the same nature. The attempt to establish uniformity among churches, as essential to christian unity, by a system of frigid laws, will be a failure. Uniformity of theological opinion is not necessary. Uniformity of ecclesialtical administration of ordinances will never be effected. Uniformity of ritual, and forms of worship is impossible. All men cannot think alike any more than they look alike. Unity with diversity is the law of nature, and the order of heaven. The beauty and perfection of a flower garden consists in having as many different varieties as possible. The human mind is so constituted that it loves unity, and perfect unity is compatible with great diversity.

Neither our experience, nor the outward manifestations of nature are uniform. No two leaves on the same tree are precisely alike. No two buds on the same bush have precisely the same unfoldings. Different minds have their own peculiar characteristics. The flute has its own quality of sound; the trumpet and organ have theirs. So with different minds. Why, then, may not christians of the various denominations treat each other as brethren, and walk together in "unity?" Church government will never bring men to see eye to eye. The unity most to be desired is local and not national. Christians in every local community can and should co-operate with one another in sustaining the worship of God and the ministry of his word in a union, like the rainbow, comprising the seven prismatic colors into one glorious arch of promise; or like "old ocean's" flow, "'distinct as the billows, but one as the sea."

As the body is one, although consisting of a great number of organs, all differing in their structure, form, and functions from each other, yet all perfectly united in the most intimate relations, and all dependent on the pulsations of one heart, so with the true church of Christ. There are many members, but one body. Aggregation, not isolation; consolidation, not separation; union, not division is the divine plan of christian action. Upon this plan society is formed, the church of Christ organized, and every good institution sustained and promoted. In union there is power. The most delicate thread, when sufficiently multiplied, will form the strongest cable and support a weight that is amazing. A single drop of water is a very weak and powerless thing, but an infinite number of drops united form a river upon whose bosom navies ride. Thus, agencies which, acting separately, are powerless, when conjoined are resistless in their energies. Some one has said, "Christians are very much like coals, they burn brighter when gathered into heaps."—Union in Christ.

"BREAKERS AHEAD!"

D. T. TAYLOR.

There are breakers just ahead of your barque, O, sinful man. You have had a sunny voyage over life's sea. A fine ship, smooth waters, prosperous breezes, boon companions, good cheer—all these have been yours. You have had few cares, much success, and many friends. You have spent your days in careless hilarity, your nights in wantonness and song. Even time has touched you but gently; the silver is scarce visible in your locks. You stand erect; your arm is yet strong; your courage fails not. You count on many days of mirth and festivity, tossing about the wine-cup and quaffing at pleasure's bowl, in years still to come. The siren leads you on, on, on; you are intoxicated with her smiles, you are giddy with her charmed cup. Conscience is quiet,—you have stifled her monitions. Fear departs,—you have put out the eyes of caution. All above you seems serene; you dream of a joyful landing on that sunny shore that still appears far away. In the madness of your heart you cry, I will drink sin's cup to the dregs. I will crucify wisdom; out on the thoughts of responsibility? tell me not of death; away with a judgment, a hell, a heaven!

But beware! There are surely breakers ahead. They who watch the night-signs see them dimly through the darkness; hear their hungry roar, and know their grasp is swift destruction. You are fast approaching them. Your ship will go on the wild rocks; the collision will be merciless. The hoarse waves in their fury will dash her to atoms. A starless night will gather in blackness over you. No dawning will come to your vision. Horror and fear will invade your soul. Remorse will sit enthroned in your conscience. The storm of anger you have insanely braved will burst upon you; the fires you have trifled with will commence to burn, and there will be no escape. Knocking will be vain—there is no Savior to hear. Weeping will be vain—mercy's eyes shall be averted. Wails will be vain—the rocks and skies will echo them mockingly. One glimpse of the fair, green lands, and sun-bright hills, and calm, peaceful days beyond, that waited in vain the coming of your feet; one thought of that strange ingratitude that spurned Eternal Love; one intense flash of regret as you wailing cry, "It might have been!" One shriek of horror, when the sullen caverns of eternity answer back, "Too late!" and all is ended. O, the keen despair of a soul doomed to feel the exterminating ire of an angry, insulted God! Will you longer madly brave it, O man? Will you complacently trim your sail, and lay on your oar, and smile at danger, while just above the Niagara of everlasting ruin? I shout in your ears, There are breakers ahead! Cast off slumber! Awake! arise! Leap to the Rock of safety! Strain every nerve, or go down in the utter darkness of a hopeless night without a morning.

LITTLE THINGS.

One step and then another,
And the longest walk is ended!
One stitch and then another,
And the largest rent is mended.
One brick upon another,
And the highest wall is made;
One flake upon another,
And the deepest snow is laid.

So the little coral workers,
By their slow and constant motion,
Have built up those pretty islands,
In the distant, dark blue ocean;
And the noblest undertakings
Man's wisdom has conceived,
By oft repeated effort
Have been patiently achieved

A little—'tis a little word,
But much may in it dwell,
Then let a warning voice be heard,
And learn the lesson well;
The way to ruin thus begins,
Down, down like easy stairs;
If conscience suffers little sins,
Sooner larger ones it bears.

A little theft, a small deceit,
Too often leads to more;
'Tis hard at first, but tempts the feet,
As through an open door.
Just as the broadest rivers run
From small and distant springs,
The greatest crimes that men have done
Have grown from little things.

GUARD YOUR CONVERSATION.

If you say anything about a neighbor or friend, or even a stranger, beware of speaking ill. It is brotherly charity to suppress knowledge of evil of one another, unless our higher public duty compels us to bear accusing witness; and if it be true charity to keep our knowledge of such evils to ourselves, much more should we refuse to spread the evil report of another. Discreditable as the fact is, it is by far the commonest tendency to suppress the good we know of our neighbors and friends. We are jealous of commendation unless we get the larger share.

Social conversation, as known to every observer, is largely made up of what is best understood by the term scandal. It would be difficult to find a talkative group of either sex who could spend an hour together without evil speech of somebody. "Blessed are the peacemakers" is not the maxim by which we are chiefly governed in our treatment of personalities. Better a thousand times stand or sit dumb, than to open our lips ever so eloquently in the disparagement of others.

What we should do in this, as in all other human relations, is to practice the golden rule. If we do unto others as we would that others should do unto us, we shall be exceedingly careful not to volunteer ill words about them. Where other than a good word is to be spoken, let it be spoken to the person concerned, that he may know your motive is not idle, cowardly, and sinister, and that he may have a chance to defend himself.—Sel.

THE WORLD WHEN CHRIST COMES.

It is clearly set forth in the Scriptures, that the return of Christ to judgment will find the world anything but holy, peaceful, christian, and happy; and that the last days will be earth's worst days, crowded with all forms of abounding wickedness, apostasy, irreligion, disorder, and sensuality. Indeed, it is one of the uniform laws of Providence, that judgment never comes in a pure and peaceful age. It is only when the blasphemies of men run highest that the Almighty strikes. When the wickedness of the old world culminated, the flood came. When the iniquities of Sodom were at their height, the day of doom dawned. When the "iniquity of the Amorites was full," the sword of Israel was upon them for their extermination. When the Jews, in their many crimes and apostasy, added the responsibility for the Messiah's blood, the ploughshare of destruction overturned their city, destroyed the last remnant of their state, and entailed eighteen centuries of woe upon their children. The greatness of judgment is also graduated by the extent and turpitude of the offenses which call it down. As all divine judgments hitherto, have been samples and earnests of the great judgment to come; and as, when it comes, it is to be the most universal and awful of all, we are forced to the conclusion that it will overtake the world in a condition of the most unbounded guilt and godlessness, transcending everything that has thus far marked the history of man.

To this, also, agree all the scriptural statements on the subject: "When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" (Luke 18: 7, 8.) "As it was in the days of Noe, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of man." (Luke 17: 26, 27.) We know what sort of days those of Noah were. We know that they were not centuries of righteousness and peace. The testimony of God certifies to us what was the state of things. The inspired record is, that "God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually. . . . The earth also was corrupt before God; and the earth was filled with violence. And God looked upon the earth, and, behold, it was corrupt; for all flesh had corrupted his way upon the earth." (Gen. 6: 1-13.) Such is the awful portrait of those times sketched by the Holy Ghost himself.

And the word of the divine Jesus, more than once recorded, is: "As the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." (Matt. 24: 37-39.) We know, too, from the same infallible source, what was the moral state of the cities of the plain at the time. They were overwhelmed. "The Lord said: The cry of Sodom and Gomorrah is great, and their sin is very grievous." Not ten righteous men could be found in all their teeming populations. (Gen. 18: 20-32; 19: 1-17). But the word of Jesus is, "Likewise, also, as it was in the days of Lot; they did eat, they drank, they bought, they sold, they planted, they builded; but the same day that Lot went out of Sodom it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all; even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed." (Luke 17: 28-30.) Paul testifies to the same effect: "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." (2 Tim. 3: 1-9). And if this correctly portrays what is to be the prevailing condition of the professing church, what shall be said of the vulgar multitudes who make no pretentions to piety or godliness?—Prophetic Times.

NO POSSIBLE EXCUSE.

THOS. FITZSIMONS.

The people and the nations cannot complain that there have not been warning voices enough sent out to them the past fifty years from every part of the world, proclaiming the coming of Christ. Apart from the signs they themselves have seen, and the Bible truths lying open before them, they have had the warnings, and admonitions, and testimonies of witnesses in nearly every land and modern tongue, whose evidence and testimony—the very trumpet of God—has been pealed into their ears, in too many cases to be met with open ridicule and contempt. Let them not therefore in the near end complain, or seek in equivocation, excuse for their indifference and unbelief. The record stands, but it is their fall.

Phil. Pa.

LET US WALK IN THE LIGHT.

M. J. PRATT.

When we are enjoying the world and its pleasures we are alive to the world, but dead to Christ. While we are enjoying the pleasures of sin we are grieving the Holy Spirit. Think of the goodness of God to us. How precious are the promises in his holy word. They are meant for us. If we walk in the true light we may claim them all. What a privilege! What rich blessings we enjoy when we obey God's commandments!

Paul says—"Ye were sometimes darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord; walk as children of light." Jesus says—"He that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life."

The Lord, who is great in mercy, hath called us out of darkness into his marvelous light,—into the pure light of the gospel. We no longer enjoy the worldly amusements, but we look forward to an eternal home—the kingdom of God. "All that is in the world—the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father but is of the world. . . . The world passeth away, and the lust thereof, but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever." "For we ourselves were sometimes foolish, disobedient, deceived, serving divers lusts and pleasures, living in malice and envy, hateful, and hating one another." But God, according to his mercy, hath called us out of darkness, away from worldly pleasures into the true light, that we no longer might walk in darkness.

Let us then no longer serve sin and Satan, but the Lord Jesus, who gave his life a ransom for us all, that whosoever believeth in him might not perish, but have everlasting life.

Dear sinner, Jesus loves you. Will you not come to him and find peace in believing? He stands with outstretched arms, ready to receive you. He says, "Come unto me, and I will give you rest." He will never turn any away who go to him.

Would you have a home with Jesus?
In his kingdom ever reign?
And meet with all the loved ones
Never more to part again?

Come to Jesus, then be faithful;
Give your heart to him to-day;
He is waiting to receive you,
Come to him without delay.

Holbrook, Mass.

TO PREACHERS.

1. Resolve to be brief, as this is an age of telegraphs and stenography.
2. Be pointed; never preach all around your text without hitting it.
3. State yonr propositions plainly, but do not stop long to particularize.
4. Avoid long introductions; but plunge into your sermon like a swimmer into cold water.
5. Condense; make sure that you have an idea, and then speak it right out, in the plainest, shortest possible terms.
6. Avoid all high-flown language; quote no Hebrew nor Greek; aim to be simply a preacher.
7. Be honest enough to own that you do avail yourself of help from any source. But in using helps, be sure you never make stilts of them, when your own legs are far better.
8. Expect the Father's blessing; you are his servant, and do nothing without it.
9. Stop when you get done.

"Looking unto Jesus," imparts strength and joy to the soul, but looking unto self is a forlorn hope, and never carries us a step further on the right way. Try the great remedy, Christ and sufficiency, and so look up for help, that the habit will be upward, and not groveling in the weakness of self sufficiency.

"Trust in the Lord forever." What we understand by trust is confidence; a reliance or resting of the mind on the integrity, veracity, justice and friendship of another. Consequently what we understand by trusting in the Lord, is believing that he is able and willing to perform whatever he has promised.

A little neglect may breed a great mischief; for want of a nail the shoe was lost; for want of a shoe the horse was lost; and for want of a horse the rider was lost, being overtaken and slain by the enemy; all for want of a little care about a horse-shoe nail. So neglect of the soul's salvation for a single moment may be the means of losing Christ and salvation for time and eternity.

HOME AND HEALTH.

TALMAGE'S LAST CIGAR.

After giving his experience with his first cigar in boyhood, Mr. Talmage speaks thus of his deliverance from the vile habit:

"But how about my last cigar? It was three o'clock Sabbath morning in my western home. I had smoked three or four cigars since tea. I thought I was getting the inspiration from above, but was getting much of it from beneath. My hand trembled along the line, and, strung up to the last tension of nerves, I finished my work and started from the room. A book standing on the table fell over, and, although it was not a large book, its fall sounded to my system like the crack of a pistol. As I went down the stairs their creaking made my hair stand on end. As I flung myself on a sleepless pillow, I resolved, God helping, that I had smoked my last cigar, and committed my last sin of night study. I kept my promise. With the same resolution went overboard tea and coffee.

That night I was born into a new physical, mental, and moral life. Perhaps it may be better for some to smoke, and study nights, and take exciting temperance beverages; but I am persuaded that if thousands of people who now go moping, and nervous, and half exhausted, through life, down with 'sick headaches,' and rasped by irritabilities, would try a good dose of abstinence, they would thank God for this paragraph of personal experience, and make the world the same bright place I find it, a place so attractive that nothing short of heaven would be good enough to exchange for it. The first cigar made me desperately sick; the throwing away of my last made me gloriously well. For me the creaking of the midnight owl has ceased, and the time of the singing of the birds has come."

WHAT A CHILD CAN DO.

"Papa, I have signed the pledge," said a little boy to his father, on coming home one evening; "will you help me to keep it?"

"Certainly," said the father.

"Well, I have brought a copy of the pledge; will you sign it, papa?"

"Nonsense, nonsense, my child! what could I do when my brother officers called"—the father had been in the army—"if I was a tee-totaler?"

"But do try, papa."

"Tut! tut! why you are quite a little radical."

"Well, you won't ask me to pass the bottle, papa?"

"You are quite a fanatic, my child; but I promise not to ask you to touch it."

Some weeks after that, two officers called in to spend the evening.

"What have you to drink?" said they.

"Have you any more of that Scotch ale?"

"No," said he; "I have not, but I shall get some. Here, Willie, run to the store, and tell them to send some bottles up."

The boy stood before his father respectfully, but he did not go.

"Come, Willie; why, what's the matter? Come, run along." He went, but came back presently without any bottles.

"Where's the ale, Willie?"

"I asked them at the store, and they put it upon the counter, but I could not touch it. O papa, papa, don't be angry; I told them to send it up, but I could not touch it myself!"

The father was deeply moved, and turning to his brother officers, he said: "Gentlemen, do you hear that? You can do as you please. When the ale comes you may drink it, but not another drop shall be drank in my house, and not another drop shall pass my lips. Willie, have you your temperance pledge?"

"O papa, I have."

"Bring it, then."

And the boy was back with it in a moment. The father signed it, and the little fellow clung round his father's neck with delight. The ale came, but not one drank, and the bottles stood on the table untouched.

Children, sign the pledge, and ask your parents to help you to keep it. Don't touch the bottle, and try to keep others from touching it.—Christian Standard.

"FOR ME."

Little Carrie was a heathen child, about ten years old, with bright black eyes, dark skin, curly brown hair, and slight, neat form.

A little while after she began to go to school, the teacher noticed one day that she looked less happy than usual.

"My dear," she said, "why do you look so sad?"

"Because I am thinking."

"What are you thinking about?"

"O teacher! I do not know whether Jesus loves me or not."

"Carrie, did Jesus ever invite little children to come to him?"

The little girl repeated the verse, "Suffer little children to come unto me," which she learned at school.

"Well, who is that for?"

In an instant Carrie clapped her hands with joy, and said, "It is not for you, teacher, is it? for you are not a child. No; it is for me! for me!"

From that hour Carrie knew that Jesus loved her, and she loved him back again with all her heart.

Now, if the heathen children learn that Jesus loves them, and believe his kind words as soon as they hear them, ought not we who hear so much about the dear Savior, to believe and love him too? Every one of us ought to say "It is for me! for me!" and throw ourselves into the arms of the loving Savior.—The Morning Light.

THAT BLESSED HOPE.

AIR.—Waiting, etc.

Through earth's scenes of woe and sadness,
I a pilgrim stranger roam,
Looking for a land of gladness,
Sighing for a peaceful home.
Soon I hope to see my Savior
Robed in glory ever bright,
And I long to share his favor
In the home of joy and light.

Mid the brightness of its glory,
Mid the music of its songs,
Our glad lips shall tell the story,
Praise shall rise from all our tongues.
Hark the notes of joy resounding
To the Lamb who died for me,
Who hath opened life's pure fountain,
On the cross of Calvary.

Now my bardened heart is longing
For the rising of that day,
When, eternal glory dawning,
Pain and woe shall flee away.
O I watch to see the brightness
Of that day so blest to me,
When awaking with thy likeness,
I then satisfied shall be!

REPORT

OF THE

"Conditional Immortality" Conference.

THE CHAIRMAN: We have had, dear friends, one branch of the great truth most ably and most faithfully laid before us, by our friend Mr. Minton. I trust that what he has so forcibly presented will carry conviction to our minds. I shall now ask Dr. Leask to address you upon another branch of our subject—that connected with the missions to the heathen.

Dr. Leask, who on arising was received with hearty cheers, said:—Ladies and gentlemen: "Life in Christ and Christian Missions" is the topic which has been handed to me to address you upon. "All power is given unto me in heaven and on earth; go ye, therefore, and teach all nations:" the fact affirmed is very glorious; the command founded upon it is very gracious. Teach to the world the glad tidings of life and immortality, in the name of the Possessor of unlimited power, is the sacred privilege of Christ's disciples. The authority, the message, the messengers are all strictly defined. The Lord of all sends his own word—He sends it by the hands of those who have received it; and who have known surely that he came out from God. As the Authority is the highest, and the message the most merciful, it is obvious that the messengers should be perfectly loyal in the discharge of their commission. They must teach only what their Lord has taught them; neither adding to nor subtracting from his word. Regard for his power, the purity of his truth, and the welfare of their fellow-men, combine to impress upon them the necessity of faithfulness. They should be able to enforce every doctrine, precept, promise, warning, counsel, with a "Thus saith the Lord;" for they are not lawgivers, but "witnesses," "servants," "faithful men;" who have been called to "preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ." One of them, illustrious in church history, the prince of christian missionaries, and a man enriched with all those moral and mental qualities that constitute enduring greatness of character, was supremely anxious to convince men that his message was divine. "I declare unto you the gospel, which I preached unto you, which also ye have received, and wherein ye stand, by which also ye are saved, if ye keep in memory what I preached unto you, unless ye have believed in vain. For I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins, according to the Scriptures; and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day, according to the Scriptures." Again: "For I have received of the Lord that which I also delivered unto you." And again,—as if he could not weary of protesting against the assumption that he had gathered his doctrines from men,—Paul, an apostle, not of men, neither by man, but by Jesus Christ, and God the Father who raised him from the dead. . . . I certify you, brethren, that the gospel which was preached of me, is not after man; for I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ."

So jealous of the authority of his Master was this splended man, that he protests against the danger of overrating even apostles. "Who then is Paul and who is Apollos, but ministers by whom ye believed, even as the Lord gave to every man. . . . Ye are carnal. One saith, I am of Paul; another, I of Cephas; another, I of Apollos. Is Christ divided? Was Paul crucified for you?" These pointed questions go to the very root of the matter, and forcibly suggest that the introduction into the Christian system of doctrines which come not from Christ, would tarnish its beauty and impair its strength. On another occasion the same loyal witness says: "We are not of those who corrupt the word of God." And finally, he uses language which can be justified only on the supposition that he was moved by the Holy Spirit: "If any man, or even an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed." It was foreseen that the traditions of men and vain philosophy would creep into the church and corrupt the faith delivered to the saints; and accordingly, pastors and teachers are urged to be faithful, to watch against the insidious encroachments of the enemy, to be brave soldiers of Jesus Christ, and to stand complete in the armor of God. The very fact of such warnings, even though the precise nature of the danger had not been specified, implied that efforts would be made to thwart the divine purpose, to misrepresent the divine character, to undermine the citadel of truth, to sow tares among the wheat, to introduce corrupting leaven into the pure meal, or to do something which should at least hamper the progress and stain the glory of the gospel of the blessed God. One need not be deeply read in ecclesiastical history to know that the predicted corruption of the primitive truth took place, and that to such a fearful extent that for ages the so-called church of Christ was the most crushing despotism the world has ever seen; christian in name, pagan at heart; pure in profession, abominable in practice; and so utterly opposed both to the honor of God and the welfare of man, that no stronger proof of the divine origen of christianity is possible than the fact that it lives to this day, notwithstanding the doctrines and practices of Pabal Rome (cheers).

Among the doctrines which have come to us through this suspicious channel, and which yet hold sway over a great part of Christendom, notwithstanding the large territory which Protestantism has won from the dominion of the Romish bishop, are two which should long since have been discarded, along with Saint-worship, Mariolatry, and Purgatory, by every church that makes the Bible the standard of its faith. But through the good providence of God, these are at last fairly challenged to show cause why they should not be banished from the pages of Christian theology. That they will be so ere many years pass, I have no hesitation in predicting; for the natural immortality of the human soul, and the eternal torment of the lost, are tenets for which divine revelation gives no authority (hear, hear). On the contrary, all its teachings, whether in relation to the nature of man, the penalty of sin, the meaning of redemption, or the character of God, lead to an entirely different conclusion. The doctrine that countless millions of the human race will be tormented in fire for ever, without either the hope of death or deliverance, is too awful for thought. The very attempt to conceive it agonizes the heart, staggers the understanding, and exceeds the capacity of belief. Such an amazing infliction of woe as this must not be attributed to the merciful and glorious God, whom we love and serve (applause), unless he has expressly and unequivocally declared it in so many words. But he has not done so. Devout men, who wish to believe every doctrine of their Father in heaven,—educated men, who are able to examine the languages from which the English version of the Bible is made,—christian men, who feel that their blessed and honorable work on earth is to glorify the Master whom they love, have made this subject their earnest and prayerful study; and they say, in the sight of God and the hearing of the world,—Out of Christ there is no immortality; and a hell of eternal misery is the most frightful delusion that was ever presented to the numan mind (cheers, and hear, hear).

The Judge of all the earth does right; but this would be wrong. We are told, however, by the advocates of this dismal dogma, that we are incompetent to form an opinion on the matter; for "God's thoughts are not as our thoughts; neither are his ways as our ways." No! we rejoice that they are not. (Cheers; and a voice: "Not like theirs.") They are immeasureably wiser, better, more compassionate, more loving. If he has a surprise in store for us in the age to come,—and we are satisfied that he has many (hear, hear, from platform),—it will be the exhibition of a wisdom so profound, and a kindness so far-reaching, that the only thing we shall be able to do will be to fall on our faces before him in silent adoration (hear, hear,). But the theory that seeks support from such an argument as human inability to judge of the divine government cannot long survive. Argument? Why, our ideas of right and wrong are divine gifts (applause). They come from God himself (hear, hear); and he repeatedly appeals to the faculty he has implanted:—"Are not my ways equal?"—"Come and let us reason together,"—"Judge, I pray you between me and my vineyard." (Applause.) Moreover, a dogma that is felt by ministers of the gospel, by evangelists, and by missionaries to the heathen at home and abroad, to be a grievous difficulty and burden, is really self-condemed. Surely, it cannot be that the commission of divine compassion, "Go and teach all nations," "Go and preach the gospel to every creature," was checked and hampered, in case of refusal to accept the gospel, by a penalty so terrific. The assertion that the Bible teaches this has excited the astonishment of thinking men for many generations,—has alienated myriads from the entire christian system,—has made more infidels, secret or avowed (hear, hear), than all other anti-religious influences put together, and has distressed beyond expression multitudes of devout and loving hearts (hear, hear). Missionaries in India have told us—have told you, through the pages of the Rainbow— that they could not solve the terrible enigma which this dogma presented in the presence af the sublime doctrine that God is love; that he retaineth not his anger for ever; that he delighteth in mercy; that he loved the world; and that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures. The two ideas are mutually destructive. The clearest intelligence in the world cannot harmonize them, and the Scripture does not profess to do so; for the simple reason that it does not contain such violent contradiction (applause). But the grand doctrine of revelation,—"He that hath the Son hath the life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not the life,"—commends itself at once to the understanding and the heart. It is the glorious declaration of God, that in the exercise of his matchless love, he is pleased to bestow the wonderful gift of immortality upon mortals who receive his Son Jesus Christ our Lord, who is the Life, and who has been manifested to us. Hence, the same missionary brethren assure us, with feelings of gratitude and joy, that when their eyes were opened to the fraud that the wiles of the enemy had imposed upon them through tradition and corrupt theology, and when consequently they accepted in their literal significance the words, "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life in Jesus Christ our Lord," the mountain was plucked up by the roots and cast into the midst of the sea (hear, hear, from platform), and intelligent and educated Hindoo merchants and magistrates said, "We will listen to your christian doctrine now, for it is worthy of the God whom you serve; but if an eternal hell of torment is to be the fate of the unbeliever, we prefer our own religion; for it teaches that however wicked a Hindoo may be, in the course of ages he will be absorbed into the Deity, and his sufferings and sorrows be for ever at an end." There is no need to elaborate this subject, It will suggest to every one of you a broad field of thought, over which we cannot now walk.

There are difficulties enough in the way of the christian missionary, without this thoroughly mistaken one of a penalty for unbelief which shocks all moral sensibility, flies in the face of christian reason, libels the government of the Most High, and answers no intelligent end whatever (applause). The preacher of the cross has to contend against the natural dislike of men to holy and humbling truth, the old religious and deeply-rooted superstitions of people, aud of social and political influences of manifold kinds. These present obstacles enough to his self-denying labors without the importation of a gratuitous difficulty, for which neither reason nor revelation gives the slightest warrant.

But the one point to which for a moment more I call your attention, because of its supreme importance, is the bearing of this question on the ineffably glorious character of our Father in Christ. We wish to tell our beloved brethren who have gone as missionaries to far distant lands, that they have our sympathy and constant prayers, and that if they will examine the subject for themselves they will find, as we have done, that the hell of theology is a myth, a delusion, and a snare; and we would have them emancipated from a bondage of which their predecessors in the mission field, the apostles of our Lord, knew absolutely nothing. Rejoicing in their honorable work, and desiring to lesson the number of their difficulties as much as possible, we beg to assure them that reverent examination has perfectly satisfied us that traditional theology and divine revelation are totally different documents on this subject; that the immortality of Scripture is not in man by nature, but is exclusively the gift of God to believers in Christ; and that consequently their great service is to proclaim life and immortality through redemption to a world of dying men. But the grand, the chief, the all-important point is, the deliverance of our Father's character from the dismal cloud which has rested on it for ages (hear, hear), causing men to turn away from him in terror, instead of coming with their sins and sorrows to his feet, in the name of the redeemer, and looking up into his face with gratitude and trust and joy, whilst their lips utter the inimitably beautiful and blessed words, "Our Father, which art in heaven." (Hearty applause.)

GIFT OF THE SPIRIT.

The following interesting experience of Bro. J. F. Joy, will be read with pleasure by those who love Jesus. After having a common christian experience some eight years, he decided to make a full consecration to Christ, and writes as follows:— M. G.

I had thought verily every praying soul would delight in Christian union, and rejoice to hear of the rest of faith, and to know that Christ can keep one, moment by moment, freed from sin. But as soon as I cried, "I have spied the promised land, the soul's rest, and every one can enter by faith," there was a drawing back and strong opposition by some. Two years have passed, the two most delightful and satisfactory yet known. Though conflicts were severer, and trials greater, victory was quicker and easier, so I could rejoice in infirmities, in reproaches for Christ's sake, and be "exceeding glad," not for them, but in them. And what years of instruction, as I get glimpses of the golden side where glory glitters, gilding every cloud. Oh, how trans porting the grace-of-God view is, to that of the Egyptian and works. Here I prolong the vision backward, around, and forward, and Christ is all and enough. The gospel heavens are studded with riches, and the Book of Jehovah contains nebulæ more glorious than the starry heavens. Let us then look into the perfect law of liberty and continue looking ever, with the face to the Sun of Righteousness and not keep turning the back, looking at our own shadow. Ho, every one that thirsteth! Stop running, working and worrying after holiness, righteousness, purity and power. Just stoop in submission, and drink from the full, ever-flowing stream, and accept peace, holiness, righteousness and power divine, all ready, complete, not needing human touch; all in Christ I need, and all imputed by faith. Oh, grace, grace unto it. I see, oh, I see my mistake! For eight years I daubed with untempered mortar, trying to help or partly do what was complete and perfected forever in Christ. At conversion I saw my utter bankruptcy, and accepted pardon as a free gift. But did not know I was just as bankrupt for peace, righteousness and sanctification, and they were to be had on the same terms, and no other, as pardon. So I tried to keep myself by Jesus helping in cases of difficulty, and supposed I should grow by working, and live by doing right. I said in my heart, "I will do the best I can, and then, as a student carries the poor painting to the teacher for perfecting, so I will deliver my clumsy work to Jesus, and trust him to complete it," Not knowing I was "yet carnal," under the law, straining mightily to do God's work.

NO PATCHWORK. Human righteousness and the righteousness which is by faith are two distinct things. The righteousness we need was all ready before we were born, just as pardon was. We receive pardon when we accept it, so we receive righteousness not by doing and thinking holiness, but by putting on the Lord Jesus by faith. "White Robes," the righteousness of saints, is purely a garment of Christ's own handiwork, and all deeds of all good men can never weave one thread in that robe. The "Lord our righteousness" is no human fabric, but complete before we were bidden. The Prince furnishes the wedding robe, and not each guest their own. How can we have the righteousness of God? Christ Jesus "is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption," and we are to accept the complete righteousness. How? By substitution or imputation. How? By faith. Rom. 4: 24. But are we not to work out our own salvation? Yes, yet we only work out what he works in; "for it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure." Should one cease working out what is worked in, he would choke the word and become unfruitful.

SANCTIFICATION the apostles put for the Christian level. This is the work of the Spirit; set apart of God. We obtain it as we do other gifts, for Christ is made to us "sanctification." But it involves a full consecration. All the offering the heart can make (and none is acceptable but heart-offering) is only full submission, yielding back to God his own, and we no longer usurp. Our bodies, life, time, all, a living sacrifice are only our reasonable service, and submitting only what we have no right to control, for we are not our own. Coming up to par service; just reconciled to God. He then takes possession of his own, and sanctifies it, setting it apart for himself, sealed with the Spirit. He then abides, reigning in and ruling over his right possession, and we rejoicing and wondering in his government. Oh, lovely household! All glorious Prince, paying all debts, meeting all demands, having the whole government upon his shoulders, for the life that now is and that which is to come. We are to trust him and do his will in active and passive obedience. Entire consecration of the heart and will, laying all friends, property, soul, spirit and body as actually on God's altar as if parted from each. As actually as Abraham offered Isaac; and taking sealed orders for contingencies that may ever arise. That is no consecration which is easy to utter, but hard, when God takes the offering. Lip work and heart work are two things.

SUBMISSION is man's part, not as an enemy, but as a friend yields with a gushing heart of gratitnde when a generous gift is bestowed. Submit all. Do you say I have? Have you submitted your will and your doubts? Then you are as clay, and just fit for moulding into a vessel of honor. We are God's husbandry, or garden, and he the husbandman, and the growth of fruit is his work, which he will do if we yield willing obedience, for it is his pleasure to bear much fruit. Growth is not the result of human work nor zeal. We grow by abiding in Christ, as the branch in the vine. Christ has life in himself and our life comes by union with him, and the growth and fruit is as spontaneous, easy and inevitable as that of the branch grafted in. But do we not abide in Christ by a constant strain and works? No. "Because of unbelief they were broken off, and thou standest by faith. Be not high-minded, but fear." "The just shall live by faith," and works are the manifestations of life. Do not work to believe, but believe in order to work. Works do not sanctify, but the sanctified one works. As well think of a branch growing and bearing much fruit and never having leaves as to suppose one can be in Christ and not work. He is in labors more abundant, not to be saved, but because saved from sin. Growth is not developing the old or patching the mainsprig, but casting out the old, and a new heart created. Grow by receiving gifts; by putting on the Lord Jesus Christ. Grow also "in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." All the riches of grace we possess in Christ are already complete, though to us hidden until we come to know them, and then we see them finished from the beginning. Oh, the development of knowledge of what we have in Christ, unfolding into halls of glory, from glory to glory!

PERFECT in Scripture may refer to a perfect growth, or to a perfect completion. But he is the perfect man whose heart is in fellowship with "the Father, and the Son Jesus Christ," notwithstanding his mistakes in ignorance. He is the perfect man who puts "on the new man which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness." Human perfection is perfect weakness. Christ our perfection is complete. "For by one offering he hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified." So provision is made that ye be "perfect even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." This perfection was complete in Christ, waiting for me to see—come in heart knowledge of—and possess now by faith. But when we have come "unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ," having received the gift of pardon, and life, and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost, durable riches and righteousness; is it not as the child grows to importance and posseses to use as he pleases, and enough to last a long time without receiving more? No. Nothing descended from Adam which can be grown into life or immortality, or developed into manhood lost. No more develop into life and holiness than can the body by any human skill gain immortality. It is on the death, crucifiction, of all of the first Adam, comes the new man Christ Jesus. Christ possesses all. Dead to the world, crucified with Christ, risen with Christ, married to Christ—we Christ's and Christ God's, and all things are ours. Then do we not possess a large capital for years? No. The blood cleanseth only moment by moment, and if it keeps me cleansed ten years, I have not enough to last a minute longer than the application. The gifts of grace are not native to, nor grown in us, nor given in stock, no more than natural sunlight. They are God-given, moment by moment forever. No one by having sunlight can ever possess enough to give light or see a moment longer than sunlight is given. Nor can forty years of holiness, wisdom and divine light supply for a moment longer than given, but is needed constantly and forever. I, in myself, am ever dark and bankrupt; in Christ I am ever light and rich. Oh, what a privilege to ever enjoy such gifts of God; ever new, ever fresh, never stale. The hidden life and treasure can be found only where hid; hid in Christ. And we draw nourishment, not by tapping and carrying away an occasional supply, but by abiding in the vine. No more can a Christian grow or develop himself than add to his stature, or make a hair white or black. "I am the vine, ye are the branches. He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit." "The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance."

(To be concluded.)

THE THREE UNCLEAN SPIRITS.

P. ALLING.

In the events of the sixth vial, which is to be poured out upon the great river Euphrates, as recorded in Rev. 16: 12–16, we have that of the workings of the "three unclean spirits, . . . which go forth," not only to "the kings of the earth," but to "the whole world, to gather" or prepare the world to be gathered in "the battle of that great day of God Almighty." In the 19th chapter we have a record of that battle, and its results, which most clearly is after the gathering away of the saints to meet the Lord in the air, where the marriage supper of the Lamb is to be celebrated on the sea of glass; from which place Christ, with his army of immortalized saints, comes down to meet that battle, as here recorded, and also in Zech. 14.

That this drying up process is now far advanced, as witnessed in the transpiring events of the Turkish empire, is so apparent that proof seems uncalled for in this place. That the nations of earth are in a high state of preparation for a mighty gathering, such as the world has never before witnessed, is also equally evident. That both of these events have been brought to their present fulness of perfection, under the guiding influences of these spirits, is likewise evident; for certain it is that no other influences than that of devils, operating upon the hearts of his faithful but deluded followers could cause them so to act; and these acts are all verging towards an end, and that end culminates in that great battle, a little in the future, which is to decide who shall have the dominion of the world to come.

The results of that battle will be world-wide, embracing all on one side or the other of all its inhabitants; consequently, a corresponding work of preparation of heart and of life must precede it, extending down to all of the two classes of contestants, both of which are now being marshaled by their leaders for that mighty event. The devil and his hosts are about prepared. Christ with his hosts of the mighty dead, who in this life obtained a good report, are also prepared. How is it with us, his living saints? Are we now walking with God, as did Enoch and Elijah, in a constant state of preparation, as were they when they ascended? If we are, it is well; if not, hasten for thy life the work of preparation, which work consists in an entire subjugation to the Master's will, as revealed in his holy word.

The whole armor of God must be put on, as directed, and constantly kept bright, with robes clean and white, without spot or wrinkle. This can only be accomplished through the aid of God's Spirit, which he is more willing to give to them that ask, than earthly parents are to give good gifts to their children. Now if we do not believe this, and have not that spirit dwelling in us, then we are not his children, and consequently belong to the other class, and are preparing to be gathered with the hosts of the wicked in that day.

Great care should be observed in relation to the Spirit; and we should know of a certainty whether we have the true Spirit, the Spirit of God, or are filled with a counterfeit spirit. Here the devil has laid a snare, by transforming himself into an angel of light, in order to turn away God's people from the true issue of earth's impending crisis. Many there are who are so swallowed up in the great doctrine of holiness of heart, of sanctification, and the offices of the Spirit, as to care for nothing else; and the bare introduction of the great fact of the speedy coming of Christ, stirs up a spirit of disquietude that will destroy a social visit, or a prayer-meeting, and must not be tolerated. Now it does appear to me that all who are in this condition of heart are being led astray by counterfeits of these unclean spirits, in their present mission of these last days. The working of these spirits is individually felt by every true child of God, from without and within, and that too with a power that admonishes us of our need of that overcoming grace which God can alone impart.

Their workings are observable in the family circle, in the churches, and, in fact, in every phase of human society, from the highest to the lowest departments. This may be witnessed on a large scale in the bundling and binding together in strong bands all of the various associations and societies of the world for the purpose of self-defence, and protection from impending evils, and for the introduction of an improved condition of the world, independent of the personal intervention of Christ, its destined King, as revealed in the Bible. It looks to me very much that, in this work, is fulfilled the parable of the gathering of the tares into bundles to be burned, as declared in Christ's parable of the wheat and the tares, in Matt. 13. Mark, this work is to be accomplished in the time of earth's great harvest, just prior to the gathering of the good wheat into the Lord's garner at the end of the age. As these spirits do the work that Christ said should be done at the appointed time, I see no good reason why they may not be called (as they are) "his angels." God uses both good angels and bad angels for the fulfillment of his word, just as he ever has done with good men and bad, all of whom are often called angels, or messengers, to do his commandments.

Modern spirit-rappings are another phase of their influence, which is a natural offshoot of that mystical interpretation of the Scriptures adopted by the church, spiritualizing the word, so as to dispense with the personal coming and reign of Christ, a literal resurrection of the dead, and the destruction of his enemies, as parts of his own revealed purposes in the introduction of the promised millennial blessedness. This turning aside from God's plan, to one of their own devising, has sapped the life and power of the church, and opened the flood-gates of error so widely as to admit the introduction by these spirits into her sanctuaries, by her members, all of these latter-day festivals, with their immoral appendages of gambling, dancing, feasting, eating and drinking with the drunken. O how dark, how sad is this picture! Yet I am constrained to believe it to be true. My dear brethren in the Lord, do look at it in the light of Bible truth, and act accordingly, and all will be well. Truly, darkness covers the land, and gross darkness the people, as saith the prophet Isaiah (60: 1).

Norwalk, O.

LEVITICUS 11: 44.

J. P. MARQUAND.

"Ye shall be holy, for I am holy."

The wonderful promises given to Abraham were attended by conditions. God said to him in Gen. 17: 1—"Walk before me, and be thou perfect" (upright); and also in relation to his chosen people, the Jews, he said, "Be ye holy, for I am holy." Holiness was inseparable from the favor and love of God. This is one of the conditions necessary to spiritual life, and is the connecting link to immortality. Without holiness we are but sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal. Volumes have been written on this subject, and much mystery thrown around it. It is not of earthly origin. It comes from above, from the Father of all mercies. It comes through the Son of God, by the outpouring of the divine Spirit. The apostle Paul gives a very correct idea of this matter, under the form of a marriage. He says in Romans 6th and 7th chapters, that we must be married (or united) to Christ, who is raised faom the dead; then "ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life"; or in other words, it is from our union to Christ that we have holiness, and in no other way. Let us be careful, then, that we come in at the door—Christ Jesus—and not try to climb up some other way, and thereby be a thief or a robber. In the twelfth chapter of Hebrews, we find how God makes us holy by chastening and subduing our proud, lofty spirits, and bringing us into subjection to his Son; softening down our waywardness; renewing our souls into the divine image. The apostle Peter also, in his second epistle, speaks of the way to get the "divine nature," by or through the precious promises, and being diligent to make our calling and election sure; and lastly, the apostle John in his epistles makes it more clear, by saying that we must believe the record of God's Son, keep his commandments, and have the love of God shed abroad in our hearts; this is the way to be holy.

Holiness is no product of the Adamic nature; it comes not through the first Adam. It is the offspring of Christ, the second Adam, the Lord from heaven. We "must be born again," born of the Spirit; made over and re-created in the divine effulgence; cleansed by the operation of the Holy Ghost, "having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water." Jesus in talking to his disciples said, "Ye are clean through the word that I have spoken unto you," "It is the Spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing." "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." Purity is an integral part of holiness. "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." When God wants to make use of men and women for his glory, and to publish his will, he takes those who are spiritually minded; who love and obey his truth; those who keep their bodies under; those who do not sin with their tongue; who walk in the light; those who deny themselves, take up their cross and follow him; those who live above the world and the flesh; those who have made a covenant with him by sacrifice. They are the elect, chosen and precious, washed, cleansed, purified; crying unto God day and night for deliverance. They shall be kept from evil, from sin, and from every false way; be kept by the power of God, through faith, unto the day of salvation. These are God's children, the little ones, who are the objects of his care and love; and woe be unto any person who molests or harms them; better that a millstone were hanged about his neck and that he were drowned in the depths of the sea.

We close this with an exhortation to be holy; for only such shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of God. It will be fearful for those who are unholy, impure, unclean, unsanctified, unsaved. They shall pass away unregretted, into outer darkness, where there shall be weeping, and wailing, and gnashing of teeth. Their hopes will be forever extinguished, and the pall of night will settle over them forever and ever. Great God, have mercy and compassion on the sons of men, who neglect their duty and thy word, and say to-morrow's pleasure shall be as this day, and much more abundant. Isa. 56: 12.

New York City.

THE CURSE OF THE HOUR.

There is too much lying. On every hand we meet with exaggeration, equivocation, deception. We call it all lying, and every one who intentionally varies one iota from the strictest fact and truth, is indeed a liar.

The expressman agrees to deliver a trunk for you at a certain place by a certain hour. He delivers it the day after, and thus lies. The grocer promises to send you the best tea in the market. He takes the first he lays his hands upon without any care for the quality, and dispatches it to you without a twinge. He is a liar. The printer promises to do your work cheaper than it can be done elsewhere in town. He forgets his promise—charges what he pleases—and lies. The tailor agrees to deliver a suit of clothes without fail by six in the evening. You get them in the morning, and the tailor is a liar. The dentist pledges his word that your teeth as filled by him will be all right for a dozen years. The fillings come out in six months, and the dentist lies. The man over the way is in need of a temporary loan. You lend him a small sum, which he promises to return at a given time. He keeps it a month over the time, and is a liar. An auctioneer tells you that a certain picture is by a master artist. He lies and is not worthy of trust. A salesman lies about his goods. A boot-maker lies about your watch. The gossiper at the dinner table tells exaggerated stories to astonish the ladies, and is nothing else than a liar. The florist assures you that his flowers were picked in the morning; when they are two days old. He lies, and will lie about anything. The book publisher advertises that his book is selling by the tens of thousands, when he has not sold a thousand. He is a liar and one door from the murderer.

Everywhere we hear lying, lying, lying. Men and women, who would knock you down if you called them liars. Deception is the rule rather than exception. Canvassers lie about companies. Brokers about stock. Editors lie about politics. Exaggeration and misrepresentation rule the hour, and are its curse.

Gentlemen—ladies—why can not the truth be told always and ever? Why all this deception and lying? Why so much falsifying and cheating? In the name of all that is true and good, we beg of you to do as you agree!

THE Baptist Union says: "The Bible, after all, is its own interpreter. We know of a preacher who draws crowds of hearers, whose only text books, beyond the Bible, are a concordance and dictionary. The charm of John Hall's preaching is the simplicity and perspicuity with which he makes plain the simplest truths by proof passages. This is a characteristic of Spurgeon's pulpit efforts. He never philosophizes, but clinches his utterance by a quotation from the Bible. He is in one sense the most dogmatic of preachers; but his is the dogmatism not of self-assertion, but of Bible quotations. He does not trouble himself with the philosophy of a question; it is enough that God says so. Of course, there is danger in this style of preaching of giving a wrong interpretation to a passage; but, after all, by comparing Scripture with Scripture, we shall be less likely to err in this direction than when we demand that the people shall believe our disquisition with as much confidence as belongs to a "Thus saith the Lord."

"HE HATH EXALTED THEM OF LOW DEGREE."—Moses was the son of a poor Levite—Gideon was a thresher—David was a shepherd boy—Amos was a herdsman—the apostles were "ignorant and unlearned." The reformer Zwingle emerged from a shepherd's hut amongst the Alps. Melanthon, the great theologian, was a workman in an armorer's shop. Martin Luther was the child of a poor miner. Carey, who originated the plan of translating the Bible into the language of the millions of Hindostan, was a shoemaker in Northampton. Dr. Morrison, who translated the Bible into the Chinese language, was a last maker in Newcastle. Dr. Milner was a herd-boy in Aberdeenshire. Dr. Adam Clarke was the child of Irish cotters. John Foster was a weaver. Andrew Fuller was a farm servant. William Jay, of Bath, was a herdsman.

MATTHEW HENRY was eminent for his meek and christian spirit under injuries. One o his favorite sayings was, "How pleasant it is to have the bird in the bosom sing sweetly."

INFIDELITY IN ITALY.

Those who believed in the conversion of of the world to Christ before his second coming, felt quite sure that when the Italians were delivered from the Papal yoke of ecclesiastical bondage, they would become true christians; and that this would probably be the signal for the commencement of the millennium. The Italians have now been free from the Papal yoke for about six years; but the evidences in favor of their conversion, or of that of the world, are no brighter now than they were fifty years ago; but on the contrary crime and infidelity are more abundant. The true children of the Lord are becoming more like Jesus, but the mass of professors are drinking deeper into the spirit of the world, and the unconverted are hardening their hearts like the Egyptian Pharaoh.

Mr. J. R. Mc Dougall, of Florence, Secretary of the Evangelization Committee of the Free Christian church in Italy, has recently issued his fifth annual report. After saying, "We enjoy as great freedom in all our operations as our friends do in London, Edinburgh, or New York," he goes on to say:

"When Italy opened to the gospel, many warned us that there would be seen an uprising of giant infidelity, as a reaction from Romanism. Strange to say, this did not immediately take place, though we were on the look-out for it. For five or seven years the Bible was afield, and not a whisper was heard of organized or energetic skepticism. The hand of God had been so visible in the affairs of Italian unity and independence that even infidelity held its breath for a time. But alas! the works of Renan and Strauss have done their work too well. One and another free-thinking society arose, the members of which bury their dead without the intervention of priest or pastor. Blatant irreligion, in hybrid forms, covers the land. Men in exalted positions are not slow to utter forth their impieties. Doubtless there are many members of our home legislatures who have no faith in the Unseen, but the tone of surrounding society prevents its expression. It is otherwise in the Italian Parliament. There men are not ashamed to rise in their places, and scout the very thought of a living and personal God.

Indeed, it is this phase of things which fills the minds of experienced evangelists, particularly that of Gavazzi, with alarm for the future. For Popery there is no fear. It has lost all hold on the intelligence of the country. When challenged to discussion, the priests either beat a timely retreat or are easily discomfited, even in the judgment of their adherents. But to meet the varied forms of rampant unbelief requires thoughtful preparation, and one of the most anxious employments of late, has been to provide the very best works of christian writers in Great Britain and America, so that our young men, preparing in the Roman College for the gospel ministry, may be thoroughly equipped for the coming struggle with Spiritualism, materialism, and every other form of modern doubt and error." M. G.

HEIGHT OF NEW JERUSALEM.

In Revelation 21: 16, the common version reads: "The city lieth four-square, and the length is as large as the breadth; and he measured the city with the reed, twelve thousand furlongs. The length, and the breadth, and the height of it are equal." Twelve thousand furlongs equal one thousand five hundred miles. It does not appear from the text whether each side of the city is twelve thousand furlongs, or whether it is twelve thousand furlongs around the entire city, thus making each side three hundred and seventy-five miles in extent instead of fifteen hundred. We are inclined to adopt the smaller size, and even then it will be a "great city."

If the length, and the breadth, and the height of it are equal," then, at least, it must be three hundred and seventy-five miles high, which would seem to be out of proportion, indicating that there may be some fault in the translation. This fact has caused a careful examination of this text by Granville Penn, London. He has given a translation of the entire New Tessament. In his Supplemental Annotations to the Book of the New Covenant, he gives good evidence that, according to the original Greek, the passage should read as follows:

"And he that spake to me, had for a measure a golden reed (or rod) to measure the city, and its gates. And the city lieth four-square; and its length is the same as its breadth; and he measured the city with the reed twelve thousand furlongs; its length and its breadth are equal; and the height of its wall is one hundred and forty-four cubits. Thus, the length or extent of the wall encompassing the city, is measured by stadia; but its height, by cubits. Bengel, who was not aware of the various vitiations of the text, was urged to conjecture that the numbers 12,000 and 144 intended the same measure, by different modes of computation; and he even wished to expel the word cubits, though it is found in all the copies consulted by Birch and Matthæi, in Rome and Moscow. The 144 "cubits" constitute the "vast altitude," ascribed to the wall in verse 13 (Greek 12)." M. G.

THE TWO RESURRECTIONS.

In your reply to the question in regard to the first resurrection, by J. Emerson, in this week's Crisis, you say: "Those who are to die the second death do not live again till a thousand years after the resurrection of the saints."

Will you please to harmonize this assertion with your understanding of Dan. 12: 1, 2. Notice, Daniel says, "At that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book of life;" and farther, "many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake; some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." Do you understand from this language of Daniel, that there are two times of awakening? (1.) Daniel says "at that time" these things shall take place. If the wicked do not awake "till a thoutand years after the saints," can it be said of them that they awake at "that time" to which Daniel referred?

(2) Again, Jesus says, "the hour is coming in the which ALL that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth." Don't they all come forth at the same time? What reason for saying the righteous rise first? I understand from the language of the Savior—"In the which"—that all are to come forth during the hour mentioned. Now, supposing we admit that the hour is one thousand years long, this does not help me out of the difficulty, for the Revelator says: "But the rest of the dead (you say this refers to the wicked) lived not again until the thousand years were finished;" and this of course throws them outside of the hour mentioned by the Savior.

(3) I write with no other motive than to draw out the truth in regard to this question. We want truth if it dries up the whole fountain of tradition, as it surely will. Your Bro. in Christ, ROBT. C. BROWN.

South Butler, June 14th,'76.

(1) The expression in Dan. 12: 1—"At that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book," refers to the time previously mentioned at the beginning of the verse, which reads: "At that time shall Michael stand up, the great prince, which standeth for the children of thy people." The expression in the second verse:—"Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt," we understand teaches that there are two times of awakening." Some years since, we took occasion to consult Prof. Noyes, of Harvard college, and Prof. Stephen Vail, distinguished Hebrew scholars; also the Jewish Rabbi of Boston, all of whom said that the original of Dan. 12: 2 teaches two resurrections, at different points of time.

(2) We think the expression, "At that time," in Dan. 12: 1, cannot be made to apply to the resurrection of those who rise "to shame and everlasting contempt," mentioned in the last part of the verse two.

(3) The teaching of Jesus must be in harmony with that of Daniel. The term "hour," in John 5: 28, evidently means a period of time, but not definitely sixty minutes. In the Bible, we often find events far apart spoken of in the same verse. For instance, when Jesus was upon earth he read at one time in the synagogue at Nazareth, Isa. 61: 1–2, stopping in the middle of the second verse, evidently because the last part was not to be fulfilled till he came the second time, over eighteen hundred years later. The two verses read:

"The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound; to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord, and the day of vengeance of our God."

In Luke 4: 16–21, we have the record of his reading, and remarks. When he had read, "To proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord," "he closed the book, and he gave it to the minister and sat down. And the eyes of all them that were in the synagogue were fastened on him. And he began to say unto them, This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears." Had he read the whole of verse two, his last statement would not have been true, because "the day of vengeance of our God" had not then come. Yet one reading that verse would naturally conclude that "the acceptable year of the Lord, and the day of vengeance of our God" was one and the same time; but Jesus knew that was not its meaning. We think the same is true of "the hour" in John 5: 28. This seems certain, from the fact, that after Jesus went to his Father, he received a further revelation, which he sent to John, upon the Isle of Patmos. In this last revelation he states definitely the time between the resurrection of the righteous and the wicked, which was not given to Daniel, or any other prophet. We do not see how he could speak more plainly, than when he said, after referring to those who had "part in the first resurrection," at the beginning of the thousand years: "But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished." Rev. 20: 5. M. G.

HARD TIMES.

From all quarters comes the cry—"Hard times." The people in the South feel this much more than we do in the North. The prospect there is very gloomy, and continually growing darker. We learn that cases of suffering for food are becoming common.

BRO. B. T. R. FOSTER, Smithville, Tenn., writes May 17th, 1876:—

"I am paralyzed from the hips down, and otherwise greatly afflicted; have a wife and nine little children—the older ones girls—the eldest but sixteen yesrs of age; and in our situation, which I will briefly describe, they can find no remunerative employment by which to obtain support. I live in a very thinly settled, poor, barren part of the country, where the desolations of war, repeated subsequent failure of crops, recent heavy loss of meats by warm winter, heavy taxation, and long continued financial stringency, render it exceedingly difficult for even the able bodied poor to live. Add to these things a most malevolent political antipathy, because of my having been a loyalist, and federal officer in the civil department during and after the war; as well as the entire absence of any religious affinity, and you have an array of insuperable difficulties, which makes the charities of our situation wholly inadequate to supply our necessities, and causes my dear little suffering children to cry around me almost every day for food, which I am utterly powerless to supply. This very morning, they have no breakfast, and their little pale, imploring faces, two of them lying sick in bed, appeal to my bleeding heart, and urge me to the painful task of calling on strangers for immediate help. O God! speed the day when our coming Lord shall take them to his bosom and say, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven," and shall bid the lame leap for joy. I am seldom able to write and can only appeal to the few, who I think may be touched with a feeling of human infirmity. Some, yea most of those to whom I appeal, only respond, "Hard times," with a few words of condolence, as much as to say, "Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled," notwithstanding they give not the things needful to the body. What doth it profit?"

ENGLAND AND RUSSIA IN THE EAST.

As we believe that the prophecies present England and Russia as leading antagonistic kingdoms in the last national struggle, which will terminate in the "great battle of God Almighty" at the second advent of Christ, we feel especially interested in every movement and statement which manifests their real positions and purposes relating to the great Eastern movement. We clip the following from the Boston Journal, which seems to indicate the direction of the present political currents from London and St. Petersburgh, condensing the storm-clouds ominously around the "Holy Mountains." J. C.

The relations of Russia and England in Central Asia constitute a problem which perpetually recurs in English Parliamentay debates and the discussions of the English press.

This often-repeated declaration that England if she should find it necessary, would be able by force of arms to protect her Eastern possessions against the menace of Russia, gives particular interest to a pamphlet lately published in Vienna by an Austrian officer, Captain Debelak, who has visited Persia and other countries in Asia, and presents a comprative survey of the strength of England and Russia. He does not hesitate to pronounce England powerless to foil Russia's designs, to retard her progress or to compel her to stop. The last war in Afghanistan, he says, has shaken the faith of Asiatic nations in the military power of England, while the career of Russia in Central Asia has been unbroken by a single defeat. Moreover, England lacks the power of winning the attachment of the inferior races under her rule, while Russia has been singularly sucessful in this respect. It is the opinion of the author that Russia will not attempt an attack on India from the northeast, because the passes on that side present almost insurmountable difficulties to the passage of an army; but she will be able by her agents to stir up an insurrection in the disaffected districts o Northern India, and by this means support her operations in the northwest.

The Russian army of the Caucasus comprises 178,500 infantry, 44,000 cavalry and 408 guns, with 5000 militia. The Russians are armed with breach-loading guns, and are gallant, disciplined and well trained. The total force at the disposal of England is 130,000, of whom 100,000 are native troops. Of these at least 80,000 must be left to take care of the 70,000 miles of territory in India. This would leave 50,000 for the army of operations, of whom 10,000 would be required to keep communications on the long line between Herat and the Bolan Pass. Russia, on the other hand, could concentrate an army of 100,000 trained soldiers between Mero and Herat. It is hardly possible to believe that the 40.000 men in the English army, most of them natives, could defeat so great a force; but if the Russians were beaten they could fall back on Mero and wait for reinforcements. If the English were beaten they would probably be annihilated by the Afghans before they regained the Indian frontier, to say nothing of the danger of a mutiny in India itself, occasioned by the Russian victory. In a word, in the writer's opinion, Russia would risk nothing and England everything, in case of a conflict. These views have been republished in England, occasioning some discussion and not a little disquietude."

THE WORK IN NORTH ALABAMA AND TENNESSEE.

TO THE A. A. M. SOCIETY.

Dear Brethren:—Since my return from North Carolina, I have not been idle. On the 31st of March I started for Bridgeport, to attend and answer some questions before the Court the next day; and as I felt impressed to try to preach, I did so at night, at the house of Mr. B. Moore. Next morning, Saturday, April 1st, was very rainy, and continued so for twenty-four hours. At two P. M., I took train for Ooltewah, Tenn., arrived at ten P. M., and started on foot through the rain and the darkness for Bethel Church, some four miles from town. When I reached Ooltewah Creek, I found that I could not get near the foot log on account of the water. Here I was, about fifty miles from home, in the woods, about midnight, wet and drowsy; only one mile to the church, but I must walk about twelve miles to cross the stream on a railroad bridge, and then foot it back on the opposite side to the church. I did not see how I could do this in time for meeting Sunday morning, and not be worn out, so as to be unable to preach. After serious meditation and prayer, in the rain, mud, and dark, I made my way back to Ooltewah; went into Mr. Green's boarding house, and slept with a stranger till daylight.

I then took train for home. Wednesday night, April 5th, preached at my father's house. Saturday and Sunday, the 8th and 9th, at Shilo church. Found them still trying to serve God. These mountain people are very poor, but seem to love the Lord, and manifest much charity toward all his servants. Sunday P. M., rode and walked together to my home, about twenty miles, and preached to a house full of my neighbors, in my own cabin. Wednesday evening (12th) preached at the house of my mother-in-law, a sister christian. Saturday evening (15th) at Bro. A. J. Wausis', near Fackler. Sunday at Peter's Pond church; audience large and attentive. I came on the train, but having only seventy cents left, and the people being poor, did not offer any "scrip" to pay my fare, so I came half way home in a wagon, with Bro. Carlton; then walked the other half. Saturday (22nd), at Bethesda church, where I met Brn. Smith, Waldrop, and Lowry. Met Sunday morning, and enjoyed a blessed little social meeting; then Bro. J. J. Smith gave us a timely sermon on the reliability of the Bible. Saturday evening (29th), at the house of Bro. George Ridley, in Doran's Cove; house full. Sunday, A. M., at the school-room of Prof. Geo. W. Bowers, with Bro. Smith. We spoke to a respectable and attentive audience.

Saturday, May 6th, Bro. J. J. Smith having gone to Bethel for me, I went to Cowan, Tenn., to visit and preach for the friends who had so kindly said, "Come again." Evening, attended the Young Men's prayer-meeting, in the Baptist meeting. I must say that this is the most encouraging prospect for the upbuilding of God's cause I have seen for some time. Many young men engaged in public prayer, a thing not very often the case in the South. But the sisters are silent, only in the cheerful songs. I told them in the meeting the sisters ought to talk and pray, as well as sing. Sunday A. M., heard Bro. Lipscomb of the Christian church. At three o'clock P. M., I preached in the Baptist church. Bro. Wm. Cherry, a Baptist minister, was present, who said, in following my sermon on the promise to the fathers—"It don't matter where it is; whether up yonder, or down here, so we get it." I could but ask, "If God says it shall be 'under the whole heaven' (Dan. 7: 27), or the 'world' (Rom. 4: 13), or the 'earth' (Matt. 5: 5), does it matter if men say it will be up yonder?" In the evening I tried to preach again at the Christian church, Bro. Cherry again present. After my effort to give the people "present truth," and to impress it by the order of the seven churches of Asia, and showing that we are far down toward the end of the Laodicean age of the church, Bro. C., who is a profound scholar, said that my definitions were in accordance with the lexicons, and admonished the people to get ready for it. At the close of the meeting, the rain poured in torrents, so the people could not leave till a late hour; but the time was devoted to singing, by some good singers.

Here, from Saturday till Monday, my wife and I enjoyed the hospitality of Brn. and Sisters Stewart, Burke, and Sartin; beside meeting many cheerful faces, who kindly invited us to visit them; but our stay was too short. Bro. Sartin has had the misfortune to lose his leg, which is a sore trial to him. Pray for his encouragement. Wednesday evening, May 9th, at Peacock's church, met an attentive audience, and tried to tell them the "good tidings."

Friday (12th), I started for Cherokee and Ettawa counties, Ala., on foot, with a heavy pair of saddle-bags on my shoulder. Came to the Tennessee River, and Bro. Alias Maxwell kindly furnished me a horse to ride to Shilo, where I preached Saturday A. M. At night I spoke in the dwelling of Bro. Benj. Cuzzort's. Sunday A. M., preached at the church. Bro. F. M. Avans was with me both days. After preaching Sunday A. M, we gathered around the Lord's table with solemnity, to show our Lord's death till he comes again. I then walked three miles to the State line between Ga. and Ala., and in the woods on the Ga. side of the line joined in matrimony Mr. William Dikes and Miss Margaret Higdon. I have married many here, because it is much nearer to get license in Ga. Then to Bro. Wilkinson's for dinner, about 3 P. M. After dinner, down the mountain about four miles, where I spoke in the dwelling of Bro. John Long, who is a member of another church, but threw open his door for the "heretic." Bro. Thomas Payne was with me. Monday A. M., a young Methodist Bro., James Payne, came with a horse and took me to Valley Head, Dekalb Co., Ala., where I had an appointment at Bro. Wm. Lee's, at night, but it rained very hard, and kept the people away.

Tuesday (16th), I spoke in Valley Head church. A young minister, Prof. Hosmer, was with me. To-night I am to preach at Bro. Wm. Lee's, and still await the movings of the Spirit to go on my journey. Dear brethren and sisters, pray for me. My trials seem heavier than ever before, but I am trusting in Jesus. Pray for my loved ones at home. Your Bro., waiting for Jesus,

JOHN A. CARGILE.

ANOTHER NEW WORK.

A "DICTIONARY OF CHRISTIAN ANTIQUITIES," by William Smith, LL. D. (author of the Bible Dictionary), in two octavo vols. just published, by Worthington & Co., Hartford, Conn.

Every christian student will be glad to possess this Cyclopædia of christian information. Often when wading through volumes of history to get information on some matter of christian antiquity, has the desire been felt for a work that embraced all the items of such history as has been presented, in a condensed form, systematically arranged. Such is the work before us. The work is designed as a continuation of Dr. Smith's celebrated Dictionary of the Bible, beginning at that period where the latter closed, it gathers up the facts of Eclesiastical history; during ten centuries, of the views, rites, ordinances, customs, discussions, organizations, and various workings of the christian church, in all countries, and all shades of belief and practice.

Dr. Smith's abilities for overseeing and arranging such a work are well known to scholars in Europe and America. The scale and range of the work may be partially surmised from the fact that the number of co-laborers with Dr. Smith, in preparing this dictionary, was seventy-seven (and occupied ten years in preparation), and these from among the best Biblical scholars and historians of Europe.

The work for variety and authority, must be without a rival in the English language. Full notice is given of every grade of church officers, of every sub-division among these grades; of every title assumed by or bestowed upon any church officer. It does not discuss what the power of church government ought to be, but sets forth what it has been. The councils of the first ten centuries are all mentioned, and in the most important ones the story of their proceedings is given in detail. The methods of discipline are set forth. Due attention is given to the multitude of questions which arose in ecclesiastical law, and in civil law. Offences against morals and against order are discussed as crimes and as sins. Church property and revenues are detailed. The early christian worship, liturgies, and peculiarities, and their music are given.

The article on Baptism may be cited to show the thoroughness evinced throughout the work. Every historical, liturgical, or monumental fact of the first ten centuries, which bears upon the important discussions in regard to this rite, is here mentioned. Whatever the view of the reader may be, he cannot fail to find in this article information of value. The single and trine immersion, preparations, ceremonies, anointings, confessions, are stated. Architecture, arts, and moral culture, as introduced by christian believers, are duly noticed. Their beliefs, legislation, worship, their ceremonials, vestments, instruments, vessels and insignia; their social life, sacred places, days and seasons; their graves or catacombs, in which they now rest, are given us. Every reader will find clear and reliable intelligence on the doctrinal points taught by all grades of the early church; but is left at liberty to form his own conclusions respecting them. Authorities are referred to on every important point. The music of the early church is treated of very minutely.

In an interesting article on catacombs, the methods of burial are fully explained. Celibacy, contract of marriage, immunities and privileges of the clergy and excommunications, are fully treated upon. In short, we will only add, that the work is the greatest contribution to christian literature which has yet been, or will ever be furnished the christian church. Many christian readers and writers will ever feel grateful to Dr. Smith for preparing such a notable work, to Prof. M. B. Riddle of the Hartford Theological Seminary, for editing the American edition, and translating from foreign languages the numerous citations and quotations from the Fathers, found in the English edition, and to Messrs. A. D. Worthington & Co., of Hartford, Ct., for bringing this valuable work within the reach of the christian communities of this country. The work is sold by subscription agents. When introduced to you, it will be difficult not to subscribe for it.

I. C. WELLCOME.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

FROM RECENT JOURNALS.—(By Thos. Fitzsimons.)

DECLINE OF ENGLISH COMMERCE.—The Liverpool Courier says:—"The number of magnificent steamships lying idle in Liverpool and Birkenhead docks is unparalleled in the history of commerce, and the probability is that the number will increase instead of diminish."

DECLINE OF AMERICAN COMMERCE.—The New York Times says:—"It may, perhaps, be imagined that New York is the only city which suffers much from the extraordinary decline of the import trade, but the statistics of the commerce of Boston show a much greater proportionate falling off in imports at that point. For the first twenty-one weeks of the calendar year, the value of the foreign goods entered at Boston is only $14,780,000, against $23,640,000 for the same period in 1875. This is at the rate of about $36,000,000 for the whole year. The imports of Boston have fallen off one-half, the imports of New York one-third; the other American ports show a similar decline."

LEAVING THE PAPAL CHURCH.—A significant document is published in the Nova Scotia papers. It is a letter to the Romish priest at Pictou, where Father Chiniquy has been laboring for a time, signed by thirty-five persons, and giving their reasons for withdrawing from the Catholic Church. It commences with the statement that God has given them grace to know and give up their errors, and ends with an expressed determination to take the gospel of Christ as their only guide hereafter.

THE GOSPEL SPREADING.—In the region bordering the Rio de la Plata of South America, the American Bible Society has distributed over 50,000 copies of the Bible, during the last eleven years. At first the Bible was prohibited there, and in some cases publicly burnt. Now it circulates freely, and preachers are called for.

ACTIVITY AMONG THE NATIONS.—The New York Herald says:—"Wherever we look among the nations we find activity. Brazil is now forcing into notice, with railways, education, and free labor. Africa is in the morning of new life, and over the world, however disturbed, mankind are struggling with one another, and with nature as never before."

SOCIALISM IN RUSSIA.—Russian journals announce that socialism within the past few years has spread to an enormous extent throughout the Russian empire, and that the growth of democratic ideas among all classes is arousing the earnest efforts of the government for its suppression. Large numbers of arrests have been made both among the nobility and peasantry, but despite all efforts this new political phase is spreading among all classes.

DECLINE OF ENGLISH LAWS.—According to recent English journals, a marked decline both of respect for and enforcement of the laws in England has been manifest the past few years. These journals lament the loss of the wholesome respect the laws formerly swayed over the criminal classes, and also the decline in their once honest administration.

SUICIDES IN THE UNITED STATES.—The St. Louis Republican, which has been investigating this subject, publishes its results from the preserved statistics for the past twelve months, the result of which it says shows that not even France, which has had an unenviable eminence in this matter, can now compete with our own country in the number in the past year of self murders. It adds that in no epoch of our history has suicide prevailed to such an extraordinary extent as at the present time.

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The third quarterly conference of the church of God worshiping in Vt., met as per appointment at Hardwick, June 6th. Having no business to legislate upon, the Lord's business was attended to by preaching the word, prayer, and exhortation. Ministers present during the conference were—A. A. Hoyt, A. Damon, H. B. Quimby, W. W. Sutherland, A. Gordon, J. H. Smith, and H. T. Jones. The meetings from the beginning were very interesting and profitable. It was remarked by one of the preaching brethren that this was the best conference which has been holden in the State for two years. One has been hopefully converted, and others, we believe, are convicted, and the church strengthened.

H. B. QUIMBY, Asst. Secretary.

Correspondence.

From Sr. J. A. Goodrich.

Dear ones in Christ:—We are told that the path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day. The nearer we live to Christ, the brighter it grows. I know it by experience. How blessed to know for ourselves. I do not want some one to tell me how good the Lord is; I had rather know for myself. No one is able to tell us the deep things of God; we must experience them to know them. Jesus told Peter "that flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." How delightful to live at the feet of our dear Lord and Master, and know that he owns us as his children.

When I think of Jesus, and what he has done for me, I am willing to do his will, and to be wherever he places me. If he will own and bless me as one of his unworthy children, it is all I ask. I will be content with my lot, no matter what I am called to pass through. I know that all things work together for my good. I have the blessed promise, that Jesus will never leave nor forsake me. I rejoice to-day, that I was ever worthy to be one of the suffering ones; not because I like to suffer, but I am to be made perfect through suffering. I should never have seen how good the Lord is, if it had not been for this. This is what has brought me near the cross, and I have learned to trust in a risen Savior.

New Britain, Ct.

From Bro. C. H. Hurd.

Thinking the numerous readers of the Crisis would be cheered and encouraged, while toiling amid the perils of these last days of old earth's probation, in learning that the cause of Christ is prospering, at least in some sections of our land,—even though it may be in places to us remote and unknown; yet it gives joy to all true followers of Jesus to know that people are being saved anywhere. For this reason I write that you may know of the Lord's kind dealings with the people of Bonny Eagle, Me.

For several months past, a great and very marked revival interest has been manifested in that place and vicinity, and many have openly professed faith in Christ. The work commenced in the prayer-meetings with the church. Several volunteered to join the little band of worshipers at the chapel. The good work thus begun has been greatly augmented. It has gone on, sometimes with a minister in attendance, but oftener, we judge, without; but the absence of the preacher did not affect the interest in the meetings; but they continued with unabated power until the number of the reclaimed and converted has reached forty-five, we think. Thirteen have been baptized, and there are more to follow on Sunday, June 25th.

Bonny Eagle, Me., June 12th, 1876.

From Bro. E. M. Andrews.

Dear Readers of the Crisis:—I wish to give you my experience in using, and leaving off tobacco. I cannot distinctly remember when I first used it, I was so young; but my parents have told me it was a mother's mark. At any rate, I always, since I can remember, had a strong appetite for it. Until I was twenty years of age, I used it unrestricted. At that time, I obtained an antidote, and by the help of that, and a strong will of my own, I kept from the use of tobacco for nearly two years; still I hankered all the time for it; and commenced its use again, more than ever, and so continued a slave to it until last November. Bro. H. S. Mitchell came to this place, and under his teaching, I gave my heart to the Lord. Then I thought I must break off the habit of tobacco-chewing; so I made the effort, and succeeded two days without using any, either chewing or smoking, for I did both; but at the end of two days, I had to accede to a twenty-four or five years acquired appetite, and used it again. That showed me that my strength was not sufficient for the undertaking.

About this time, I read a piece in the Crisis of a brother's asking the Lord to help him to rid himself of a tobacco habit, and the Lord heard and answered his prayer. That gave me strength to trust the Lord with my case, for I could not handle it myself, and I prayed to God to take away from me the appetite for tobacco, and from that moment the appetite left me, and from that time to the present, I have not wanted tobacco; and when I am with others that use it, it does not make me desire to use it, for my appetite for the vile poison is dead. God cured me at once; bless his name for his goodness toward the children of men.

Now, dear reader, I have pointed you to the antidote that cured me, and if you are so afflicted, I can safely recommend you to the same physician, for he will never fail, if we will but call him in, and tell him our infirmities and ask him to cure us. May the God of heaven bless and strengthen all those that are slaves to the vile weed, that they may purify themselves, even as he is pure; and meet the soon coming Lord with a clean mouth, and a pure heart. This is the prayer of your brother in the gospel.

St. George, Me., June 4th, 1876.

Obituaries.

LAWRENCE. In New Bedford, Mass., June 3rd, 1876, Bro. Paul Lawrence, aged sixty-five years, four months.

Among the faithful, patient, suffering ones was Bro. Lawrence; and his death was the falling asleep of another servant of God in this place. Within four months, four have been laid away here for the resurrection; all looking for the coming of the Life-Giver.

Bro. L.'s sickness was a lingering one, in which he suffered greatly. To him death was a welcome messenger. His disease was a cancerous affection of the stomach. For a month previous to his death, he took nothing as a nourishment.

Bro. Lawrence was well known in this city and vicinity, and bore an untarnished reputation for honesty and fidelity. As a christian, he was firm in his faith, consistent and courteous. He has left a beloved wife, who is in feeble health, but cheerfully looking forward to the coming of Jesus, when she will meet her dear husband, where pain and death will come no more.

Since the death of Bro. Lawrence, the following record has been found among his private papers, dated Sept. 21 (1875), and which his friends wish published in connection with the notice of his death. I. I. LESLIE.

SEPT. 21.

"Our life is but a vapor; it soon passeth away. I have been looking back on my past life, from my earliest recollections until the present time, and it seems but a short period. Although I have lived nearly sixty-five years, yet my life seems more like a dream than a reality. It seems but a little while ago that I was a school-boy, living with my father and mother, anxiously looking forward for the time to come when I should be twenty-one years old, be of age, be a man, and for myself. I verily thought I should then be happy. But alas! when I came to that time, I was anything but happy; for I then felt that my father and mother were no longer under obligations to look after my necessities and wants, and supply them as they always had done. I was left to my own resources, to look out for myself as best I could. At this time, I resolved to ask God to be my father and friend, protector and guide, while passing through this cold-hearted, selfish, wicked and unfeeling world; and I believe he has cared for me ever since. He has kept me from many a snare, and into which I should have run, had it not been for his watchful care over me. I feel that I will trust in him for all time to come. I expect to soon fall asleep in death; but I will fear no evil; for I believe that thou art able and will bring me up again from the grave, and give me an immortal body, free from pain and suffering, and death itself. Oh, I long for the time to come when the curse shall be removed from the earth, and every vestige of sin be swept from the universe of God.

THIS IS MY VIEW OF DEATH.

I believe I shall live just as long as I can breathe; and when I cannot breathe longer, I shall die. I believe that when I cease to live, all intelligence, and time, and everything connected with this world will that very moment with me cease, and all will remain so until Jesus comes to raise us up and give us an immortal life. I believe in a literal resurrection of the dead, both of the just and the unjust, when Jesus comes the second time. I believe that Jesus Christ did exist somehow with the Father, from the creation of the world. This is my faith, as I understand the word of God. I believe the Bible is God's word and will to man. I believe that Jesus Christ will soon come again to this earth; and that when he does come, the work of redemption will be finished up forever; no more time for probation and repentance, but one unchanging scene throughout all eternity. Amen.

O Lord, give me grace and patience to bear this severe suffering and trial. O Lord, thou hast been my refuge and support these many weary years, and I feel it sweet to lean upon and trust in thee in this hour of suffering and trial. O Lord, please let the passage to the dark valley of death be as easy as possible. But not my will, but thine be done." (Signed) P. LAWRENCE.

BROWN. Fell asleep in Worcester, Mass., May 27th, 1876, Amos W., youngest son of W. N. and A. E. Brown, aged six years and three months.

He was taken sick Friday, and died on Saturday. Little Amos was much beloved by all who knew him. He was unconscious most of the time during his sickness; but came to his right mind a few moments before he died, kissed his father, and sung,

"Hold the fort, for I am coming,
Jesus signals still,
Wave the answer"—

and here he stopped. That little voice will not be heard again till Jesus comes. We tried to comfort the mourning friends with the words of St. Paul—1 Thess. 4th chapter. M. A. POTTER.

AUSTIN. At Smith's Cove, Digby Co., Nova Scotia, April 23d, 1876, after a few days' illness of croup, Jennie E. L., second daughter of Robert and Catherine Austin, aged six years, and four months.

The enemy has again entered the family circle, and another little jewel is laid away to sleep till the Life-giver comes. Ella and Jennie rest side by side in the land of the enemy; but "Thus saith the Lord, Refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears; thy work shall be rewarded, saith the Lord, and they (the children) shall come again from the land of the enemy." May this promise of God comfort the hearts of the sorrowing ones. Funeral services conducted by Bro. J. M. Tozier, of Bear River.

JOHN W. MCAULIFFE.

HUTCHINS. In Oxford, Me., May 8th, 1876, Bro. John S. Hutchins, aged fifty-two years, and five mouths.

Bro. H. was an ardent lover of the truths we hold. A large circle of friends deeply mourn his death. May God grant grace to the surviving members of the family, and sustain them, and bring them to meet the husband and father in the land of rest, that remains for the people of God. Funeral attended by the writer.

J. WHITMAN.

MARTIN. In Otisfield, Me., May 15th, 1876, Elsie Martin, aged thirty-six years.

These truths she loved. Words of comfort by the writer. J. WHITMAN.

COLBY. In Haverhill, Mass., May 6th, after an illness of twelve hours, Mrs. Sarah E. Colby, our mother, aged seventy years and four months.

FORD. In Haverhill, Mass., May 13th, 1876, Bro. Abram Ford, aged thirty-five years.

He had been a christian for a number of years; and as friends wept to behold the fatal results of his disease, he exhorted them to desist, telling them he was going safe over.

"How long shall death, the tyrant reign,
And triumph o'er the just?" E. O.

FOREIGN NEWS.

BRUSSELS, June 13. In the Belgian parliamentary elections the Catholics have obtained a majority of twelve in the Chamber.

June 14th. Great agitation still prevails, but there has been less disturbance to-day than yesterday. Bands of rioters continue to hoot and hiss in front of the Catholic institutions. Some windows have been broken, and a few arrests made. A Cabinet council is called for to-morrow. At Antwerp the disturbances were renewed to-day. Many thousands marched through the streets shouting "Down with the Ministers." The mob attacked and wrecked a Catholic Institute. The gendarmes charged upon the rioters, and several persons were wounded. A number of arrests were made.

June 16. A dispatch dated Constantinople at nine o'clock this morning says the Ministers were assembled in council last night at the residence of Midhat Pasha, President of the Council, when an officer who had been recently dismissed from the service, entered the Council Chamber armed with a revolver, and shot and instantly killed Hassien Avni Pasha, Minister of War, and Rachid Pasha, Minister of Foreign Affairs, and seriously wounded Kaiserli Pasha Minister of the Marine. He also killed the Aid-de-Camp of the Grand Vizier, and a servant of Midhat Pasha. The assassin was arrested. The motive for this terrible crime is supposed to be revenge for dismissal.

CONSTANTINOPLE, June 18. Hassan, the assassin of the Turkish Cabinet officers, was hanged yesterday. After he gained admission to the Council Chamber he locked the door and fired at Avni Pasha. The lamp was broken and only a candle was left burning in the room. The assassin then threw himself on Avni and plunged a cutlass into his bowels. He next fired at the Minister of Marine. and finally at Rachid Pasha. The police overpowered and captured him as he was attempting to kill Midhat Pasha. After he was seized he said he was sorry he failed to kill Midhat. The Minister of Marine will probably recover. The two murdered Ministers were buried during yesterday. Hassan was known prior to the murder as a devoted follower of the late Sultan. He was formerly Aid-de-Camp to Yussuf, the oldest son of Abdul Aziz. Some attribute the assassination to the adherents of Yussuf, who is represented as attempting a military revolution. It is stated that Hassan, when about to shoot Avni Pasha, said something apparently meaning that he desired to avenge the deposition of Abdul Aziz. Rachid Pasha was not shot, but stabbed while endeavoring to disarm the assassin.

LONDON, June 18. There is nothing of particular interest going on except the affairs in Constantinople and the prospects of the Eastern question generally. The Russian journals, judging from the language they use, are very much excited against England. The Golos threatens that Russia will throttle Turkey before the eyes of England. The two countries, Great Britain and Russia alone, now seem to threaten the peace of Europe.

St. Petersburg, June 16. Advices received here from Tabreez, a large walled city in the province of Azerbaijan, in North Persia, announce that the plague has broken out in Persian Koordistan.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

St. Albans, Vt. June 18. St. John, P. Q., has to-day been visited with the greatest fire it has ever experienced—as great, in proportion to its population and wealth, as were the Chicago and Boston fires. A territory 600 feet in width, and one mile in length, embracing the entire business portion of the town, is burned over. Seven hotels, every store except two or three insignificant groceries, nine churches, the Custom House, Post Office, Court House, and United States Consulate, the two banks, docks, vessels in the river, a portion of the highway bridge across the Richelieu river, the St. John woolen mills, employing about sixty hands, the stone china warerooms, and about 250 stores and houses are reduced to ashes.

A CENTENNIAL MESSAGE.

From the President of the United States.

Washington, June 6, 1876.

To the Editor of the Sunday-School Times, Philadelphia:

Your favor of yesterday, asking a message from me to the children and youth of the United States, to accompany your Centennial number, is this moment received.

My advice to Sunday schools, no matter what their denomination, is: Hold fast to the Bible as the sheet-anchor of your liberties; write its precepts in your hearts, and practise them in your lives.

To the influence of this book are we indebted for all the progress made in true civilization, and to this we must look as our guide in the future.

"Righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin is a reproach to any people." Yours respectfully,

U. S. GRANT.

The Pope was eighty-four years old on the 13th of May. The 25th anniversary of his priesthood occurred on the 12th of April, and if he lives until the 16th of June he will have occupied the pontifical throne just thirty years.

Dear brethren, as we may be permitted to have one more gathering on this consecrated ground before the Lord comes, let us avail ourselves of this opportunity to do all we can to arouse the church, and save the lost. We intend to secure good laborers to help in this blessed work to give the last notes of warning to a lost world; for the omens which are now looming up in Europe strongly indicate that our work will soon be closed up for this world.

HENRY V. DAVIS, for the Com.

Tent Meeting.

Through the kindness of friends, I have been able to purchase a tent, and, the Lord willing, shall pitch it in Pepperel, Mass., June 27th, 1876, and hold meetings as long as the Lord may direct. The people are eager to hear the truth, and will do all they can to sustain it. The few who are identified with us are poor in this world's goods, and the prospects of remuneration are very small; but we want the people to hear, and how can they hear without a preacher? I would say to our dear preaching brethren, who are able, to give us a call, and help the cause along; and if we are not able to remunerate you, will not feel that your labors are not appreciated. We invite our brethren and sisters in neighboring towns to come and help us save the perishing. We have but a short time to labor for the Master, and let us do all we can to save the lost. The tent will be pitched near Bro. Heyward's house, on a beautiful spot a short distance from the depot. M. A. POTTER.

Tent Meeting in Plainville, Ct.

The Lord willing, Bro. Grant is expected to lecture on the prophecies, from his large chart, in the Mission Tent, at Plainville, Ct., commencing Tuesday evening, July 4th, holding through the week, and over Sunday, July 9th. We desire that the Holy Spirit may rest down upon this meeting to the conversion of sinners, reclaiming of wanderers, and encouragement of the people of God. Pray that the prophetic light may brightly shine upon the pilgrim's pathway, showing distinctly the perils of the present generation, and inspire to complete readiness to meet a soon coming and glorified Savior. We hope to see a general gathering of brethren and sisters, and shall endeavor to accommodate as far as possible. The Tent will be pitched about seventy-five rods southwest of the Congregationalist Church.

B. Hitchcock, O. D. Woodruff, Seth Woodruff, Geo. Morgan, Orin Hodge.

Campmeeting.

The annual campmeeting of the Christian Mission Association of Iowa will be held at the old place of meeting, near New Hartford, Iowa, commencing June 23d, 1876, and holding over two Sundays. The lease expires the present year, and hence we desire this meeting to be the best ever enjoyed there. Let every brother and sister contribute to the interest of the meeting by their presence and help. Do not allow worldly cares to keep you away, but come to one more reunion of the children of God, and unite with them in working for the salvation of souls. Every one should be personally interested, and do all that lies in his power to make it a success and blessing to many. Let all who possibly can bring family tents, appropriate and comfortable clothing, and bedding. Arrangements will be made to accommodate those who desire to board on the ground, and every provision made for your comfort and convenience. It is not known what ministerial help will be secured, but we expect to have interesting speakers, who will edify and instruct all who come. E. A. MARSH, Sec.

ANNUAL CONFERENCE.—The annual meeting of the Christian Conference will be held in connection with the Christian Mission Campmeeting, June 26th, 1876. It is desired that all the members be present on that day, as circumstances make it absolutely necessary. A full representation of the various churches should be sent, and delegates elected that will do their duty by cooperating with the members of the conference. Brethren in the ministry, come, and confer together. Let no trivial cause prevent you from attending it. The cause is in a critical condition. We need your help. E. A. MARSH, Sec.

IOWA CAMPMEETING.—The N. E. Iowa Advent Christian Conference and campmeeting will be held in Manchester, Iowa, commencing Monday, June 26th, and holding over the following Sunday. Bro. Wm. Sheldon, of Wisconsin, is expected to be with us. Let there be a general rally. We hope to make this one of the best meetings held in this vicinity. We expect there will be a plenty of hay and provender on the ground, also a boarding tent.

Quarterly Conference will meet during the same meeting. Brethren and sisters from abroad are expected. The Beebe Plain Adv. Campmeeting.

The first annual session of this campmeeting will be held at Beebe Plain, P. Q., at the Stanstead Junction of the Passumpsic R. R., commencing Saturday, June 24th, and holding over two Sabbaths. The grove is a beautiful one, unsurpassed for campmeeting purposes; a real leafy cathedral. The ground is smooth and dry, and the trees large, spreading rock-maples. The location is convenient of access, the cars leaving the people at the grounds, on a platform built by the railroad company on purpose for our accommodation.

There will be good board provided for all who wish it on the European plan, or each having what of plain substantial food he wishes, and paying only for what he has. We shall also make the best possible provision for lodging all who come unprovided for. Stabling and feed will be provided for horses; 25 cts. for hay and oats, or half that price for either, and 75 cts. a day.

All the railroads will carry passengers for half fare, or fare one way. All along the line of the Passumpsic and South Eastern railroads, passengers will purchase the regular tickets to Stanstead Junction, and receive on the ground, of the Secretary, free return passes.

On the line of the Central Vt. and Montpelier and Wells River Roads fare is also reduced. Inquire always if tickets are sold to STANSTEAD JUNCTION; if not, purchase tickets to points intercepting with the Passumpsic Road, and then purchase again to Stanstead Junction. Purchase the regular tickets, and receive free return passes on the Camp Ground. Fare is reduced one half as far south as Concord, N. H., by the B. C. & M. Road, and as far as Vernon, Vt., on the Central Vt. Passengers below White River Junction on the Central Vt., purchase tickets through to Stanstead Junction via the Conn. and Passumpsic Roads. Those near St. Albans, purchase to West Farnham, then to Stanstead Junction. Those on the Montpelier and Wells River Roads, purchase to Wells River, then to the Junction. Those on the Shefford and Chambly Road, purchase first to West Farnham, then to the Junction.

On the line of the Grand Trunk Railway, east of Montreal, and on the International, Quebec Central, and Boston, Concord and Montreal Rail Roads, purchase Campmeeting tickets for Stanstead Junction, and receive through tickets for fare one way; good to return on, and subject only to be countersigned by the Secretary.

Fare is also reduced on the Portland and Ogdensburg R. R., and free return passes will be given via of St. Johnsbury.

Arrangements will be made with other local Roads, if persons living on the lines of such, who desire to attend the campmeeting, will inform the Secretary of the fact at Richmond, P. Q. All tickets will be good from June 14th to July 5th inclusive, so as to give all who build tents the opportunity of doing so.

Be careful always in changing cars to see that baggage is re-checked.

We have made arrangements for procuring lumber, so that we can furnish it to brethren desiring to build tents, for a lower price than it can be bought of lumber merchants in the immediate vicinity, as we have it brought us by the Passumpsic R. R. Co. free of transportation; and we furnish it to those desiring to build at cost. Lots are also free, and every facility will be offered to assist all, who wish to build, to put up tents as cheaply as possible; and we hope many will avail themselves of their privilege of doing so.

All persons who purchase the through tickets will change cars as follows, when they come from points beyond the limits of the Passumpsic R. R. Those who purchase them in Montreal will call for them via St. John, and take the train via the South Eastern R. R.; and all who purchase them east of Montreal, on the Grand Trunk R. R., will call for them via Sherbrook, and change cars at Sherbrook or Lenoxville.

Those coming by the Boston, Concord and Montreal R. R., go via Wells River, and change there for the Passumpsic cars. Call always for Campmeeting tickets.

We expect prominent preaching brethren from abroad will be present. We anticipate the presence of Elds. J. Couch, Wm. H. Mitchell, E. A. Stockman, I. C. Wellcome and others. We hope for a large gathering of the brethren and sisters to this great feast of truth, to hear the Word from his servants, and we hope all will pray for God's special blessing on the meeting, and come in these last moments of time to labor for union in Christ, and to save the perishing.

M. A. Potter, President; R. W. Warner, Vice President; C. L. Percival, Treasurer; L. C. McKinstry, Secretary. Lewis Bergoine, John Elliott and John H. Carbee, Campmeeting Committee.

NOTICE.—The first annual meeting of the Beebe Plain Advent Campmeeting Association will be held on the camp-ground at Beebe Plain, P. Q., on Wednesday, June 28th, at 8 o'clock A. M., for the purpose of electing officers for the ensuing year, and the transaction of other business. All preachers and lay brethren, who reside in Canada, Northern Vt., and Northern N. H., who are in good standing among the Advent people, and in sympathy with the objects of the Association, are members of the Association, and eligible to office.

L. C. MCKINSTRY, Sec. B. P. A. C. A.

We shall bring before this meeting the subjects that most inspire and encourage the humble workers for Jesus. The fares will be reduced on the different Rail Roads as is usual for such meetings, which we shall advertise the first of June. All that wish to put up tents on the ground, either wooden or cloth, will please write early to Bro. C. A. Barton, Seabrook, N. H., so as to have their location secured to them.

NOTICE.—Providence permitting, we propose another gathering at the grove of Bro. J. F. Emerson, West Levant, Me., the first, second, third and fourth days of July next. All are invited, who love to meet in the name of the Lord, and so much the more, as they see the day approaching. We have need to gird up anew, to fortify our powers mightily, by giving heed to the sure word of prophecy, and exhorting one another to a waiting readiness for the return of the Master. It is expected that Bro. J. G. Smith, of Farmington, N. H., will be present to assist in gospel labor, as also Bro. F. A. Baker, with other brethren in the ministry. ISRAEL DAMMAN.

QUARTERLY MEETING.—The first quarterly meeting for the present year of the Advent Christian Church of Wallace, N. Y., will commence Saturday, July 8th, at 2 P. M., and continue over the following Sunday. A general invitation is extended to all. Come in the spirit of our soon coming Lord, and glorious results may be expected. For the church, E. C. COWLES, Pastor.

NOTICE.—The new East Maine Mission Tent will be pitched for dedication and gospel work at Unity Village, June 24th, and hold over July 4th. We hope all who can work on gospel principles, and have a love for the perishing, will come to this new place, and help in this effort to save the perishing. For the Com., JER. CARR.

NOTICE.—There will be a meeting at the Union meeting-house in West Parsonsfield, Maine, the Fourth of July. Wm. H. Mitchell, Jesse Gay, and others, are expected to preach the word. There will be an ordination. Come one, come all.

AFTER THE STORM.

After the storm, a calm;
After the bruise, a balm;
For the ill brings good, in the Lord's own time,
And the sigh becomes the psalm.

After the drought, the dew;
After the cloud, the blue;
For the sky will smile in the sun's good time,
And the earth grow glad and new.

Bloom is the heir of blight,
Dawn is the child of night;
And the rolling change of the busy world
Bids the wrong yield back the right.

Under the fount of ill
Many a cup doth fill,
And the patient lip, though it drinketh oft,
Finds only the bitter still.

Truth seemeth oft to sleep,
Blessing so slow to reap,
Till the hours of waiting are weary to bear,
And the courage is hard to keep.

Nevertheless, I know
Out of the dark must grow
Sooner or later, whatever is fair,
Since the heavens have willed it so.

REPORT OF KANSAS CONFERENCE.

The Advent Christian Conference of Kansas convened, according to appointment, with the church at Centropolis, Franklin Co., May 19th, 1876, at ten o'clock, A. M. The meeting was called to order by the Secretary, L. S. Smith, the President and Vice President not being present. A motion was made and carried to adjourn the business session of this meeting until Saturday, the 20th, at ten o'clock A. M.

Preaching Brn. present—Daniel Webster, N. S. Brian, H. H. Klock, A. Preston, J. C. Smith, V. F. Hunt, E. Hubbel, L. Hungerford, M. McGuire, W. W. Cate, A. Cairn. We enjoyed a social meeting Friday A. M., and our hearts were cheered by the stirring testimonies of brethren and sisters from different parts of the State. In the evening we listened to a stirring discourse from Bro. W. W. Cate, of Missouri.

Conference convened according to adjournment Saturday, the 20th, at ten A. M. The meeting was called to order by the Vice President, Bro. H. H. Klock, who read a selection of Scripture, after which an appropriate hymn was sung. Prayer was then offered by Sr. S. E. Smith. The minutes of the last meeting were read and accepted. Twenty-one new members united with the conference at this meeting. The following Brn. were chosen Directors for the ensuing year: W. H. Snyder, (Chairman), E. Hubbel, R. F. Peake, A. Preston, H. H. Klock, D. Webster, V. F. Hunt.

The following Brn. were chosen officers for the present year: H. H. Klock, Pres.; L. S. Smith, Sec.; W. H Snyder, Treas. The following Brn. were chosen committee on Licensure: J. C. Smith, A. Preston, N. S. Brian.

Committee on division of State: V. F. Hunt, S. E. Smith, D. Webster, W. H. Snyder, E. S. Chapman.

Committee on exercises: A. Preston, V. F. Hunt, A. Cairn. A letter from Sister Crowell was read, and a motion was made and carried that the same be placed with the minutes of this meeting for publication. The following resolution was offered by Bro. D. Webster:

Resolved, That the Advent Christian Conference of Kansas deeply lament the loss of their late President, Bro. Chester Crowell; that we feel in his death that not only we, but a wide circle of humanity, have lost a brother; and to his bereaved family we tender our heartfelt sympathy.

Bro. J. C. Smith reported a good interest in McPherson Co., and also in Bourbon Co. Bro. Lapham reports a good interest in Howard Co

The report of W. H. Snyder, Treasurer, was read and accepted. The report of J. C. Smith, State Evangelist, was read and accepted; and on motion, the same was placed with the minutes of the conference for publication. A motion was made and carried that this conference authorize L. T. Cunningham, of Newton Upper Falls, Mass., to represent the churches of Kansas and Southwest Missouri at the annual meeting of the Advent Christian Association, to be held at Chelsea, Mass., in August, 1876.

The following Brn. were granted license for the ensuing year: D. Webster, N. S. Brian, H. H. Klock, A. Preston, J. C. Smith, V. F. Hunt, R. F. Peake, P. W. Rote, E. Hubbel, L. Hungerford, M. McGuire, W. E. Moss, L. H. Little, W. W. Cate, E. Tyler, A. Cairn.

The papers that were laid on table at the last session were brought before the conference, and laid over for further action. On motion, J. C. Smith was chosen State Evangelist for the present year, and V. F. Hunt assistant Evangelist. On motion, a committee of three were chosen to solicit funds for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the Evangelists. The committee on division of State reported in favor of holding all the territory we now have, and take in more if desirable.

A motion was made and carried that this conference receive the Southwestern Missouri A. C. Quarterly Conference into its territorial bounds. A motion was made and carried that Eld. J. C. Smith and wife be sent as delegates to the Quarterly Conference to be held in Southwestern Mo., Friday before the third Sunday in June. A motion was made and carried that Eld. V. F. Hunt correspond with persons desiring preaching in their vicinity, and ascertain what they will contribute to defray expenses, and report the same to the conference. On motion, conference adjourned, subject to the call of the Directors.

Saturday evening, we listened to a very able sermon from Bro. H. H. Klock, of Ottumwa, Coffey Co., showing the fulfillment of prophecy. Sunday morning, we enjoyed a love-feast for about thirty minutes; after which we listened to a very instructive sermon, by Bro. Hunt, on the 24th chapter of Matthew. In the afternoon, at two o'clock, Bro. A. Cairn gave us an interesting sermon on the coming of our Lord; and also showing us that we may expect that event soon. After the services, five went forward in baptism. Sunday evening, Bro. Cate, of Mo., preached an excellent sermon on the nature of man, showing us that man does not possess natural immortality, but is dependent on Christ for that gift. The truth shone out brightly. After preaching, some fifty gathered around the table to commemorate the Lord's supper. Union and harmony prevailed during the meeting, and all who attended say that it was the best they have enjoyed in the State.

LEVI S. SMITH, Secretary.

(A copy of Sister Crowell's letter.)

Pleasanton, Kan., May 14th, 1876.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS., Greeting:—As the time for our conference is drawing near, I thought I would write a few lines to let you know that I am still striving for that inheritance, which is incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for all those who love his appearing. O how I should like to meet with you; But it would be with grief and sadness. One chair will be vacant; one voice will be heard no more in your prayer and conference meetings, in which he always took an active part. His voice will be heard no more, both morning and evening, in reading and prayer. And now, Brn., may we be permitted with him to say, "There is no fear in love; perfect love casteth out fear." Thus passed down quietly into the sleep of death a much loved Bro. and companion, on the 7th of April.

As for the church here, I fear it will be said of it, that it has a name to live and is dead. O pray for us, that a few even in Pleasanton, may be kept unspotted from the world. And now, may the grace of God be with you all in your deliberations, may you have fervent charity; may you be clothed with humility as a garment, and have for a helmet, the hope of salvation. May you go forth in the strength of Elijah's God, and contend earnestly for that faith once delivered to the saints. And if we meet no more in this life, may we meet where sickness, sorrow, and death, will never come. Inclosed you will find the widow's mite. This from your sister, looking for deliverance when Jesus comes.

MRS. CHESTER CROWELL.

REPORT OF STATE EVANGELIST.

Dear Brn. and Sis. of the Advent Christian Conference of Kansas:—We meet again with hearts filled with love. God has blest us with this precious opportunity. We have come together for Jesus' sake, to relate our experiences, hopes, trials, sorrows, cares, toils, and the many blessings the Lord has bestowed upon us, since we last met. Many long weeks and months have past and gone. Time has wrought many changes. All have been sowing seed, either good or bad; and the harvest day alone will disclose the result. As your Evangelist, I will now report in short, what the Lord has done among us. With the permission and vote of the conference, in the early part of the session, we returned East to get a little rest, if possible, and regain my health. While there, we met with many loved ones of like precious faith in the gospel. Brn. Couch, Sheldon, Grant, Hastings, Wellcome, Moore, Smith, Piper, and a host of others, too numerous to mention. Brn. and Sis. from all parts of the land met at our annual camp-meeting at Springfield, and the large camp-meeting at Alton Bay. It was estimated that there were twenty thousand people in attendance on the last day, at Alton Bay. Hundreds of board and cloth tents were erected for the occasion. There we met from the North and South, East and West, to hear the glad news of a coming King, who should execute judgment and justice in the earth. All hail the expected day.

We held meetings while there in a number of places: Newton Upper Falls, Chelsea, Natic, Clinton, East Salisbury, and Seabrook, N. H., where we had labored some two years or more in the past, and where we saw a nice chapel built for worship, and a large company brought out for Jesus and his blessed truth, and baptized fifty-two happy souls in the liquid grave, of whom some had been drunkards, gamblers, tobacco users, thieves, etc., etc. We had good acceptance while there, and they urgently requested us to remain with them, offering us a home among them. At one place we baptized four persons, that had formerfy belonged to the Catholic church. A large company came out to witness the burial and resurrection' It was reported that the harlot church had come to throw stones and fire pistols, but the restraining Spirit was there, and no evils befel us. While in the East, a jewel of a son was given us to gladden our hearts, as we journey toward the Kingdom.

After the expiration of some seven months, we again returned to Kansas, aud found a home with Bro. Crowell, of Pleasanton, Linn Co. Since then, we have visited eleven Co's, ten in Kan. and one in Mo., and held meetings in twenty-one different places besides this, we have traveled through snow and mud, rain and sunshine, a distance of nearly a thousand miles, scattering the precious seed—some fifty thousand pages of tracts—beside all waters, and among all classes of people. The Lord has blest abundantly in giving health and strength equal to our day. We have visited and preached in ten new places, where we have never preached before; and in these places we have seen the work of the Lord move forward, and some have sought the Lord. Others have been stirred up to renew their covenant vows, while many have commenced to study the Holy Scriptures, as they never have before, The Brn. and Srs. have been blest and strengthened to "press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." We have endeavored to "preach the word" for the love of it, and unite the people of God, rather than scatter and divide them. The reckoning day will decide whether we have labored in vain or not. We have received some eight dollars in Kansas to help defray our expenses, and for labor. Have loaned many large works to different persons to read, for which we have received nothing as yet; also have sent for many tracts, and scattered some fifty thousand pages free of charge, for which we thank the Mission Board, East, and others. Other works we have bought of our means, and given them freely to the cause. Time and the great eternity, so soon to be ushered in, will tell the amount of good they have done. Some of these silent preachers have been sent to many states and Co's, where the people have never heard the joyful sound. The word spoken will not return void, and our labor is not in vain in the Lord.

Since our annual conference was held at Ottumwa, dear Bro. Crowell, Pres. of this Conf. has passed away. He has been called into death's dark dominions. We had all learned to love him, but our love was not strong enough to hold him here. He has done much for the support of the cause of truth in this State, but his mortal life is finished, and his works follow him, while he rests from his labors, waiting a better resurrection at the dawn of the Day-Star, with healing in his wings. Then our Bro. will awake and sing—"O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" He will be satisfied then in the Savior's likeness. He left a dear companion, of like precious faith, and dear children, to mourn his departure; but they sorrow not as others that have no hope. We need to thank the Giver of every good and perfect gift for such a Bro., and ever live in such a manner that we may meet him when the last trump shall sound. Also, let us unite our petitions daily for the protecting care of our Father in heaven to be bestowed upon the widowed mother and sorrowing children, that they may meet the loved one where death will never come. We miss the dear, absent Bro. Who will fill his place? Who will fill up the ranks, and follow his example? His earthly substance was used to the Lord's glory. He ever stood ready to give. The great truths that are due this generation of dying mortals absorbed his entire being, and his work showed that he had a live faith, and one that manifested itself in daily life and godly conversation. He gave freely to the cause. "All for Jesus" was his motto. We believe his work has been such as shall stand in the judgment. May ours be likewise, and we ever follow that which is good, that we may receive the reward of the inheritance when Jesus comes.

Dear Brn. and Srs., let us take knowledge of Jesus, and be more zealous in the cause. Let us work while the day lasts, for very soon the judgment will be here, and our work done, or not done. If it is well done, great will be our reward; if not done, great will be our condemnation. Let us act, and put forth all our powers for the spread of gospel truth. Let every thing else be secondary; Christ and his kingdom first and uppermost in our minds and affections, and then all things needful to our sustenance will be added. Let us who are of the day, cast off the works of darkness, and put on the armor of light, and be awake, wide awake, to our standing in this world's history. May we be nerved to activity now, and rescue some, if possible, from the impending storm of wrath. Multitudes are in the valley of decision. The storm clouds are gathering fast. Let us work with renewed energy, for Jesus' sake and the coming glory.

We have met here to further on the gospel. Shall we do it? Are we willing to give of our means, as the Lord hath prospered us, to carry on the glorious work? We are living in the time called "quickly." Men and nations run to and fro in the earth; knowledge increases. The last of the last days are here; even now are we in them. The works of Satan are broadcast. The children of the wicked one are many. Satan's rule and reign is short. Jesus Christ was manifest to destroy the works of the devil. He will bruise him under his feet shortly. And when all things that offend are gathered out of his kingdom, then shall the righteous shine forth. Now is the time to lay up in store a good foundation against the time to come, when all will receive their reward.

O that all may sense the work, and do it as unto the Lord. Some can plant, others can water; some sow, others reap. Others go forth weeping, bearing precious seed. Some, of their abundance, can feed the hungry, clothe the naked, and help in taking off the muzzle from the ox that treadeth out the corn. Tracts, books, papers, men and women are needed to be sent forth among the perishing multitude. Shall we not make a noble gift to the Lord now, and have it paid back again, good measure, pressed down, and running over? Some have done what they could to scatter the good seed; others have done nothing. I fear they have buried their Lord's money. Having loved this present world, they have forsaken the Lord. The world, the world, the WORLD, has engrossed their entire attention; and when the Lord shall come, he will find them overcharged with the cares, surfeiting and drunkenness of this life, and so that day takes them unawares, and all is lost. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." A word to the wise is sufficient. Let us be warned, and not trust in uncertain riches, that drown men in destruction and perdition. We see how hard the advocates of erroneous doctrines work, and the amount they spread to promulgate them. And shall not we be more zealous for the truth as it is in Jesus? The angel-message, flying through the midst of heaven, has nearly had its fulfillment. Only a little longer have we to work. What is done must be done quickly. The moments fly fast. The judgment is nigh. On, on, speed the wheels of time. We are hastening unto the coming of the day of God. The coming of the Lord draweth nigh.

Brn. and Srs., one and all, let us double our diligence, and make our calling and election sure. Soon, very soon, will the work be cut short in righteousness. The Lord will make a short work upon earth. But now is our time to put forth our talent, time and voice, in the labor of love and the patience of hope. Now let us be earnest, watchful, and prayerful, that no evil thing may be said of us, except it be falsely for Jesus' sake. Let every man, woman, and child, stand firm and lovingly for the truth. Stand shoulder to shoulder, armed with the whole armor of God, and fight with spiritual weapons in every combat, for they are mighty. Let us speak the same things, build up one another in the most holy faith, keep out outsiders if possible, warn the unruly, comfort the feeble minded, support the weak, be patient toward all men, and shun every appearance of evil. May the God of peace ever abide with you all, is the prayer of your Bro. and Sr. in the mission work,

UNION.

E. P. MARVIN.

"Can two walk together, except they be agreed?"

My Dear Brother:—You and I are gospel ministers, acquaintances and friends in an "orthodox" christian church. We represent however, as it seems to me, two quite distinct types of doctrine and life, existing now in every branch of the orthodox church. I will try to define these types with brevity, and I trust that my friendship for you, as well as my regard for truth, will constrain me to do it with candor.

While you formally accept all the fundamental doctrines of the orthodox faith, you do not seem to have a positive, profound and influential belief of them. I refer to but a few of the many texts of Scripture that might be advanced.

1. You present almost exclusively the manward side of the gospel, very much like humanitarians. You delight to dwell eloquently upon man's powers and capabilities, "unperverted instincts," and the "struggle for manhood and freedom," conveying an idea, to young men especially, that they need only to develop "natural manhood." I steadfastly hold that the Bible teaches the utter helpless ruin of natural manhood by sin; that God set aside this sinful nature on the cross as incapable of improvement; that he requires a new spiritual birth; and that man has no life or powers in him which God approves, until the Holy Spirit quickens him from the dead. Ps. 51: 5; Eph. 2: 1, 2; Rom. 3: 10; John 3: 3.

2. You may intend to teach the finished work and free grace of Christ; but I discover an element of legalism in your gospel. I preach instant pardon and acceptance for all sinners, on condition of faith in Jesus Christ, apart from feeling, works, or promises, and an eternal life, all of grace and inalienable. Lev. 17: 11; Luke 13: 3; Rom. 4: 5; John 10: 28.

3. You seem to fall in with the popular prejudice against "doctrine," and glory in not preaching it; manifest a smart contempt for creeds and catechisms; sometimes caricature unpopular doctrines; scarcely hold men responsible for their belief; teach that "Christianity is a life, and not a creed"; and preach very much like a Reformer. I hold that a sound and firm belief is the only true basis of a christian life; that saving faith is the voluntary moral act of a free agent, for which he is responsible; that it is as much our duty to believe what God says, as to do what he commands; that "damnable heresies" are as strongly condemned in the Bible as "damnable sins." Mark 16: 16; 1 Tim. 4: 13, 16; 2 Tim. 1: 13.

4. You incline to avoid or modify the doctrine of eternal punishment; apologize for speaking of it, and sometimes turn it away with a jest; like to have it kept out of creeds, mottoes and hymnology; persuade yourself that it is not useful or profitable to preach it; but to "attract" by the pleasing features of the gospel. I observed that you were pleased with the declaration that, "if we could only convince the whole world of sinners that God loves them, it would not take twenty-four hours to bring them all to Christ"; and that you try to smooth over and belittle the difference between the Universalists and Orthodox christians.

I profoundly hold that the doctrine of universal corruption and partial salvation is a tremendous faith; that "whether we shall be happy or miserable in another world, and whether we shall be unchangeably so; are questions of such unspeakable moment as to make all other questions appear to be comparatively of small importance"; that the mortifying and alarming doctrines of the gospel should have no inferior place in our preaching; that no sinner repents unless the penalty of the law is preached to him; that just as the leaven of Universalism prevails among the people conversions cease, vital godliness declines, and iniquity abounds. Universalism, as it now prevails, is the most pleasing and popular form of infidelity. I believe there is an infinite gulf between it and the orthodox faith; that false views of the holiness of God's love and justice are widely prevalent; that the pains and penalties of the gospel are severer than those of the law, and that the preaching of Christ and the apostles contains not only more goodness but also more severity than that of the old prophets under the law; that if we simply omit to warn sinners, they will infer safety and perish in sin; they will drink and forget their duty, and remember their danger no more.

On the whole, dear brother, I do not think that you fairly represent the character and word of God; and I am confident that your preaching does not correspond with that of Christ and the apostles. Ezek. 33; Matt. 25: 46; Heb. 10: 28, 29.

5. You seem to lower and accommodate the gospel to the natural man; confound the simplicity of the way with easiness; exhort sinners in smooth, sweet and sentimental strains to "simply love Jesus," and thus hope to charm them into a christian life.

I labor to bring sinners up to God's terms; confess that the uncompromising terms of the gospel, though very simple, are practically hard for stubborn wills and obdurate hearts; admonish the people that gospel love for Jesus is a practical principle that will lead to holy obedience. Matt. 7: 13, 14; John 14: 23. Hoping that you will receive this epistle kindly, and consider it cordially, I reserve some other points for a second letter, and remain Your Brother.

PRAYER.

L. A. MIRICK.

How much is spoken in that one single word. How oft it has stilled the throbbings of the aching heart, and caused joy and gladness to spring up anew in the hearts of those that have been bowed in deep, bitter sorrow and anguish. Thousands have proved its rich comfort and blessing to them in their every day experience. And while it is so cheering and comforting to our own hearts, how sweet to know that "praying breath was never spent in vain." Our heavenly Father often gives us rich blessings in answer to prayer; and many a weeping mother has proved its saving power.

I have before me a sketch of a mother whose son ran away from home, and became a sailor. For two years she knew not where that wanderer was; yet her heart went up to God in prayer for her son—her only son. Earnestly did she plead with God that she might see him a penitent child. Strong was her faith that those agonizing prayers would be answered. But as years elapsed, her health declined, and that fatal malady, consumption, was fast hastening her to the tomb. Yet her faith failed not. Said she, "I have prayed long and fervently that I may see him once more—see him a true penitent—and I cannot relinquish the belief that God will hear and answer. You may think me presumptuous; but my faith must enjoy its hold on divine promises. Has not God said, 'Call upon me in the day of trouble, and I will answer thee, and thou shalt glorify me'? I have called—yes, I have called by day and by night, and God has seemed to help me. Has he excited such intense emotions for nothing? Has he enabled me to wrestle so with him, only to be disappointed? I still have confidence in the faithfulness of my heavenly Father. I believe I shall yet press the poor child to my bosom. Years since, I wrote in a pocket Bible, I gave him, 'His loving kindness changes not.' And do you think it will change now?

"Months passed, and no tidings of that son, till at last that mother was lying on her death-bed—but in that still hour of midnight, when death was fast doing its work, that son came home, and (with his sister) knelt by her dying bed. Said the dying mother, 'My dear boy, My own dear child, you have come. Yes; I said you would come—you have—yes, I can now praise God. One question, and I die in peace. Is my boy a penitent? 'Mother,'—his tears nearly choking his utterance—'that Bible and a mother's prayer have saved me. Mother! my mother! will you forgive me?' 'Enough—enough,' said the dying mother. 'Yes, it is enough!' and her countenance, beaming as it were with seraphic joy, 'I am nearly through—but go, my son—go, my daughter, and publish it to the mothers of the land, what I have found true—and will continue true as long as praying mothers exist—'HIS loving kindness CHANGES not!'" Thus singing those sweet words, she passed away. Ah! let the infidel scoff, and the unbelieving say there is nothing in prayer; yet let them behold one instance like this, where faith triumphs in a dying hour, and methinks their scoffing will be hushed, and they will silently turn away, feeling that there is a God that hears and answers prayer.

HATTIE A HORTON.

The above touching lines were written by Sr. Horton some months before her late sickness and sudden death of twelve days suffering with brain fever. She deeply felt the sentiment written. Her last dying breath was spent in earnest prayer for an "absent one," whose sudden departure had caused her great suffering of mind and body for several long years. In one of her last letters to me, when referring to him she said,—"But who can tell but in the great gathering day, there may be that one there, saved by redeeming love, in answer to united prayer, that years ago have been offered up for him? All things are possible with God, and shall we doubt his power to save? No, never! for praying breath was never spent in vain."

To some of Sr. Horton's correspondents, she was known for years as "poor sick Hattie." But on removing a few years ago from this town (her birthplace) to Hawley, Mass., her health was much firmer, so that she took much pleasure in being out at service among her kind neighbors, and new-made friends, that she might earn a little and surprise her parents frequently with some presents to cheer them as they were growing old, and as tokens of her deep gratitude to them for their care and watchfulness over her sick-bed, when she was weak and feeble, and prostrated by agonizing and unspeakable woe.

May God's rich blessing rest upon them as they sorrow for their loved—their only child. And may the young daughter, sorrowing for her dear mother, be led to trust in a mother's God, as a prayer-hearing and a prayer-answering Gad; and so follow the divine oracle, that when the last trumpet sounds, waking the sainted sleepers, that she may meet her deeply sainted mother in the land of blessedness, where death and sorrow never come.

Sr. Horton united with the Congregational Church something like a year before her death, where she was greatly beloved, and will be sadly missed by the praying band who were so near to her heart. She had led a praying life from a little child, and was one of the most modest and conscientious of christians, and a firm believer in the resurrection of the dead, and its kindred truths. She loved her Bible,—it pointed her beyond this world of sin and woe to a fairer clime, where no inhabitant will ever say, I am sick. Her closet, too, was often filled with her wailing cries for the "absent wanderer," for whom her last prayer was offered. But dear Hattie sleeps in peace, where the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest. Peacefully she will slumber till his glorious voice shall be heard from the courts of heaven, saying, "Gather together my saints unto me; they that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice." "In a little while he that shall come will come, and will not tarry," to be admired by all his dear ones, who have trusted in his mercy, and waited patiently for the Lord. Lord, help us all to be ready. Amen.

Savoy, Mass.

THE ABOUNDING INIQUITY.

It seems to be assumed in all quarters that the times are out of joint; that sin and folly prevail in high places and low; that the very foundations of social order are in danger of being destroyed. The opinion finds constant expression through the pulpit and the press, in our seats of justice and in our halls of legislation. With the increase of light and knowledge, which has marked the progress of the century, there has come an equal augmentation of all the forces and appliances of evil. It would seem that while the good are getting better, the bad are getting worse at each successive stage of the world's advancement, and if this be the law of its progress, it is difficult to see, on principles of human calculation, what the end will be. We are left, however, in no uncertainty as to the final results, for we know that God is on the throne, and he has assured us in his word that the good shall at last triumph.

It cannot be denied that there is, in all parts of our land, and in all ranks of society, an unusual prevalence of luxury and extravagance, violence and corruption, vice and crime, threatening the very existence of our free institutions. At such a spectacle many of our oldest and wisest men are filled with astonishment and misgiving as to the future. What these things mean and what they portend, are problems which call for the thoughtful and prayerful consideration of all true patriots and christians. In a state of things like this, there can be no higher duty of the citizen or of the churchman, in this Centennial year, than to bring all his powers and all his influence to the removal of prevailing evils and the restoration of our country to its pristine integrity. It is not much that one individual can do; but little or much, evpry one should feel bound to contribute what he can; and all good men together may be strong enough under God to save us from ruin.

To us it seems perfectly plain, that the fearful domestic, social and public evils of the times have grown out of a departnre from the essential truths of God's word, and the obvious requirement of God's ordinances, on the part of the individual, the family, and the nation. There has been a growing disregard of all the old established principles of religion and morality, and with it a relaxation of the demands of conscience, a connivance with sin and folly, a yielding toleration of error, a tacit conformity to the maxims of worldly wisdom, and an open or secret indulgence in a thousand practices condemned by the word of God. All this has come in large measure from the prevailing skepticism, materialism, and atheism of the age. A whole generation has sprung up under this teaching, and we are beginning already to reap its harvests. Our people have drifted away from all the old landmarks. Under the popular watchword of progress, a good thing abused, they have been trying the experiment of counting innovations. They have gone after other gods, unknown to the fathers of our church, and the founders of our republic.

There has been a gradual, but now very wide departure from the great principles of virtue and intregrity, of individual character, and of public honor, on which our republican institutions were founded, and by which they were maintained through all our earlier history. It is the fashion now, in certain quarters, to decry the great principles of the German and Swiss Reformers, the French Hugenots, the English Puritans, the Scotch Covenanters, and the New England Pilgrims. But it is one of the best established facts in history, and one of the grandest, that these are the very principles on which the American church and the American State were founded—the distinclive principles on which their young and vigorous life was nourished up to greatness, which have given character to us as a people, and made the nation respected and honored in the eyes of mankind.

For the first fifty years of our history there was comparatively little departure from the maxims of our fathers. The affairs of the nation were administered on the same principles of economy, frugality, honesty, public spirit, and patriotism, which had distinguished the carcer of all our early statesmen and patriots. But the last half century, especially the last quarter, with its influx of population, its accumulation of wealth, its lust of power, and its unparalleled splendor, has brought a woful declension of moral character. Many among us have become so paganized and demoralized that they seem to be ashamed of our nation's religious origin and christian character. They stand ready to wage war against some of the most cherished institutions of our fathers. They clamor for the abrogation of our Sabbath laws, and the exclusion of the Bible from our noble and hitherto successful system of public education.

The church itself, in many of its branches, has caught the prevailing spirit of worldliness, and, instead of rebuking the sins of the times, has been willing to join in the idolatry of wealth and fashion. We might atmost take up the lamentation of the prophet over the desolation of Jerusalem, and say, "Judgment is turned away backward, and justice standeth afar off; for truth is fallen in the street and equity cannot enter."—Interior.

GEORGE MULLER ANSWERING QUESTIONS.

Who has not heard of George Muller of Bristol, England, with his orphan houses containing more than two thousand children, and who has by faith and prayer received about $3,750,000 during the past forty years in support of his orphanages, mission work, etc. Though now in the seventieth year of his age, he is actively engaged in the Master's cause, and at present traveling more than formerly. At one of his services lately held in Mr. Rees' tabernacle, in Sunderland, he answered twenty-five questions which had been submitted to him. We copy a few of them from one of our British exchanges:

"Q. Can any man smoke tobacco to the glory of God?"

A. "Because I felt I could not, I gave up the practice as soon as I was converted."

Q. "Should christians drink intoxicating drink as a beverage?"

A. "No, not as a beverage, but like Timothy, as a medicine."

Q. "Should christians put money into a savings' bank?"

A. "Yes, and into any bank, if the motive be not to 'lay up treasures on earth,' but for convenience."

Q. May a christian, by force of law, compel a debtor who can, but won't work to pay his debts, to discharge his duty?"

A. "As God's steward I could not go to law about his money; but as his steward, I would never cease asking the debtor for what he owed till he was wearied by my importunity; and meantime, I would beseech God to bring him to a sense of his obligation."

Q. "Should believers allow their unconverted partners to dictate where and how they should worship?"

A. "Certainly not. Conscience must be the supreme guide in this. No doubt trouble will follow obedience to God, as Christ foretold: 'I came not to send peace on the earth, but fire and a sword.'"

Q. Should christians travel by railway or cabs on the Lord's day.

A. "Not for pleasure, certainly; but as we are not Jews, we may travel in the Lord's service, if we cannot otherwise accomplish it."—Selected.

SHOWY DRESSING.

To dress plainly at this era requires complete deadness to the opinions of the multitude; and where are tne women so determined in their profession, as to breast the onward tide? Echo answers, Where? Scarcely any in the community have dared to do it. And, indeed, it will take a larger share of piety than falls to most professors to make the venture. The sacrifice in such a direction looms up as impassible mountains before those who really like not the present state of things. No beaux, no sweethearts, no friends, no caste in society! No! they cannot make the sacrifice. To tell them they have mistaken notions of what is truly attractive, weighs nothing with them. Fashion has them bound hands and feet; they cannot, will not break her fetters. But how out-of-place it all seems to your old-fashioned correspondent. A nation groaning under oppression and heavy taxation! Well may her groans be unheeded by cruel lawmakers; they sound hysterical, coming as do, through laces, ribbons, and other finery. What can be done to put down the rage for showy dressing? Writers and preachers are disheartened about it. Christ's true disciples have always been, and must ever be, a plain, self-denying set of people. It is a mistake to think otherwise. "Except ye take up your cross daily, and deny yourselves, ye cannot be my disciples." Has this saying of our Lord become obsolete? From the example of most professors it really appears so. Yet some few of us are disposed to think otherwise, and if we err, are determined to err on the safe side. We had rather be esteemed "righteous overmuch," than to get to the very gate of heaven, and find, when it is too late, that our righteousness was inadequate to gain admission there. We are too fearfully impressed with the earnestness of God in his declared word, the Bible; with the awfulness of damnation, and the certainty of the joys of redemption and heaven, to run any risk.

In conclusion, let me forewarn those fashionable christians that though God may bear long with them, they will be called to give an account before him of every dollar spent in needless ornaments and self-indulgences. Sooner than may be expected, this reckoning may be required of many. The Judge is at the door.—Banner of Holiness.

HOME AND HEALTH.

A CLEAN BODY.

Cleanliness is said to be next to godliness. And yet there are some men who profess godliness, who do not seem to understand what it is to be cleansed from "the filthiness of the flesh."

They will talk about religion with a pipe in their mouths, or the juice of tobacco oozing over their lips.

If they come near you, so that you are compelled to take in the perfume of their breath, you'll not think of roses and pinks, but of old carrion. If they occupy a seat in the railroad car, a pool of tobacco juice in all its loathsomeness defiles the floor so that no one else can occupy it thereafter without defilement until it is cleaned.

What would we think of a woman professing godliness, who would thus defile herself?

Now God has but one standard of purity, and however men may be disposed to excuse the filthiness of each other, God will no more excuse filthiness in men than in women, and women cannot afford to excuse it in themselves, or in men.

Think of the hundreds of clean, pure, sweet-breathed women, who are compelled to inhale the horrid fumes of tobacco tainted breaths and old pipes for years, and the multitude of pure babies forced to kiss the tobacco-befouled lips.

No wonder so many of the delicate little creatures die. The only wonder is that any such live!

It may be the baby is sick in its cradle, The mother has watched over it all day with untiring devotion. But it is better now, and her heart dances with joy. The doctor thinks it will get through now without further dosing.

But the father comes home in the evening, and as soon as the supper is over sits down near the cradle with a pipe or a cigar. The air the sick baby breathes is soon impregnated with tobacco smoke. The mother is startled to see how pale and sick her child is.

"It gets worse about this time every evening," she tells the doctor, who comes in haste at their summons. The dosing is repeated, the smoking goes on, sickness, spasms and death follow.

So, many a man has smoked his own child out of the world!

But this filthiness of the flesh interferes with home comforts. Many a man lives in a rented house who has smoked up enough tobacco to build and furnish a house of his own. Then wife must deny herself, because rents are so heavy. She and the children must drink hydrant water without ice, because it is extravagant for poor people to pay even five cents a day for ice, while the husband will walk off with a five or ten cent cigar in his mouth, which will be followed by others during the day.

And then the filth that is made in the house because of this vile habit—the extra work and worry—who can compute it?

No wonder women hate tobacco.

Let the same standard be lifted up for men as for women—the gospel standard, a pure soul in a clean body.

"Purity is safe and cheap."—The Christian Woman.

CURE BY A CHILD'S PRAYER.

At one of Mr. Hammond's meetings in California, Elkanah Beard, who was for many years a missionary, told the following story about a little girl in the city of Benares, in Hindostan. He said that he knew the father and mother of the child, and he knew every word of it to be true, and he believed God answered the little girl's prayer. In that city lay a mother sick. For months, he said, she had not left her bed, and all that she looked forward to was slow death. Her little daughter was eight years old. She loved her mother, and was almost broken hearted. She took the New Testament and read the promises of answer to prayer. Going to her mother, she said:

"Mother, dear, can't Jesus make you well?"

"Yes, my child; but it is not his will."

"Mother, why not? Have you ever asked him to heal you?"

"O, no, my child; but—"

"Mother, you pray to God, I know."

"Yes, darling."

"What kind of prayers, mamma?"

"O, my child, I am in such agony I cannot talk to you of it; go and play."

She dropped her head sadly and went out beneath a tree in her father's garden, for her father was a postal official in that large city, and had a home with beautiful surroundings. She sat there and thought and prayed. Suddenly she returned to the bedside of her mother, and kneeling, said:

"Mamma, I am going to try Jesus, any how. He says 'Ask.' Yes, and I am going to ask him. Now, mamma, pray with me. O Jesus, dear good Jesus, I've no happy days now, since my mamma is sick these three months. She is so sick she can't talk to her little girl. O Jesus, she is so sick. O God, make my poor mamma to get well. O God, you can, you will. Mamma loves you, her little girl loves you."

Suddenly she sprang to her feet, and clapping her hands, cried—"He will mamma, he will, he will."

That self same time the lady rose from her bed, who had not moved her limbs for months, arose and went about her household duties healed and praising God. Her husband met her at the door that day, and overwhelmed with the event, went down on his knees and prayed God to make him worthy of the blessing that had fallen on his house; while the little girl stood by him, her face radiant with holy joy, exclaiming—"O papa, Jesus did it, Jesus did it."—Bible Echo.

In the furnace, here together
We are standing side by side;
While the flames are growing fiercer;
Higher too, the burning tide.

We have looked around for succor,
But no form our eyes have met;
Prayed there might a door open,
But no door is opened yet.

We are standing here and waiting,
In the furnace, closed around;
Waiting for the flames to deaden;
Listening for some cheering sound.

But the flames are growing redder,
And no voice comes to our ear;
Every hour is growing longer,
Every day a lengthened year.

Hotter still the furnace groweth,
And the fiery waves roll high;
Will our faith remain unshaken?
Shall we stand? or fall and die?

We will stand, for now He keepeth
Us amid the raging flame;
We will stand amid the furnace,
Calling still upon his name.

Forth we shall be brought at evening,
And One with us will be seen,
Smiling sweetly then upon us,
With no veil our souls between.

And the world shall see our greeting,
And our faces will be bright;
By this fiery furnace trial,
All our garments will be white.

REPORT

OF THE

"Conditional Immortality" Conference.

The Chairman: I am quite sure that you have all listened with great pleasure to the interesting speech with which we have been favored by Dr. Leask, regarding the missions to the heathen. As I have myself been amongst them I can corroborate the testimony of Dr. Leask on this question; and I shall have a word or two to say about it before the meeting closes (cheers). I now beg to call upon Mr. Edward White to address you.

Mr. Edward White, who was welcomed with tremendous and prolonged applause, said:—Mr. Chairman, I have also to add to the names of those from whom letters have been received that of my friend Dr. Petavel, who is at present in Switzerland, or would havs been here this morning. I much regret his absence. He is a scholar and gentleman worthy of high respect, and one whom I greatly esteem. He then continued, —I have been asked to add a word at this conference on "The conduct of the religious press in relation to the subject of Conditional Immortality." Two momentous questions lie at the foundation of all great discussions of modern society; the first is, Whether there is a God? the second, Whether there is any future life for man? When thinking people talk anxiously of evolution, of the origin of species, of the basis of moral obligation, these are the questions which they really have in their minds; and their anxiety, at least on the second question, has good cause, for the old basis of faith in a future state of reward and punishment,—the doctrine of the natural deathlessness of the soul,—is slowly sinking away before our eyes over the breadth of Christendom. If unbelief is too confident, the professsed teachers of Christianity are much too scornful towards the scepticism of the day. Much of it is honest; much of it is occasioned by a system which rests the cause of revelation on untenable grounds. There is great danger to popular faith from some of the results of modern inquiry; but the ship may be saved by throwing overboard the worthless part of the cargo (hear, hear).

Let me explain my meaning. The foremost men of science, Mr. Charles Darwin and Dr. Huxley in England, Dr. Hemholtz and Prof. Haekel in Germany, speak only the judgment of hundreds of other able biologists, when they declare, that the brain or thinking organ in man is produced by a process precisely similar to that by which the brain, or thinking organ, of all animals, is produced; whence they have inferred, from the scientific stand-point, that the prospect of the survival of the thinking power of man in death, is exactly equal to the probability of its survival in the death of animals; that is, there is to them no natural prospect of its survival in either case. That is the conclusion of science on the physical side. Again, whether there is such a thing as a separate spirit, either in man or in animals, has become an open question among metaphysicians. And the authors of the Unseen Universe have not done much to support the popular belief, since their arguments are just as good for animals as for man. Thus the physical argument for total death is, under the light or darkness of nature, immensely strong. The metaphysical argument for survival is insufficient as a basis of popular religious faith in eternal life. It is the shadow which escapes us. The moral argument for survival alone remains,—that which arises from the action of conscience, in some instances suggesting retribution beyond. But conscience does not teach a good man that he deserves for his goodness in time an endless reward; nor does it teach a wicked man that he deserves an endless penalty. The whole subject of survival, therefore, is covered with darkness. Man, by the study of his own nature, finds in it no pledge of immortality. The general result is, that the opinions of this totality of death, with more or less of confidence, are spreading daily all over Europe among educated and half-educated men, who in turn take little pains to conceal their conclusions from the masses. And the darkness thickens; for "without hope," men soon learn to live "without God in the world;" so close is the logical and moral connection between the latest biological views and a gloomy atheism, with morals to match the theory.

Well, what have European christians in general to say in reply to these philosophers? Nothing; except to anathematise them as infidels. Traditional orthodoxy and heretical universalism, threatened by their biological adversaries, persist in repeating to the people from ten thousand pulpits and missionary platforms, that there is no danger to faith, and that the soul is immortal; but science boldly rejoins that there is no positive evidence of this, and moreover, that Christianity can find nothing of this sort in the Bible itself; for the Bibie is certainly destitute of the metaphysical dogma of the soul's immortality. What then? An awful darkness, spite of optimists' assertions to the contrary, is thus slowly settling upon the most interesting part of European society. Men in multitudes are losing their faith in natural immortality, and with that their faith in revelation. Revelation has hitherto been represented as resting on the presupposition of the immortality of the soul; and now that that foundation is giving way, faith in revelation is widely giving way too. The grand and awful vision of an eternal glory in the future, whether for some or for all, is vanishing from before the minds of millions. This scientific dissolution of faith is going on much more rapidly on the Continent than in England; but very rapidly among educated men even here.

That there is no future state for man is a philosophy talked even at Oxford among the undergraduates, much more freely than would be believed by the public. The whole truth respecting man is not attainable by science; and in this crisis of European thought, God, in his providence, is directing the attention of many minds to an anciently revealed but long-forgotten truth, precisely adapted to meet the present needs of mankind, and to maintain and exalt the public faith in Christ and christianity. That truth is: that redemption has laid down as its very basis and first principle the fact that biology puts as its last conclusion,—the total mortality or evanesism of man in the present condition of his nature (loud cheers) with this difference, science concludes on man's total mortality not knowing the reason of the fact; while revelation declares that man's death is abnormal and the result of sin.

The Bible no where teaches an inherent immortality; but teaches that it is the object of redemption to impart it. It begins with an account of the loss of the prospect of endless life by the fall; and ends with a full revelation of the divine life, in the person of Christ the Lord. It says that the communication of it requires a regeneration of man by the indwelling of the Holy Spirit and a resurrection of the dead. It declares that the enjoyment of the gift is conditional; and that those who will not return to God will die, and perish everlastingly. Out of Christ there is no life eternal. And these conclusions are held as the result of applying the laws of philological science to the interpretation of the Scriptures,—those laws which are accepted by the orthodox churches of Christendom as applicable to all other subjects except this. These are the ideas which have brought us together this morning. They are now firmly held by an immense multitude of thoughtful people of all lands. (We are but a little company here this morning; but we represent an immense army in Europe and America) (loud cheers). They are spreading every day amongst the churches; and number among their adherents some of the foremost men of science, theologians, philologers, preachers, philosophers and statesmen (prolonged cheers). Amidst the meetings of so many admirable missionary societies organized for the diffusion of Christianity, it was thought that one small gathering might well be held to consider what should be spread abroad through all nations under the name of Christianity (applause), both in the way of promise and of threatening; for part of the message to the nations is on "judgment to come."

Now I am come to consider the attitude of the religious press towards this question —a question certainly of infinite moment in its bearings upon the faith of mankind, upon the character of christians, upon the interpretation of the Bible, upon the understanding of the attributes of God, and on men's zeal in the missions of the gospel. The religious press may be divided into two sections—that which is devoted to the advocacy of sectional beliefs, and that which is fettered by no such restrictions. First,—What is the attitude of the denominational press, towards this special solution of the scientific difficulty in which Christendom finds itself? How is the question of man's mortality by nature, and immortality in Christ, treated by the Guardian, the Watchman, the Methodist Recorder, the Record, the Rock, the English Independent, the Freeman, the Baptist Magazine, the Sword and Trowel, the Congregationalist, the Christian Observer, and fifty other sectional periodicals of England? The answer must be, that these questions which seem to you of such transcendent importance, are simply ignored by all those valuable and powerful organs of opinion; or if any notice is taken of them in an occsional brief reference in small print, it is to represent your movement as a "mischievous heresy;" or to describe it simply as "a doctrine on future punishment;" less deserving of favorable attention than the rampant delusion of Universalism. But we must not be uncharitable to denominational journals. We must not forget that they are written to supply the needs of the religious public, not many of whom are much given to theological inquiry. These journals, which are made up to sell, must be filled with what interests the religious public. And what are the questions which interest them? Why, thank God! much saving truth interests them; but after that, such questions as these:—"Whereabouts the priest is to stand at the holy communion, and what he is to wear?" "How to interpret old forms of speech, so as to render subscription honest for a semi-Romanist or a semi-sceptic?" "How to maintain the authority or to re-model the constitution of convocation, or of conference?" "How to obtain better incomes for Congregational or Baptist ministers?" "How to disestablish and disendow the Church of England; or how to prevent such a catastrophe?" "How to multiply home and foreign missions, without so much regard to the ideas which shall be spread abroad as of Divine authority in India or China?" "How to prevail against Baptists or Pædo Baptists? or to introduce a new chapel and ill-paid minister into a town or village where there are four or five already?" (laughter).

These are the questions which really interest the religious public, and very interesting they are also to me,—some of them of real importance, and I cordially sympathize with them; and with such questions the denominational journals are filled. Now I hold it to be useless and unjust to murmur if the deeper questions respecting the nature of God, are mostly ignored by the denominational press. That press was not established as an instrument for the study of truth, but as an engine for the defence of sectional beliefs and interests already arranged. You might as reasonably complain that an organ, adapted to play certain useful tunes in church by turning a handle, is not adapted for rendering under the hand of an organist the choruses of Handel or Mendelssohn (laughter).

The denominational press is simply performing its proper function in ignoring or slanting what Mr. Baldwin Brown has called "the miserable doctrine of annihilation" (laughter); and no change can occur till the taste of its readers is changed. We cannot expect a religious journal to commit suicide (laughter) by recommending such studies as these to the religious public. All that we would venture respectfully to ask, and even to implore of the denominational press is, that if they should find cause to refer in the future, incidentally, to this movement, they would be just enough not to misrepresent it as an agitation on the simple question of the retribution of sin (hear, hear). It is that; but it is vastly more. Right or wrong, it is a movement in vindication of the true philological law of interpretation in relation to the most important topics of revelation. Right or wrong, it is a movement for the re-distribution of the motives of hope and fear in the domain of religion. It is a movement for the reconstruction of Christian anthropology and theology from one end to the other—a movement which has for its chief aim to draw attention to the Scripture outline on the nature and fall of man, the object of the incarnation of God, and the very nature of salvation as the gift of eternal life; yet one which will, as we believe, ensure the re-establishment on a firm foundation of all that is essential in true Evangelical teaching, both of the apostles and the reformers; and moreover, in the enforcement of a doctrine of judgment to come, real, credible, and tremendous for a sceptical generation (hear, hear). (To be continued.)

IT ought to be the great care of every one of us, to follow the Lord fully. We must in a course of obedience to God's will and service to his honor, follow him universally without dividing; uprightly without dissembling; cheerfully without disputing; and constantly without declining; and this is following him fully.

— Those prayers suffer shipwreck which dash upon the rock of unbelief.

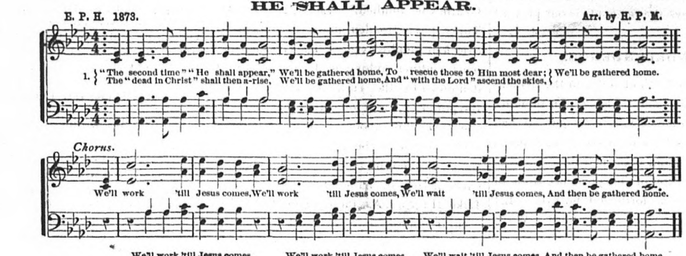
HE SHALL APPEAR.

E. P. H. 1873. Arr. by H. P. M.



We'll work 'till Jesus comes, We'll work 'till Jesus comes, We'll wait 'till Jesus comes, And then be gathered home.

2. Then in the "twinkling of an eye,"
We'll be gathered home,
"Shall we be changed," no more to die;
We'll be gathered home.
And "with the Lord," we each will sing,
We'll be gathered home,
How he from death removes the sting,
We'll be gathered home.
Chorus.

3. We're going to our home of joy,
We'll be gathered home,
Where we'll have peace without alloy,
We'll be gathered home.
Though oft we here are filled with fears,
We'll be gathered home;
He there will wipe away our tears,
We'll be gathered home.
Chorus.

UNION.

E. P. MARVIN.

"Can two walk together, except they be agreed?"

(Concluded.)

Dear Brother:—

6. You treat with slight disfavor the general conformity of church members to the maxims and customs of business and society; bow very low to "business men," and think it highly impertinent to criticize the dress of ladies, and a mark of low breeding, or envy; hold that we should live and dress "about as the rest do," and not be "singular." I condemn the common "course of the world," and hold that it is as improper to speak of "the christian world," as of the christian flesh, or the christian devil. I observe that your wife and daughters lead the fashions of society, and that fashion reporters in the sanctuary fix their eyes on them first of all. I observe also with sorrow that your sons are proposing money-making as "the chief end of man." I am not a favorite with the gay world, which is full of the "lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life." I hold, indeed, that our first and chief aim should be to get the heart right with God, and depend upon this to regulate the life. I am no legalist. I preach the instant pardon and free grace of the gospel. But how shall they that have died unto sin live any longer therein? What reason have those who live after the course of the world to suppose that they are New Testament christians? I hold that the joint idolatry of gold and fashion is prevailing with unprecedented sway in the world and in the church; and that those who "cannot be singular" cannot be saved. Rom. 12:2; 1 Tim. 6:9–10, 17–19; Jas. 2; Isa. 3:16–26.

7. Your preaching seems to me, dear brother, to dwindle often into secularities, trifles, and entertainments. You advertise to preach on the current sensation—politics, war, the panic, the Centennial, the death of public men, who, if your creed is true, are gone to eternal perdition; or, if you come to your wits' end, the boquet on your pulpit will serve for a text or a motto. I hold that our messages are to be taken from God's holy word; that its fundamental doctrines should be boldly and repeatedly emphasized; that we are solemnly charged with a life-and-death message every time we enter that awful place, the pulpit; that secular ends and entertainments are foreign to the sanctuary; that great men, who live and die in sin, should be let alone; that the questions of the day are usually questions of a day; while our themes are for all time and eternity. 1 Cor. 2:1–5; 2 Tim. 4:1, 2.

8. In theory, you hold to the separateness of Church and State, but you favor political action in religious bodies; ask special favors of the government, and expect the speedy conversion of the nation. I hold practically to this separateness, because God's word teaches that during these Gentile times the nations cannot be converted, but they are symbolized by wild beasts and a doomed image; that, since we cannot convert them or directly control them, all civic alliances are injurious to the church. If I believed that they were rapidly being converted, however, I should favor such alliances. See Dan. 2:36–45; John 18:36.

9. You stake the truth of God on its prevalence, graduate rewards chiefly by success, and hold the church responsible for the conversion of the world. I hold that God never stakes his truth on its prevalence in this dispensation; that the reward is for the faithful rather than successful servant; and that the great commission does not hold the church absolutely responsible for the conversion of any person; that true success is "doing your duty"; and that the success which you predict in the world's conversion before his appearing would be the positive refutation of the New Testament. Rom. 3:3; Luke 18:8; Acts 15:14.

10. You look with complacency upon the general course of events around you. I think that almost every thing is different from what it should be. You resolve to "always look on the sunny side." I look on both sides. You cry out, "The morning cometh." I add, "And also the night." You say that the truth of God bathes everything in morning light. I deny it, and affirm that it presents both the brightest and the blackest picture of the world's future ever conceived. You despise "long faces," and believe that christians should be jolly. I hold that the awful condition of the world may well sometimes "mar" the face of the christian like that of the "man of sorrows." You believe in multiplied religious celebrations, music, and flowers in profusion,—a perpetual jubilee. I think that the time has not come for these things; that we do not "reign as kings" yet, but are in a state of humiliation and widowhood; that we should celebrate and boast less, and pray and work more. I will not cheer on the world's frolic to perdition by church fairs and entertainments. I believe in raising money for the Lord only in the simple manner which he has prescribed, and I condemn all "crooked" ways. I condemn all "glorying in men," and all receiving "honor from men"; would reject a D. D. as the apostles rejected the Degree of Gods at Lycaonia; will take an honest vacation when health or life fails, when Satan is bound, or when he can be persuaded to take one.

11. You are a kind of universal optimist; believe in all kinds of progress; delight to harangue the people upon "the glorious Car of Progress," and "the glorious march of liberal ideas around the world," which heralds "the good time coming." You believe that the world is rapidly improving, largely by its own resources of natural development; and you mean to be "up with the times." You rejoice to invite the world to come and behold "this great Babylon which we have built." I regard our civilization as "of the earth, earthy," and have no confidence in it; hold that the masses now are deluded as in the times of Noah, and the decay of the Roman Empire; and that this delusion is one element of ruin. I admit that we have achieved a splendid material and intellectual civilization, but an age of gold rather than a golden age. Art gilds the fascinations of earth, and faith fades before them. "The spirit of the time" is not the spirit of Christ. The whole prophetic portion of the New Testament, my dear brother, utterly contradicts your faith and hope, as diligent and prayerful study should show you. Since Cain built a city, world-improving by natural means has been a failure. As old Cato could not reform the world, so our modern Catos, male and female, cannot. Our worldly-wise politicians have no power to arrest the incoming tide of social, commercial and civic corruption. The sway of heaven alone can save us. The personal return of the Son of David and of God is the pole-star of the christian's hope. The elect of God have before been as the few grape gleanings after the vintage is done; and it may be so again.

12. Finally, you regard superstition and tyranny as our greatest peril, while I, in the light of Scripture, history and observation, fear unbelief and lawlessness most. I see the bonds of "the faith once delivered to the saints," and of the ethics once practiced by the saints, loosening on every hand. "Puritanism" is increasingly a term of contempt. "Freedom and liberty" are the watchwords. Business and pleasure are yoked together to override the decalogue. "The mystery of iniquity" is the mystery of "lawlessness"—anomias. This spirit, planted in the hot-bed of our high, free civilization, may speedily develope the last great Antichrist. We cast out the devil of superstition in the sixteenth century, but it has returned with seven other devils of rationalism worse than the first.

I hold that the church, as a visible body, has lost its witness-bearing power, and needs reformation from unbelief and worldliness now, as much as from Popery in the time of Luther. Without this reformation, or regeneration of the church, we can make but little progress against the world. An earnest and a faithful believer is scarcely received by the shallow and formal professors of our churches. His utterances are often treated with contempt, or as the utterances of an unknown tongue. 2 Tim. 3:1–5; 2 Pet. 3:3, 4; 2 Thess. 2:7.

Now, brother, you cannot call me dyspeptic, or a disappointed and soured man. You credit me with culture, application and success in the ministry. You know I could choose pleasing error rather than wholesome truth; send away glad congregations, please the world, and make for myself a name and a place. But this would be treason against God, and no charity to the world. A most diligent and devout study of God's word has separated me from the world and a part of the visible church. I meet the crowds. You seem to drift with them. Most men are the product of surrounding forces, and perhaps few will continue to maintain the tremendous faith of universal immortality and partial salvation; but it is a sad day for the church when her ministers only half believe the truths which they are sworn to preach.

These differences, dear brother, many of them, are radical and essential. "Can two walk together except they be agreed?" Whether the two classes in the churches which we represent can remain long together, or one shall "go forth without the camp," is a question of profound importance.

THOUGHTS BY NIGHT AND DAY.

C. COLEGROVE.

With joy, we behold some sign of the coming King and kingdom. At any great and grave omen of the thief-like coming of our Master, should we not feel a thrill of hope, and rise out of David's quagmire, where there is no standing, and rejoice in David's God, who is a rock? Nay, saith he, "Who is a rock like our God?" Let Europe rock like a cradle, the sight and sense of such an earthquake will waken hope in those who have felt that hope deferred maketh heart-sickness. For look! look! The whole earth is heart-heavy and anguish-struck, until her Redeemer cometh. Now we will watch the East, Turkey and Russia, and Rome, and every place at which prophecy points with outstretched index fingers; watch the foregoing rumble of such an uproar as earth has never seen, though we know not how the confusion and fierceness will take its uttermost and exact shape; but we think that we know something of most wonderful and exciting development, and take our place watching, and longing, and praying, finding the only anchorage place of hope in the promise and power of Christ to come for the redemption of his suffering saints.

It is a common question, are we ready? How often have we said—"Now, Lord, come now, if thou wilt, come and take me, for I am all ready. Come, O pitying Son of man." But he has not yet come. Long has the grand answer been delayed. Long has the great power of God seemed to linger. Long have we sighed for power, for weakness needs power, and weakness is ours, and power is God's. How often and long have we exclaimed, "O, pity and power in God! O, pity in the Divine heart. O, power in the Divine hand, make a way for you! Mercy, whose depths line hath not fathomed, let thy water of life burst forth, and run like a river." O, the reserve of power in the omnipotence of God! Long hath the rescuing energy held back, but it shall not hold back forever. Therefore, work on, O ferment of the nations, and study wonderfully, and stir yourselves. O ye wise men of the world; yet one glimpse, one gleam, one little flash of the glory of God is better than all the stars and suns of your proud promise or fickle splendor.

What is the secret beating prayer of hope! Redemption come quickly! The busy, bustling world says—No, but still we cry come. O, telegraph, flash tidings! Deep sea threads of iron, let all your tongues be busy with the tale of those wonders, which should bid hope spring up in hearts that have clung even to the very dust of Christ's feet, waiting for his hand to lift them up, and his smile to kindle their heaven. How the question throbs in anxious bosoms—what shall we find in the mail to-day? what sign, what sound, what rumor, what report of the King preparing himself for his visit of the ages? Ye head-lines capping the columns, speak; and specials that have run like lightning along the ocean-bottom, rehearse your wonders, and let us know what is the ferment of the great sea of human ambition and controversy. Herzegovina, Servia, Roumania, Constantinople, St. Petersburg, Rome. We watch you, as we watch the changes of the white thread of mercury, signal of changes in the air; as we watch the bulletins of the signal officer; as we watch home, God's word, or our own hearts; we watch in everything.

No doubt, we are on the tremulous verge of change. God grant it may be so. No doubt we stand on the brink of revolution. Let the sea boil like a pot; for the condition of the world is so alarming that creation cries out for God. I hear a bobolink sing, or a robin chirp, but the melodies of the very air are hollow and funereal unless our Restorer come. What are all the fond imaginings of the insect man, his schemes, his dreams, his parade, his promises of good? Yet this little being of breath will vaunt his indestructibility and glory in the phantasmagoria of his illusive visions. He is built on the fable of his immortality, and struts on the platform of this poor pumice. Alas! for him, when Satan is his informer, and he feeds upon the wind of an exhalation from the underground dark!

Look upon the world, in its heyday of self-imagined greatness, and count the frauds, and adulteries, and abortions! Dram drinking by permission in the very place where America seeks to glorify herself in her great centennial year. Suicide by fire the whole half year, and this wickedness leased to covetous men for money. O, the conceit of this fast and fond America with her rum and tobacco, and her democracy of clay; when she needs so sorely to see that she is poor, and blind, and naked, and her government by the people is a snare, unless the people are wise and good. How slow are the millions to see that God will have a King, and he the crucified. Gentle, tried, great in everything, beloved of the Father, let him have the kingdom. What wonders in his various and blameless nature, wonders in his knowledge and knowledge by suffering; wonders in his goodness and pity, and meek and sweet kindness to all his bruised lambs, and he skilled to heal all their bruises. Not that we could ever know him till God revealed him—never.

The sun shines brightly, and the air is pure, but in this early and tranquil June, there is nevertheless a sob forever in the bosom of nature, until a balm of God is given, and oil is poured into the sore heart of creatures, that wait helpless until the Powerful has come down. What shall we see of God's providence in prophecy, or prophecy in providence during this very June? What is this year of 1876? For my part, I anticipate (without positiveness, but with confidence) a train of great events commencing now, and never ending until the air is become a chamber for the gathering of the elect, above all the confused and vehement "strife of tongues."

Who can not say, I am tired? Tired of work? Not if well. But how many are weary of some things worse than work, or more wearing by far; such as anxiety, disappointment, ingratitude, the carelessness, the haste, the deceitfulness, unfaithfulness, and selfishness of men. Not that anything is so bad, but it might be worse, that is true. There are some who will say, solicitude is needless. They may declare that it is either weak or sinful, or even both; but solicitude is a fact, and I think more or less unavoidably incident to this state of infirmity. But I must close, with my sheet not full. In closing, let us expect God's mercy to us, and live in obedience to him. We merit nothing. Everything is given. Or if we buy, we buy on the credit of Christ; we have no purchase money. Let us keep clear of every entanglement. No wrong affections must bind or disable us. What bugle blast shall we hear? Let us listen.

Sardinia, N. Y., June 7th, 1876.

THE FOUR GREAT EARTHLY EMPIRES.

J. B. COOK.

The prophet Zechariah gives the symbols of "the Gentiles" "which have scattered Judah, Israel, and Jerusalem," in the form of "FOUR horns" and "FOUR chariots." Zech. 1:18–21; 6:1–5. FOUR prophets proclaim the number FOUR as making up the FOUR forms of "the kingdom of men," in which "the times of the Gentiles" are (to be) "fulfilled." Jer. 15:3; Ezek. 21:25–27 (here it is embraced, though the word four is not repeated); Dan. 7:17; Zech. 1:18–20. Then all symbol, parable, prophecy and promise in the New Testament supplements this prophetic number, and makes Rome the "fourth kingdom" (Dan. 2:40; 9:27), the desolator of the city and sanctuary, Jerusalem, and the temple of the Lord; so that it reaches on to "the end"—"the consummation." Dan. 8:11–19; 9:27. "The fourth beast" (the fourth kingdom in symbol) "because of the voice of the great words" its hierarchal horn speaks, "is slain, and his body destroyed, and given to the burning flame." Dan. 7:7–11.

In Rev. 13:2, the FOUR features of "the four" symboled kingdoms are grouped into "the fourth" and last of the series. Then the geography and chronology, the imagery and corresponding history, are all Roman. True, the Jew, and his followers so far, may make a diversion from the line of our world's national and dispensational history, that leads to Jesus the Messiah, and so on to his kingdom, at the judgment on Rome. He may so expand and exalt Antiochus Epiphanes (a mere wrinkle on the Syrian horn of the goat—Dan. 8:8–12) as to absorb the whole Roman symbolism, with its corroborative and matter-of-fact accomplishment, through the gospel age. In like manner, the papal priesthood may presume and assert that "the old serpent, the devil," was bound when Pagan Rome succumbed to the progress of events; and that the world should bow to the popedom as "the kingdom of Christ, in the Catholic church, which cannot be destroyed."—Douay Bible. Dan. 2:40; Rev. 20. (Protestants apply this to Protestant churches.)

These two general views have taken on multiform variations, but they both tend to divert faith from the concentral truth of all prophecy. The first, in its ill-conditioned ignorance, would avoid Jesus' membership. The second ignores his actual coming again to judge and reign. Both may be alike fatal to all faith that saves. I dare not pronounce further than to state the main fact, that either theory tends to subvert the truth and continuity of prophecy, as it stretches on to Jesus' second coming and kingdom, at the judgment on the Gentile—Roman—world. The rod of judgment is stretched out over the Gentile world, whose central political organization has been and is Roman—"the fourth"—in every symboled series of earthly empires.

This point is so plainly and so often revealed, that the most zealous advocate of "Russia triumphant and Europe chained" owned up on it, but added that "Russia would become Roman when it took its place on the Roman habitable"! My answer was that the blood and bondage of Israel stained the escutcheon of Rome nearly seventeen hundred years before the capital city of Russia—St. Petersburgh—had a beginning! Nay, more; this idea of Russia's triumphant career, and her becoming Roman, embraces the absurdity that the conqueror will be absorbed in the conquered! or, that the great serpent, the Boa, on swallowing a lamb, becomes itself a Lamb!!!

But no; as Babylon of old filled out its prophetic career, and was conquered by Cyrus, and his Medo-Persian compeers; so Rome, "the great Babylon" of our age, will fill its sphere on to the session of the Eternal in judgment. Then "the fourth beast" will be slain by our Lord Jesus, the greater than Cyrus. Rev. 17:14; 19:11–21; 2 Tim. 4:1.

Turkey appears in prophecy (Rev. 9:13–21). It took the "third part"—the Eastern division of the Roman world—which centred in Constantinople over four hundred years years ago; and extends on through the sixth trumpet to the seventh, the judgment trump, now about to sound. Amen.

We are thus shut up to faith in God—in his revealed purpose to judge Mystic Babylon, and "the fourth beast." Modern nationalities are as offshoots from the old Roman tree. But neither Russia nor the United States, as vainly imagined, can become the TRUNK to be shivered by the "rod" of judgment, that belongs especially to Rome.

PEACE AND SAFETY.

"When they shall say peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them, . . . and they shall not escape."—1 THESS. 5:3.

Paul, in speaking of the coming of "the day of the Lord," when "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven," and "the dead in Christ shall rise first," and "we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air," in describing the sayings and position of men when that day is about to be ushered in, says, "When they [the wicked] shall say peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them," "and they shall not escape."

The destruction that will come upon the wicked when the "Lord descends from heaven" is illustrated by a thief, who approaches the place of his depredations under the cover of the darkness of night, when those to be despoiled are unconscious of danger, being asleep, and therefore are ensnared. But another class is represented as living at the same time, who would not be asleep, not being enveloped in darkness, and would therefore see the approaching danger, and sound the alarm of war instead of peace, and hasten to find refuge from approaching bloodshed and ruin.

The passage proves clearly that when the Lord comes, unbelievers will be in darkness as to the light of prophetic truth which presents the immediate future, looking for and laboring to maintain peace, anticipating safety, when foretold war and universal destruction is about to overwhelm them.

The apostle evidently made these predictions as an inspired interpreter of the Old Testament prophecies.

The "four winds," or general war, has ever been instrumental in changing the great earthly dynasties. It was war and not peace which transferred the sceptre of earth from the hand of a Babylonian monarch to that of a Persian, from a Grecian to a Roman. The Lord has also instructed us that the Roman sceptre will be wrenched from the hands of her partly confederated kings, and their kingdoms will be "dashed in pieces like a potter's vessel," "and become like the chaff of the summer threshing-floor, and the wind [war] will carry them away, so that no place will be found for them;"—they will be utterly destroyed.

He could also see that the types foreshadowed the same thing. The hosts of the Lord were delivered from their taskmasters in Egypt when blood-thirsty armies were seeking their overthrow. When the appointed time came for the Lord's tribes to take possession of the typical land, the Canaanitish kings sounded the war bugle and hasted to the field of blood. When the Jewish cup was full of national abominations, the invincible Romans fluttered their eagle in the breezes which played around the Holy City. God has ever used the scourge of war to humble proud nations and break the arm raised against him and his chosen people.

The prophetic parchment is now unrolled to the margin, presenting to the eye of faith the last chapter of Roman history. The last section of the divine mould of human government is evidently now being filled. As the last scenes of human woes and mortal strife draw near, we listen to hear the sound of peace and safety from the deceived millions who have closed their eyes to the light of God's prophetic Word, and are sleeping in the darkness of false teachings, traditions, and the deceptions of cunning statesmen.

The prophet's description of this ensnaring cry of "peace" may be understood from the following passages: Isaiah in describing the "last days" says—"Many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths; for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the law from Jerusalem." Paul and Isaiah both foretell what the people will "say" in the "last days," and if the apostle was making an application of the prophet's prediction, it will appear by each giving the same description of what they will say and the result of their position as they state it. Paul says they shall say "peace and safety." Isaiah says the people will say "Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." Their testimony agrees as to what the people will say, and they were evidently describing the same thing.

The prophet then shows that the Lord will "forsake his people [the house of Jacob] because they be replenished [numbers increased] from the east," from the uncircumcised or unsanctified, and "are soothsayers like the Philistines." Vs. 6. Soothsayers were a class of idolatrous teachers, who professsed to have the power of foretelling future events or what betided the people. It follows therefore that the prophet has taught that the Lord would "forsake" many of his professed "people" in the "last days," because they would become soothsayers, teaching that the nations would "beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning-hooks," and not "learn war any more." Paul says, "When they shall say peace and safety [no more invasion and destruction by war], then sudden destruction cometh upon them." The prophet says of them, "The lofty looks of man shall be humbled, and the haughtiness of men shall be bowed down, and the Lord alone shall be exalted in that day; for the day of the Lord of hosts shall be upon every one that is proud and lofty, and upon every one that is lifted up; and he shall be brought low." Vs. 11, 12.

In view of these clear and emphatic predictions, is it not a serious and startling fact that there has arisen a numerous class of religious teachers, who, like the soothsayers have been saying for the past hundred years that in the immediate future there would come a time of universal, national peace, when the nations would learn war no more. And is it not remarkable that these teachers should so often repeat the very words which the prophets put into the mouths of those whom he likens unto the soothsayers of the Philistines, thus literally fulfilling the passage? The false teaching of these peace and safety teachers is set forth as the most fatal snare coiled for the feet of the last generation; and woe to the watchman of God who shall refuse to warn the deceived millions, who are dreaming of coming peace when cruel war is about to engulf them in the pit of eternal perdition.

Jesus also forewarns of this last day snare when he says, "But, and if that evil servant shall say in his heart, My lord delayeth his coming, and shall begin to smite his fellow-servants, and to eat and drink with the drunken, the lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of; and shall cut him asunder, and appoint him his portion with hypocrites; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." Matt. 24:48, 51. Christ, Isaiah and Paul evidently foretell of the same class of religious teachers, locating them in the "last days," rejecting the doctrine of Christ's speedy coming, and teaching that it will be long delayed, thus pleasing the unbelieving world, and uniting with them in wicked feasting and drunkenness, promising them peace, when the Lord has said war. Paul presents them as drunken, shrouded in darkness, and do not see that the thief—or day of the Lord—is approaching. He has the boldness to forewarn the "little flock" of these false teachers of the "last days," and says, "From such turn away." 2 Tim. 3:5.

From whom shall we turn away Paul? From them who are "ever learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth." Vs. 7. But if Paul were here we would tell him that it has become very unpopular to echo his voice—"From such turn away"—when we can give no better reason for doing it than he gave, i. e., they are "ever learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth." God is not man, to play with us, and leave us at our option to obey or disobey his plain commandment to turn away from those he has described as unwilling to receive his truth, but reject it, and despise all who teach and love it.

We believe that true christian union is an essential element in gospel Christianity, and should be carefully cultivated by every disciple of Christ; but its counterfeit—a conventional union—which is produced by human sympathy, new-made creeds, special associations, and the silencing of testimony upon some of the great doctrines of Christ is always ensnaring, against which God has unceasingly warned us.

Every christian church which believes that the gospel is to prevail over all opposition, and that christian effort is to cause all nations to accept the gospel as its political standard of government, without the personal presence of Christ, is now anticipating and proclaiming a glorious time of peace, for the church and world, just at hand. This, we believe, is the predicted cry of "peace and safety," and is a clearly defined sign of the times. Then let all take heed, for the snare is about to be drawn, when unbelievers will be overwhelmed in universal destruction. God save the remnant, is our prayer!

INDEPENDENCE.

As the noted 4th of July, in the Centennial year, is at hand, we have been thinking what a nice time it will be to quit all bad habits, such as drinking intoxicating liquors, using tobacco, and other evil things, and to sign a declaration of independence from all such things, henceforth and for ever. Let it be done in the name of the Lord. Wave an Independence Banner, having for an inscription, "HOLINESS TO THE LORD." Let all who are looking for the coming of Jesus show to the world that they are "free indeed." This is the time. Let it be done in the strength of the One who is "mighty to save." Let Satan's rum and tobacco forces be forever excluded from all christian homes. Amen, and amen.

M. G.

OUR preaching Brn. will find a timely article in this paper from Bro. I. I. Leslie. Let it have a prayerful consideration. M. G.

BRO. J. MOULTON writes from Alfred, Me., June 19th, that they need the aid of preaching. They have a chapel, but no one to preach the word. Who will listen to the Macedonian cry, and go and help them at Alfred?

M. G.

BRO. D. MATHEWSON writes from San Francisco, June 15th:—"I baptized two on the evening of the 4th. We have had eight unite with us. There are hundreds who claim that they believe with us, but yet their influence is against us."

THE POPE'S EXPECTATION.—"A religious, writing from Rome to the editor of the Rosier de Marie, says: 'The Sovereign Pontiff expects the severest trials for the Church to come about in a very short time (the words averair pres prochain, and that in a very short time, were underlined in the letter); so he exhorts us to redouble our prayers.'"

It may be much worse than the Pope expects. A dark cloud hangs over Rome.

M. G.

LIGHT BREAKING.—In the General Presbyterian Assembly in Canada, there has been a long debate as to what is best to do with Bro. D. J. Macdonnell, for expressing his doubts concerning the doctrine of eternal torment, as the penalty for the finally impenitent. He is one of their ablest men, and highly esteemed. Day after day, they have been considering what to do with this noble man. It seems to be a question between the Bible and the creed. Which?

M. G.

BRO. WM. SHEPHERD wishes to say to the friends of Jesus, that it is his purpose to visit the Centennial with the sole object of distributing tracts, which set forth the great truths adapted to these last days; believing the widest field is offered ever opened for this object. Those who are in sympathy with these truths are desired to aid him in money and tracts, to assist in the work. Address Wm. Shepherd, 128 Central Ave., Newark, N. J.

A GIANT CANNON.—The English have been making a cannon weighing eighty-one tuns. They have used three hundred pounds of powder at a time in trying this monster death weapon. The bore of the gun is fifteen inches in diameter. They intend to throw a shot weighing sixteen hundred and fifty pounds. It is said to come up fully to their expectations in its power of execution. This does not look much like preparation for peace.

M. G.

WE consider the New York Witness the best news paper we have seen. It deserves the support of all true men. It stands up nobly in favor of whatever will elevate men, and speaks out boldly against wickedness in all forms, whether in the church or state. It is just such a newspaper as every body needs at the present time. Besides news, it contains valuable religious reading.

Price of daily, $5 a year; weekly, $1.50. Address "New York Daily Witness," New York City.

M. G.

SHORT REPORTS.—We would urge those who report conferences, and write obituaries, to make them short, as but few are interested in such things. It does not matter who prayed, or what hymn was sung; what hour they met, or to what hour they adjourned. All those things are properly entered in the minutes of the meeting, but are not of interest to many of our readers, and will not pay for the time, labor, and money spent in preparing them for the paper. Please do remember this. We have interesting and valuable articles, that are kept out for want of room occupied by conference reports.

If any thing is done or said at conferences that is of general interest, send it to be scattered to all the readers. If any sinners are converted, tell of it, because, it glorifies God; but if it is simply a dry, business conference, in which only officers are chosen, resolutions adopted, in connection with the usual preaching, we think most of our readers would vote that the reports be very brief, and would prefer that the majority of them be omitted entirely. Will conferences and their secretaries please give this matter a kind consideration.

A word more about obituaries. We find there are on hand at the present time, some thirty obituaries. Some of these have several stanzas of poetry, in addition to pages written about the deceased. All this would be exceedingly interesting to the relatives and friends of the departed, but not to any others. We would urge those who write obituary notices, to make them short. If it can be truly said, the dear one "sleeps in Jesus," then all is well.

JERUSALEM.

Jesus said: "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." Luke 21:24. The Turks have trodden down Jerusalem for over four hundred years. The Gentile times must continue so long as Jerusalem is trodden down by the Turks, or any other Gentile power. As an indication that the Gentile times are about to close, the Savior said there would "be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity." Luke 21:25. As these signs have been seen, it follows that we must be near the close of the Gentile times. This being true, it is hardly probable that any other Gentile power will tread down Jerusalem after the Turks. Hence, when there is evidence that the Turkish power is near its end, there is corresponding evidence that the treading down of Jerusalem is to cease forever.

For sometime Turkey has been called "the sick man." A sick man must either get well or die. There appears to be no evidence that he will get well, but it is generally believed he cannot live but a short time. It is quite probable that he may not live through the year. The death symptoms are very marked. The present armistice will afford the different war parties—Russia, England, Austria, Germany, Turkey, and the insurgent provinces—an opportunity to make more complete preparation for the coming struggle. If the Gentile times are about closed, as we believe, then the power treading down Jerusalem must be removed, and lose its dominion.

The removal of Turkey from Europe would not relieve Jerusalem. So long as the great mosque of Omar stands where the temple of Solomon stood, and is controlled by the Turks, so long will Jerusalem be "trodden down by the Gentiles." "The Eastern question" involves the whole matter, and is considered one of the most important questions to be settled by the great powers of Europe, namely, Who shall control Constantinople and Jerusalem? We believe the rightful heir to David's throne will soon settle that matter. All things declare the time is at hand for the powers of darkness to give way before the coming glory of the Son of man.

Already the death struggle seems to have struck the Turkish power at Jerusalem. A telegram from London, June 20th, says:

"The Prussian Cross Gazette publishes a private letter from Jerusalem, which says that great excitement and anxiety prevail there in consequence of the excesses of the Turkish authorities, and a threatened rising of the populace.

On the 2d of June the Christians, fearing an attack, barricaded their houses, and the foreign residents kept an armed watch throughout the night.

The Germans met at their consulate, organized for mutual defence, and sent to their home government a formal application for military assistance. The Turkish soldiers have since permanently encamped in the public squares.

A Berlin dispatch to the Daily News says accounts received from all sources are full of apprehension of further violence, and perhaps general uprising in Constantinople."

We are truly living in a sublime period. Thank the Lord, we are almost home. The long night of weeping is about ended. Cheer up, weary pilgrim; lift up your head, your redemption is near. Hark!—a voice—

"Hold the fort, for I am coming,
Jesus signals still,
Wave the answer back to Heaven,—
'By thy grace we will.'"

M. G.

"TIME OF THE END."

We do not see any room to doubt that we have reached the "time of the end" of the present dispensation. This belief is rapidly spreading in all churches among those who truly love Jesus. The signs of the times are leading many to look with favor on what they have avoided for years. The following from the Christian Herald is a sample of what is being said in many papers:

"We appear to have reached what Daniel terms "the time of the end;" so that now it is high time to awake out of sleep, for we already begin to see the first steraks of morning dawn. We have already witnessed some of the grand events that must very shortly precede the advent, and we may begin to look out full of hope for the actual return of the Lord himself."

When speaking of Turkey, the writer goes on to say:

"Every fresh symptom of decay in that power, every loss of territory by the Turks, every fresh insurrection, and every proof that the empire is reduced to homeless bankruptcy, is like a clarion blast of the trumpet of God ringing through the ears of Christendom; and proclaiming, with a distinctness which cannot be mistaken, "Behold, I come as a thief."

It is the world that will be found asleep, and to whom Christ will really come as a thief. But some man may say, "If there be these signs beforehand, will they not arouse the world as well as believers? Will they not awaken society? Will they not compel men to prepare?" I answer that by another question, Do they? There are certain signs already given; do they wake up society? Have they produced such an impression as to arouse the great masses of of worldly men?

The simple fact is these great fulfillments though conspicuous to the eye of those who study them, completely fail to produce the least impression on the deep sleep of the unconverted world. The prophecies are not read; the facts are not compared with them; the lessons are not learned, and the soul is not aroused to preparation. How many are there even in this very town on whom the fulfillment of God's prophetic word has never produced the slightest effect? They are living just as they would have lived, or rather sleeping as they would have slept if there had been no prophecy to give the warning, and no history to confirm its truth.

Oh, think what it will be to be found naked when all the saints of God are standing around you in their resurrection robes! We have lately read of poor people startled in the night by shipwreck, and rushing as they were to the deck, utterly unprotected against the bitter blast of the severe winter's snow storm. Think what it would be to be suddenly aroused from your own deep sleep, to see all that you have in the world wrecked around you, and to find your poor soul quite naked, while the the terrible storm of God's most just judgment beats upon you and breaks down every hope of escape! Oh, dear brethren, may it never be so with you! May you be amongst those who can peacefully look for Christ's appearing, because you are clothed in his righteousness! May you be kept walking in the light, and cleansed from all sin through his most precious blood! Then you will have nothing to fear, but everything to hope for, in the thought of his second coming."

M. G.

A FEARFUL LOOKING.

The Rev. W. Morley Punshon, L. L. D., President of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference in England, gave an address some months since, in which he remarked:

"This is a period of solemnity, of consideration, of review. If you look abroad into the moral world, everywhere there are indications of restlessness and common distrust, and a sense of nearing danger. Men's minds are agitated with enigmas of existence; consciences apprehend terrors which they imperfectly conceive. Hearts fail for fear of destinies which are future and unknown. There are indeed various ways in which men elude the grasp and pressure of these great thoughts. Some are frivolous and do not think. Some are reckless and do not care. Some are stolid, and think them too difficult to trouble their consciences. Some are scornful, and they affect to sneer at realities which they tremble to anticipate. But men should seek some 'munition of rocks' to shelter them from the threatened storm."

Men who have scarcely looked at the prophetic evidences which prove conclusively that Jesus is soon coming, are unwittingly showing that the signs of the times now are just such as the prophetic student has been expecting to transpire at the time of the end, when Christ should be about to appear. The evidences now before us are convincing many that our blessed Lord will tarry but a little longer.

LETTER FROM ENGLAND.

To the Editors and Readers of the Crisis:

Beloved Friends:—After an absence of about four years, it is my purpose, God willing, to return to the United States on a visit, spending about six weeks in the same. I am anticipating the pleasure of attending the Springfield and Alton Bay Campmeetings, when I hope to have the opportunity of rehearsing what has been done in England to spread the glad tidings of life through the Lord Jesus, and to make some remarks upon the general aspect of the work, which is of an unusually encouraging nature. I should like to fill up my spare time in answering calls from any churches who may wish me to speak the gospel in their midst. The first Sunday of the Springfield Campmeeting I shall be disengaged, and shall be able to call in at some place on the road between New York and Springfield. Letters of invitation or sympathy may be sent to me at 10 Warwick Lane, London, England, if posted by the 6th of July; or, if after that, please address ELDER W. KELLAWAY, care Elder Miles Grant, World's Crisis Office, Boston, Mass.

I expect to bring a few English books with me, the particulars of which can be obtained upon application. And any one wishing any special work brought from England can have it by writing for it not later than the 4th of July. The Bible Echo, the English monthly of which I am the editor, treating on the questions which we have at heart, can be subscribed for at $2.50 the year. Private friends will be called upon as far as practicable. Ever yours, in Jesus, the Christ,

W. KELLAWAY.

OMENS.—The death of Abdul-Aziz takes place when Europe is seething from end to end with excitement; when the wildest rumors of coalitions obtain belief, when Austria is timidly hesitating whether to join England or Russia, when Russia is holding Servia and Montenegro in leash and looking even to Greece and Egypt for allies, and when Germany with her enormous war power stands as an arbiter waiting to cast her sword in one other of the scales, and stay or precipitate a fight of Titans that will shake Europe till the fabled war upon Jove Olympus, with its crash of hurled mountains, will no longer be a figure to invoke, when one would picture in a phrase the terrors of a mighty fray. The ghost of Abdul-Aziz may look down from the bosom of the Prophet upon a blazing pyre in which the throne of Islam shall be burned before the eyes of all Europe in arms, and to the thunderous music of its guns.—New York Herald.

CAMP WISCONSIN.

The campmeeting held at Lavalle, Wis., was a success. The State Conference having been disconnected from the Campmeeting, all the time was spent in devotion, as it should be. Over sixty came forward for prayers; over forty were converted; twenty-six were baptized, and others are waiting to obey. The gathering on the first Sunday was the largest we have had for years. The order was never better on any camp-ground. Wisconsin has received a new impetus. We never had a better meeting in the State. Some fifteen ministers were present. The whole community was moved.

Not only does it work well for the campmeeting to have it held separate from the conference, but it also works better for the conference; for our conference also was followed by a revival. When the two are held together, the one detracts from the interest of the other, by dividing the attention of the ministers between the two. It is not best to spoil both meetings for the sake of saving a little expense. Let us do each work well, and not slight both to save a little money. Let other conferences ponder this matter seriously, and act for the good of the cause. Prejudice was killed this year at camp in all the region about, and the truth was not smothered either, but preached in its clearness.

WM. SHELDON.

MAKE it a rule never to utter any unnecessary complaint or murmurs, but in patience to possess your souls.

THE TRACT FUND.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN PUBLICATION SOCIETY, at a meeting on Springfield camp-ground, August 11th, 1875, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

Through Geo. T. Adams, a friend, $10. A sister, Putnam, Ct., $5. W. D. F., $5. From Sr. Bishop, Cheshire, Ct., $1. From my home sisters, Norwalk, Ohio, a bale of clothing. A bundle of papers from Dr. Price. A white man came four miles to get reading matter, to whom I gave the bundle. He will read and distribute.

Many thanks have been given for these gifts. I have distributed to the best of my judgment, in the fear of the Lord, and have been comforted in so doing. The worldling may call it a small business to send off old clothing so far, but these poor ones do not think so. They receive an old garment with gratitude, and mend, and re-mend, as long as it can be. It is very hard to get clothing and bedding, there is so little money; and as the clothing of the naked is spoken of by the Master as something that will be noticed in the judgment, it cannot be an unimportant duty now. There is deep poverty all over the land, which must endure while time lasts; and a little gift here and there brightens the lot of the poor. There is little real hard suffering now, for most of the families have managed to get a cow, and the gardens are looking finely, and yielding food quite well. Corn can be had in exchange for work, and crops and fruit look promising. Only the old and sick need looking after physically.

The moral and religious aspect looks dark, but no more so than among whites. The papers and tracts sent here I keep moving among all classes who will read. One good white man at the Point has embraced a full gospel. Another, a Methodist, said to me the other day, "You cannot think how much good those sweet papers you send do me." Little by little the seed is sown. Some will take root.

The great hindrance to the progress of a pure Christianity among the blacks is still the influence of their ignorant, and often immoral preachers. They run here and there, and little good follows. I am more and more convinced that the greatest good we can possibly do for the race is to disseminate knowledge among the young, and raise up teachers and preachers qualified to instruct; and I repeat it again, that there are noble abilities in many of these people, which only need moulding and directing aright to become a power for good. There is but little time, but we must keep doing while there is time, and by the blessing of God some good will come of it.

Dear brethren and sisters, sitting in heavenly places, and enjoying the full sunlight of knowledge, I entreat you do not forget those all over the world sitting in darkness and in the shadow of death. I fear we are not thankful enough for the light that has been given us, and for learning that the darkness of earth shall pass away, and that all who shall be numbered among the living shall have the light and glory of an endless life. But O how crushing the thought that so many, and precious friends perhaps, must be covered with blackness and darkness forever. May God have mercy, and help us to rescue some.

CAROLINE TULLER.

West Point, June 12th, 1876.

PERSEVERING EFFORT.—Does it at times seem as if there were no hope of our prayers being answered? Let not the well-known fable of the crow and the pitcher be too familiar not to furnish us with a useful lesson of encouragement. The crow, ready to die with thirst, flew to a pitcher, which it saw at a distance. But when he came to it, he found the water so low, that with all his stooping and straining, he was unable to taste a drop. Thereupon he tried to break the pitcher; then to overturn it; but his strength was not sufficient to do either. At last seeing some small pebbles at hand, he dropped a good many of them, one by one, into the pitcher, and so raised the water to the brim, and quenched his thirst.

So may it be with our prayers. Every pebble we cast in, to adapt the figure, may bring the water of life nearer to our thirsting lips. Every effort brings the blessing nearer, until in time the thirsting soul is fully satisfied, and the needed measure of our prayers is full.

MAINE STATE CONFERENCE REPORT.

According to appointment, the Maine S. A. C. yearly conference met with the church in Bangor, Tuesday evening, June 13th. Eld. H. S. Mitchell preached; some exhorted; then congratulatory hand-shaking and words of greeting told that one faith, one hope, and heartfelt christian love had brought the saints together.

14th. At 9 A. M., the conference met for business. Words of welcome to the hearts and homes of Bangor friends were spoken by Bro. Baker. Opening prayer by J. Albert Libby, and then the sweet song, "Jesus paid it all" was sung. Brn. H. K. Choate, R. R. York, and J. L. Lane, were chosen a committee on credentials.

Preachers present were—I. C. Wellcome, E. A. Stockman, J. A. Libby, J. T. Lane, O. S. French, H. K. Jacques, H. S. Mitchell, F. A. Baker, R. R. York, J. Carr, Geo. Weeks, H. D. Reed, W. H. Warren; Srs. Smith and Pease. Delegates from the following churches were present: Bangor, Bath, Levant, Lagrange, Northport, Chelsea, Portland, Augusta, St. George, Frankport, and Brunswick.

The officers chosen for the ensuing year are as follows: President, Geo. Humphrey; Vice President, F. A. Baker; Secretary, J. Albert Libby; Treasurer, H. G. Smiley; Tract and Mission Agent, C. S. French; Executive Board, J. T. Lane, J. A. Libby, Jer. Carr; Tent and Mission Com., J. A. Libby, Wm. Banton, W. H. Mitchell, H. G. Smiley, H. B. Eaton. Committee on Ordination, I. C. Wellcome, F. A. Baker, J. Gay; Auditor, S. K. Partridge.

At two o'clock P. M., preaching by J. A. Libby, after which conference convened to listen to reports from ministers and delegates. Good cheer, and fixedness of purpose to push the battle to the end, seemed to characterize the remarks of all. Letters were read from J. R. Tripp, Jer. Hill, Jared Whitman, and J. Ridley; after which a committee of five was nominated by the Chair, to choose delegates for the Advent Christian Association, to be held in Chelsea, Mass. R. R. York, H. K. Choate, E. A. Stockman, O. S. French, and I. C. Wellcome, as the Com., in due time presented the following, with their alternates: F. A. Baker, or O. S. French; I. C. Wellcome, or E. M. Haggett; H. K. Choate, or H. G. Smiley; Jesse Gay, or J. Albert Libby; Geo. Humphrey, or Thomas Storer; H. B. Eaton, or Lucien French; C. Goud, or R. R. York.

From the Tent Com., no report. R. R. York, M. S. A. Mission and Tract Society Treas., reported and passed $10.00 into the hands of the new Treasurer.

The question of uniting the two campmeetings, Mechanic Falls and Pittsfield, was raised, and the conference seemed to favor the move, if the campmeeting committees could so arrange. The following resolutions were passed:

Resolved, That we consider it advisable to grant licenses to such brethren as we believe called to preach the gospel, and desire to unite with us in such work, until they make good proof of their call and receive ordination.

Resolved, That the Com. on Ordination be empowered to give such licenses.

Thanks were voted to the friends in B. for the cordial reception they had given us; and also to the President and Secretary of the conference.

Other sermons, besides the above named, were preached by Sister A. E. Smith, R. R. York, and I. C. Wellcome. All our meetings were characterized with much good feeling, and we trust all who were present will go forth with renewed zeal to work for the Master.

J. ALBERT LIBBY, Sec'y.

Correspondence.

From Sr. J. A. Smith.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—While alone, and feeling very much like a pilgrim and stranger, I thought it would cheer my heart to write a few lines to those of like precious faith, who with me are journeying to the promised land. I was converted about twenty-two years ago, under the preaching of Eld. S. S. Nason, of the Christian denomination, and was baptized by him at the age of fourteen years. I did not unite with the church, but tried to live a christian. Not being fed with the truth in simplicity, which my tender years and youthful experience required, I made many crooked paths; sometimes progressing, and again almost forgetting the covenant I had made with my God.

About that time my parents, who previous to this time were Methodists, embraced the doctrine of the near coming of Christ, and feeling for their children, desired them to know the truth, advancing it as opportunity presented, while I as earnestly opposed. But while searching for scripture to convince them they were in an error, I became convinced myself it was Bible truth. Thanks be to God, the Spirit and the word agree. If we search with an honest heart to know the truth of his word, the Spirit of truth will guide us right. Since that time I have been a firm believer in the soon coming of our blessed Lord; although I have had to contend with much opposition, having an unconverted companion for many years. I feared sometimes lest I should be forever destroyed; but thank the Lord, about one year and a half ago he gave me great desire and labor for the salvation of my husband. No tongue can describe the deep anguish I felt for his eternal welfare. I can truly say, I fasted and prayed continually for about two months, then my blessed Deliverer took the burden. I was enabled to give him up into the hands of a just God, perfectly reconciled to his will. O what an assurance I felt that God would take care of him. I had nothing more to do with it, but to serve my heavenly Master, whether he did or not.

O praise the Lord for his tender mercy and loving compassion for us fallible mortals. How soon he began to manifest his power to save, when he had taught me that I must break away from that idol; that I must have nothing that I could not give into his hands; nothing that filled a deeper place in my affections than the Lord my God. Then he showed me how easy it was for him to change that heart without the aid of mortal, which he did, although my companion had not attended a religious meeting for many years; would not speak on the subject; yet God could send conviction deep to his heart, till he shook like a leaf in the wind, and was led to cry, "Lord, save, or I perish"; and when the mighty hand was stretched forth, how quickly he grasped it, and gave thanks for deliverance in shouts of praise which have been resounding, wherever he has been, ever since. O praise the Lord; we are now both rejoicing in the hope of soon seeing our blessed Savior, and being made like him, to dwell with all the redeemed on the new earth.

Bangor, Me., June 13th, 1876.

From Bro. I. S. Moser.

Dear Brn.:—When reading the Crisis on Consecration, I thought I would write to you, and tell you that I have given myself to the Lord. He has done great things for me, for which I praise him. I praise him that it is our privilege to walk with him, and to know we are his through faith. We are not of the world, for Jesus says, "I have chosen you out of the world." We cannot do as the world does; and we do not wish to. We have pleasure in doing the will of God. "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life."

I believe the Lord is near, although we do not know the day or the hour. He has told us we might know when he is near, even at the doors. I have but one talent, but I wish to speak for the Lord every day; for Jesus says, "Ye are my witnesses." We can all work for him, and I wish to be one of the workers. Pray for me, that I may be strengthened to do the Lord's will.

Camden, N. Y.

From Bro. D. D. Reed.

To the faithful in Christ Jesus:—We are laboring in Southern California this season. We commenced meetings about sixty miles east of Los Angeles. We have had good meetings; some have been converted; three have been baptized. One was an old man seventy-five years of age. After attending the meetings a few times, I asked him how he felt? Said he felt worse than before I came. We told him we were glad of it; it was a good sign. He submitted to Christ, was baptized, and went on his way rejoicing. Pray for us, that the work of the Lord may run and be glorified.

Obituaries.

WELLCOME. In Monticello, Minn., of heart disease, May 17th, 1876, Eld. S. C. Wellcome, aged fifty years.

This (my) dear brother was cut down in the prime of life, and in the midst of a prosperous career of usefulness in the cause of Christ. During more than thirty years he had been a very faithful and active christian; and though impressed that it was his duty to preach, he feared it might be a wrong impression. Some six years ago, the Lord opened the way so plainly to him, he doubted no longer, and cheerfully entered upon the work of the ministry, proclaiming Christ as the Savior of sinners, and the soon coming King. The Lord has greatly blest his ministry, and several hundreds of souls have been brought to Christ and found pardon; many christians led into the joyous hope of Christ's soon coming, and kindred truths. Several prosperous churches have been raised up and organized, and others greatly increased and strengthened, under his labors, in various parts of Minnesota. Thousands of healthful and useful publications on the gospel hope and signs of the times, have been scattered through that State by him to aid in gospel work. But his active work is suddenly closed. He had constantly overworked, and been fast wearing out a good constitution. Having the care of, and doing all the preaching for several churches, the past winter and spring, he evidently fell under the great amount of labor. Paralysis of the heart and blood had afflicted him for several years. Suddenly he was attacked by it while away to fill an evening appointment. He could not preach, but drove home, four miles; told his wife he should die this time; gave directions about his funeral and burial; gave counsel for his two sons, then absent; all in two or three minutes; was soon speechless, and died in a few hours. All medical aid failed.

We quote items from Minn. papers: "The attendance at the funeral services of Eld. Wellcome, which were held in the Advent church in Monticello, was so large that many persons were unable to find seats. Out of respect for the deceased, no services were held in any of the other churches Sunday A. M. All the ministers of the village took part in the services. The opening hymn was read by Mr. Jenkins; Mr. Teter led in prayer, and Mr. Blowers read the Bible lesson. Eld. L. F. Cole, of Minneapolis, preached an able discourse, and at its conclusion gave a brief sketch of the life of the deceased." "Eld. Wellcome was an earnest and conscientious christian, and consecrated his life to the service of his Master. His time was nearly all occupied in preaching the gospel and propagating the doctrines of the Advent faith. He had a wide circle of friends and acquaintances, who will be deeply moved by the news of his sudden death, and will sincerely mourn his loss."

He leaves a wife, two sons, mother, four brothers, one sister, and many friends, to lament his death. But we are all cheered with the blessed hope of Jesus' speedy coming to give our brother and us eternal life in the new earth.

I. C. WELLCOME.

BAXTER. In Norfolk, N. Y., May 14th, '76, Albert B. Baxter, aged twenty-eight years.

The subject of the above notice embraced the truth during the past winter; and when nine others who had embraced Christ were immersed, he was expecting to make one of the number who should follow the Savior into the watery grave; but disease had so fastened itself upon him, that he was unable to leave his room, and but a few days after we were called to speak words of comfort to sorrowing hearts caused by his sudden death. To use the language of his near neighbor, "Albert was a good boy." Mother, father, brothers, sisters, and friends, are left to mourn. The basis of the sermon on the day of his interment was Isa. 25: 8. C. PIKE.

HEY. In West Barre, N. Y., June 12th, '76, after a short and distressing illness, Bro. Henry Hey, aged sixty-four years.

The enemy has taken from our number one that was loved and respected by all who knew him. In his death Sr. H. has lost a kind and good husband, the children an affectionate father, the church one of its brightest jewels; the world a faithful, honest, upright man. His last testimony for Jesus (after quoting Rom. 10: 8–11) was, "I do believe, and hope not to be ashamed at his coming." A sermon was preached by the writer, founded on Acts 23, last clause of the sixth verse. May the Lord bless the word spoken to the bereaved ones. B. P. STEPHENS.

A. C. Times, please copy.

DEAN. In Grand Junction, Greene Co., Iowa, May 30th, 1876, of lingering consumption, Bro. A. A. Dean, aged thirty years.

He gave his heart to the Lord and obtained the blessed hope in his last sickness. He leaves a wife and two children to mourn their loss. Words of comfort by the writer, from Matt. 25: 34. May this blessed hope sustain our dear bereaved sister and family. P. F. WILLOUGHBY.

Adv. Chris. Times, please copy.

SMALL. In Bush Centre, Kan., May 7th, 1876, of spinal disease, Coseva May Small, daughter of Mrs. Mosier, aged four years, eleven months.

Her parents, though deeply afflicted, yet bow in humble submission to the will of the Lord.

S. M. E., Pastor M. E. Church.

SCOTT. In Newton Highlands, Mass., June 18th, 1876, of diphtheria, Mary Louisa Scott, eldest daughter of George F. and Anna L. Scott, aged eight years, eleven months, twenty-three days.

STAHL. At Skegg's Springs, Cal., May 28th, 1876, Bro. Henry Stahl, of Vallejo, Cal., born at Holstein, Germany, June 8th, 1830.

Decoration day, 1875, Bro. Stahl stood in the cemetery, and by an earnest address exhorted living comrades to duty. Decoration day, 1876, he was laid among the silent dead. After years of suffering, he rests as he lived—in hope. Workingmen have lost a beloved associate, community an honored citizen, the church a faithful brother, the family an affectionate and devoted husband and father. We endeavored to persuade the large concourse of people, who attended his burial, to choose "the death of the righteous," and a last end like his. H. F. C.

GIDION. In Philadelphia Hospital, May 10th, 1876, Sister Ann Gidion, widow of Wm. Gidion.

Sister Gidion was a firm believer in the coming of Christ. She was a great Bible reader. She was taken to Gloucester, to her son Wm. Gidion, and buried in the Methodist burial ground, where we left her to sleep till the resurrection morn.

FOREIGN NEWS.

LONDON, June 23. The Daily News this morning publishes a letter from its Constantinople correspondent dated June 16th, giving details of atrocities committed in Bulgaria during the insurrection, and which still continue, the perpetrators being Bashi Bazouks, of the Turkish irregular troops. The writer says that all movable property has been plundered, houses and villages burned, and old men, women and children indiscriminately slaughtered.

It is estimated that the province which heretofore yielded to Government an annual revenue of four million dollars will not pay one quarter of that sum this year or for years to come.

Various estimates place the number of lives sacrificed at from 18,000 to 30,000. The correspondent names thirty-seven villages which are known to have been destroyed.

Among the refugees, the number of whom is very small, there is not a girl over ten years of age. In the village of Servstitza, in the district of Phillippopolis, 1500 persons are known to have been killed.

The village consisted of four hundred houses, and was prosperous and peaceful. Every house has been burned and all the inhabitants killed, except a few women and children, who took refuge in Phillippopolis, and some women who were carried off by the Bashi Bazouks.

These cruelties have made a great impression at Constantinople. The English Ambassador has intervened with the Government to put an end to them.

CAIRO, Egypt, June 21. Murad Effendi was officially proclaimed Sultan of Turkey yesterday.

LONDON, June 24. The latest despatches from Constantinople state that increasing uneasiness prevails in that city. Members of the family and friends of the Circassian assassin of the Turkish Ministers have been arrested as a precautionary measure. The murderer was a brother of the late Sultan's third wife. The new Sultan, Murad Effendi, is stated to be very ill and very much depressed. There is much talk of his abdication in favor of his brother. Russian residents of Constantinople are sending away their wives and children, as another revolution is feared. The existing Government is fast becoming very unpopular and must make a decisive move quickly one way or the other, or it will surely fall.

The Standard's special from Vienna says: "Count Andrassy has frequently conferred of late with the Russian and other Embassadors. It has been agreed to instruct the foreign representatives at Belgrade that Servia must not expect any assistance or even benevolent neutrality if she commences war against Turkey. Russia and Austria have agreed to meet jointly any emergency arising in Servia."

A special to the Standard, dated Constantinople the 21st inst., via Athens says: "Great uneasiness prevails and is increasing. The palace of Sultan Murad is surrounded day and night by pickets of cavalry. The Russian residents are sending their families away.

Ibrahim Pasha has been placed under arrest. There are various rumors that he is implicated in the Russian intrigues, and that he assisted Abdul Aziz in disposing of his treasure.

The censorship of the press is extremely severe. The Turkish and three French journals are now suspended. The Government is fast becoming unpopular, and will speedily fall if it does not abandon its undecided attitude.

Several Corsicans have been arrested in Constantinople on charges in connection with the recent assassinations. The police have seized a quantity of arms and ammunition. The Sultan is not well.

A telegram from Ragusa to the Times reports that a body of insurgents, taking advantage of the departure of Mukhtar Pasha's expedition to Nicsic, ravaged the plain of Nevesinje. The booty was immense. Eight thousand animals of various kinds were taken to Banjani. The insurgents absolutely reject the armistice and have refused an interview with Baron Roditch. The insurgents in Duga Pass did not oppose the revictualing of Nicsic, because they received positive orders from Montenegro not to interfere.

The Times correspondent at Berlin says the Government contemplates an immediate issue of a four per cent. loan for $25,000,000.

The Servian Minister of War has informed Prince Milan that the entire second ban of Militia has been mobilized and sent to the frontier. This adds 42,000 men to the 70,000 already under arms, and completes Servia's armament.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

New York, June 21. A Wilkesbarre dispatch says there are indications of trouble in the coal combination, and a crash is more than probable; also that the miners throughout the Anthracite region are on the verge of starvation, owing to the great reduction of production, and there is much cause for fear from an uprising of the suffering miners and their families to forcibly obtain the necessaries of life.

Cincinnati, June 23. The Enquirer's Paris (Ky). special says a tornado struck the northern portion of that city at 6.30 P. M., demolishing ten or twelve houses, including the colored Methodist church, uprooting a large number of trees, and doing other damage. Two persons were injured, one seriously.

At Nicholsonville, Ky., the lightning struck a house, igniting two kegs of powner. The explosion demolished the building, seriously injuring a colored woman.

Tent Meeting.

Through the kindness of friends, I have been able to purchase a tent, and, the Lord willing, shall pitch it in Pepperel, Mass., June 27th, 1876, and hold meetings as long as the Lord may direct. The people are eager to hear the truth, and will do all they can to sustain it. The few who are identified with us are poor in this world's goods, and the prospects of remuneration are very small; but we want the people to hear, and how can they hear without a preacher? I would say to our dear preaching brethren, who are able, to give us a call, and help the cause along; and if we are not able to remunerate you, will not feel that your labors are not appreiated. We invite our brethren and sisters in neighboring towns to come and help us save the perishing. We have but a short time to labor for the Master, and let us do all we can to save the lost. The tent will be pitched near Bro. Heyward's house, on a beautiful spot a short distance from the depot. M. A. POTTER.

Tent Meeting in Plainville, Ct.

The Lord willing, Bro. Grant is expected to lecture on the prophecies, from his large chart, in the Mission Tent, at Plainville, Ct., commencing Tuesday evening, July 4th, holding through the week, and over Sunday, July 9th. We desire that the Holy Spirit may rest down upon this meeting to the conversion of sinners, reclaiming of wanderers, and encouragement of the people of God. Pray that the prophetic light may brightly shine upon the pilgrim's pathway, showing distinctly the perils of the present generation, and inspire to complete readiness to meet a soon coming and glorified Savior. We hope to see a general gathering of brethren and sisters, and shall endeavor to accommodate as far as possible. The Tent will be pitched about seventy-five rods southwest of the Congregationalist Church.

OUR OWN.

J. E. LLOYD.

Andrew, the disciple of Jesus,
When he knew the Messiah's great love,
First went and found his own brother,
And said, "This is the Christ from above."

And thus would we do by our kindred,
We have loved them so long and so well;
When our hearts find the joy of believing,
We hasten the glad tidings to tell.

O friends, we have found a clear fountain,
Where we are cleansed and made white;
And all are invited to enter,
And all may wear garments of light.

We have heard of a glorious kingdom,
Where the King is the Prince of peace;
And these cares, this unrest, and this sorrow
Forever and ever shall cease.

Together we cling to our loved ones,
And weep bitter tears o'er their clay;
O joy! a Redeemer is coming
To drive death's dark shadows away.

O hasten, dear friends, for time waits not;
O come, for Christ's arms are spread wide;
There are voices to win and to help you,
And hearts full of love by your side.

We eagerly watch and we listen—
Will they heed not the offered grace?
Will they linger, and loiter, and perish?
Will they turn from a Savior's embrace?

The eyes that have looked on us kindly—
Will their light forever be dim?
And the voice that has been to us music—
Will it join not eternity's hymn?

Will the holy ones meet through the ages,
And these in forgetfulness lie?
O Spirit, now teach them they must not,
With a heaven full of life, choose to die.

NOTES BY THE WAY IN NORTH ALABAMA.---No. 2.

To the A. A. M. Society.

Dear Brethren:—My last left me (May 24th, I believe) at Gadsden, resting in the pleasant home of General Turrentine. In the evening a heavy rain and thunder cloud kept many away; but a few came out, and I spoke in the Court House (the churches not being offered us). Thursday, 25th, the rain again kept the people away, save a few, but I tried to tell that few that the Master is coming. The town was thickly posted with handbills for a concert in a popular church on the night of the 26th, with the following words: "Vocal and instrumental music, operatic pieces, etc." Said Jesus—"It is written, My house shall be called the house of prayer; but ye have made it a den of thieves." So thought I, your house is too good for "the soul sleeper" to preach in, but you can open it for "operatic pieces," and "tables of money changers." But I verily believe, and tried to faithfully tell those people, that Jesus is soon coming, and that he will overthrow "the tables of the money changers," and cast out the traders.

Friday morning, 26th, Bro. Hood and myself started for Lebanon church in Coat's Bend of Coosa River, to meet at night in a school-house. The rain stopped us, and we stayed at Bro. Matthew Turner's till morning. Soon after we stopped another heavy rain fell, which continued till near midnight; but notwithstanding the rain, Bro. Turner soon gathered in the neighbors, and we had a pleasant little meeting. Here I met Bro. Joseph B. Turner, another Baptist minister who has embraced the truth, and loves it dearly.

Saturday and Sunday we enjoyed a blessed season at the church, where we met also Bro. Hodges, another minister who loves these truths. Two orthodox ministers were out to the meeting, one of whom, Bro. Wester, took part in the meeting Sunday P. M. The audience was large Sunday A. M., and we had indeed a precious season. Christians of all sects seemed to rejoice at the nearness of the Lord's coming. So mightily did God's Spirit work, that the woods were made to resound with many loud hallelujahs of happy souls. After closing the meeting at 5 P. M., we rode five miles to Bro. Hood's home, where, at 8 P. M., I spoke again to a large crowd, who sat in the door-yard, while I stood in the porch.

Monday, 29th, rode with Bro. Hood back to mother Bankson's, on Spring Creek, about twenty miles. Met the church at night, and tried to preach again. Tuesday, May 30th, by invitation, Brn. Hood and L. O. Bankson went with me to the beautifully located village of Cedar Bluff, where I had been invited to send an appointment. Here is where Bro. Livingston had been excluded for heresy, and of course the high priests did not wish any further trouble. So the Baptists and Methodists did not allow me the use of their house. But instead of stopping the heretic, it only gave me more room in the open air, on the street, under the shade of a "sycamore" tree. I tried in my weakness to give those who came the teaching of the Bible on the hope of eternal life. At the close, a Bro. Stone asked a question in regard to future punishment, saying that it had been reported that I did "not believe in future rewards and punishments." The answer soon satisfied him, and I left him giving the village church members some plain talk about their selfishness.

Here we parted with our dear Bro. Hood, and in company with Bro. Bankson rode for Galesville, where we arrived in due time for the evening service, having been overtaken by a heavy rain on the road, and getting pretty wet. We found a resting-place in the family of Dr. Lawrence, who had kindly invited me to visit the village, but who says he believes in the immortality of the soul. I asked him if it was true that mind is the result of an active brain? He said yes, the brain is as a musical instrument upon which the soul played, and the mind is the result, as the tune or sound of the musician playing on an instrument. "Very well," said I; "after the brain is dead, what does the soul act on to produce mind?" After a moment's reflection he very candidly replied, "Nothing." He opened his chapel, and furnished lights, and I tried to tell the attentive crowd about the incorruptible inheritance. Then I rode that night four miles to Bro. Livingston's, and stayed until morning. Wednesday, 31st, met at the church, where I tried to preach on practical Christianity for the benefit of the newly organized band. Then elected church officers, and at the close gathered around the table to show forth the Lord's death. Took dinner with Bro. Lewis Blackwell, and in his wagon, with himself and four others, we rode to Sprout Spring, to meet a night appointment. It rained just at dark, but a house full came to hear.

Thursday, June 1st, at McGeehee's chapel. Spoke to a few. On account of so much rain, others stayed away. At night a good crowd came out, among them the circuit rider, Bro. Lowry, who replied to my remarks on the state of the dead. I then replied to his assertions, and proposed to give one hundred dollars for one passage proving his assertion that men die and go to heaven. Meeting closed with good feeling, and I am sure the people in that place will read their Bibles with new light. Bro. Livingston and myself stayed with Bro. Frank Thompson, who brought us across Lookout Mountain to Valley Head, a distance of twenty-five miles. At this place we had expected to walk to our appointment, but Major A. Lee kindly met us with a hack, and conveyed us out to his house for dinner; then to Bro. Beene's for supper; and before we had expected, in fact before sunset, people began to gather from all directions, and by candle lighting the church was jammed, and many had to stay outside. We both spoke. The people seemed interested. When meeting closed, we started for cousin Wm. Lee's, and when within two miles of his house, a heavy rain began which gave us a complete wetting. This is Bro. Livingston's first tour in preaching our views; and so far it has been pretty rough initiation; but nothing strange for me to undergo for the truth, which is dearer to me than life. We changed clothes and retired about midnight.

Saturday A. M., we ascended Sand Mountain to Crow's church, where I had spoken on my way out. Met a very attentive crowd, and tried to preach. We then went to the water, where I buried two in baptism. May the grace of God sustain them amid the perils of these last days. At night, Bro. Livingston spoke with much interest. Sunday A. M., still further on the mountain to Pea Ridge, where we met an unusually large crowd for that place. They gave good attention while we tried to prove Jesus at the door. After meeting, we came down into the valley to dinner with Bro. M. Cordell, one of the two baptized on Saturday. Pray that he may be faithful in rearing his promising young family, and at the same time prove useful in the cause of God. Sunday evening, at Bro. Painter's church (Methodist). Bro. Livingston preached with the power of the Spirit to a very large crowd, while I suffered extremely with high fever and pain in my head, from over work, having been out twenty-three days, and preached thirty-three times, besides traveling in all about one hundred and fifty miles through the mountains and valleys.

Monday, June 5th, Maj. Lee brought us to Sulphur Springs, to meet an appointment, but the brother who requested the meeting was taken sick before reaching home and died; consequently, we found no one expecting us; so we started on. Cousin Wm. Lee, with his mule, came with us to Rising Fawn, Ga. From there we took our baggage on our backs, and walked to Bro. Thomas Payne's, where I am now writing. Bro. P. is a Methodist minister, and with his amiable, intelligent, and industrious christian family, take pleasure in making us both feel at home, while we rest our weary limbs. I rested sweetly last night, and feel much refreshed this morning. Shall rest over here to-day, and begin meetings again to-night. I often sigh for home, where we will never tire. It seems that I must preach, through storm and calm, and I cannot see any room or time to rest till Jesus comes. I long to return to see my dear family and rest a few days. I hope the dear saints will not forget to pray for us daily. Your Bro. in tribulation,

J. A. Cargile.

GIFT OF THE SPIRIT.

The following interesting experience of Bro. J. F. Joy, will be read with pleasure by those who love Jesus. After having a common christian experience some eight years, he decided to make a full consecration to Christ, and writes as follows:— M. G.

Two years have passed, the two most delightful and satisfactory yet known. Though conflicts were severer, and trials greater, victory was quicker and easier, so I could rejoice in infirmities, in reproaches for Christ's sake, and be "exceeding glad," not for them, but in them. And what years of instruction, as I get glimpses of the golden side where glory glitters, gilding every cloud. Oh, how transporting the grace-of-God view is, to that of the Egyptians and works. Here I prolong the vision backward, around, and forward, and Christ is all and enough. The gospel heavens are studded with riches, and the Book of Jehovah contains nebulæ more glorious than the starry heavens. Let us then look into the perfect law of liberty and continue looking ever, with the face to the Sun of Righteousness and not keep turning the back, looking at our own shadow. Ho, every one that thirsteth! Stop running, working and worrying after holiness, righteousness, purity and power. Just stoop in submission, and drink from the full, everflowing stream, and accept peace, holiness, righteousness and power divine, all ready, complete, not needing human touch; all in Christ I need, and all imputed by faith. Oh, grace, grace unto it. I see, oh, I see my mistake! For eight years I daubed with untempered mortar, trying to help or partly do what was complete and perfected forever in Christ. At conversion I saw my utter bankruptcy, and accepted pardon as a free gift. But did not know I was just as bankrupt for peace, righteousness and sanctification, and they were to be had on the same terms, and no other, as pardon. So I tried to keep myself by Jesus' helping in cases of difficulty, and supposed I should grow by working, and live by doing right. I said in my heart, "I will do the best I can, and then, as a student carries the poor painting to the teacher for perfecting, so I will deliver my clumsy work to Jesus, and trust him to complete it." Not knowing I was "yet carnal," under the law, straining mightily to do God's work.

No Patchwork. Human righteousness and the righteousness which is by faith are two distinct things. The righteousness we need was all ready before we were born, just as pardon was. We receive pardon when we accept it, so we receive righteousness not by doing and thinking holiness, but by putting on the Lord Jesus by faith. "White robes," the righteousness of saints, is purely a garment of Christ's own handiwork, and all deeds of all good men can never weave one thread in that robe. The "Lord our righteousness" is no human fabric, but complete before we were bidden. The Prince furnishes the wedding robe, and not each guest their own. How can we have the righteousness of God? Christ Jesus "is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption," and we are to accept the complete righteousness. How? By substitution or imputation. How? By faith. Rom. 4: 24. But are we not to work out our own salvation? Yes, yet we only work out what he works in: "for it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure." Should one cease working out what he worked in, he would choke the word and become unfruitful.

Sanctification the apostles put for the christian level. This is the work of the Spirit; set apart of God. We obtain it as we do other gifts, for Christ is made to us "sanctification." But it involves a full consecration. All the offering the heart can make (and none is acceptable but heart offering) is only full submission, yielding back to God his own, and we no longer usurp. Our bodies, life, time, all, a living sacrifice is only our reasonable service and submitting only what we have no right to control, for we are not our own. Coming up to par service; just reconciled to God. He then takes possession of his own, and sanctifies it, setting it apart for himself, sealed with the Spirit. He then abides, reigning in and ruling over his right possession, and we rejoicing and wondering in his government. Oh, lovely household! All glorious Prince, paying all debts, meeting all demands, having the whole government upon his shoulders, for the life that now is and that which is to come. We are to trust him and do his will in active and passive obedience. Entire consecration of the heart and will, laying all friends, property, soul, spirit and body as actually on God's altar as if parted from each. As actually as Abraham offered Isaac; and taking sealed orders for contingencies that may ever arise. That is no consecration which is easy to utter, but hard, when God takes the offering. Lip work and heart work are two things.

Submission is man's part, not as an enemy, but as a friend yields with a gushing heart of gratitude when a generous gift is bestowed. Submit all. Do you say I have? Have you submitted your will and your doubts? Then you are as clay, and just fit for molding into a vessel of honor. We are God's husbandry, or garden, and he the husbandman, and the growth of fruit is his work, which he will do if we yield willing obedience, for it his pleasure we bear much fruit. Growth is not the result of human work nor zeal. We grow by abiding in Christ, as the branch in the vine. Christ has life in himself and our life comes by union with him, and the growth and fruit is as spontaneous, easy and inevitable as that of the branch grafted in. But do we not abide in Christ by a constant strain and works? No. "Because of unbelief they were broken off, and thou standest by faith. Be not high-minded, but fear." "The just shall live by faith," and works are the manifestations of life. Do not work to believe, but believe in order to work. Works do not sanctify, but the sanctified one works. As well think of a branch growing and bearing much fruit and never having leaves as to suppose one can be in Christ and not work. He is in labors more abundant, not to be saved, but because saved from sin. Growth is not developing the old or patching the mainspring, but casting out the old, and a new heart created. Grow by receiving gifts; by putting on the Lord Jesus Christ. Grow also "in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." All the riches of grace we possess in Christ are already complete; though to us hidden until we come to know them, and then we see them finished from the beginning. Oh, the development of knowledge of what we have in Christ, unfolding into halls of glory, from glory to glory.

Perfect in Scripture may refer to a perfect growth or a perfect completion. But he is the perfect man whose heart is in fellowship with "the father, and with his Son Jesus Christ," notwithstanding his mistakes in ignorance. He is the perfect man who puts "on the new man which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness." Human perfection is perfect weakness. Christ our perfection is complete. "For by one offering he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified." So provision is made that ye be "perfect even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." This perfection was complete in Christ, waiting for me to see—come in heart knowledge of—and possess now by faith. But when we have come "unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ," having received the gift of pardon, and life, and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost, durable riches and righteousness; is it not as the child grows to importance and possesses to use as he pleases, and enough to last a long time without receiving more? No. Nothing descended from Adam which can be grown into life or immortality, or developed into manhood lost. No more develop into life and holiness than can the body by any human skill gain immortality. It is on the death, crucifixion, of all of the first Adam, comes the new man Christ Jesus. Christ possesses all. Dead to the world, crucified with Christ, risen with Christ, married to Christ—we Christ's and Christ God's, and all things are ours. Then do we not possess a large capital for years? No. The blood cleanseth only moment by moment, and if it keeps me cleansed ten years, I have not enough to last a minute longer than the application. The gifts of grace are not native to, nor grown in us, nor given in stock, no more than natural sunlight. They are God-given, moment by moment, forever. No one by having sunlight can ever possess enough to give light or to see a moment longer than sunlight is given. Nor can forty years of holiness, wisdom and light divine supply for a moment longer than given, but is needed constantly and forever. I, in myself, am ever dark and bankrupt; in Christ, I am ever light and rich.

Oh, what a privilege to ever enjoy such gifts of God; ever new, ever fresh, never stale. The hidden life and treasure can be found only where hid; hid in Christ. And we draw nourishment, not by tapping and carrying away an occasional supply, but by abiding in the vine. No more can a christian grow or develop himself than add to his stature, or make a hair white or black. "I am the vine, ye are the branches. He that abideth in me, and I in him, the same bringeth forth much fruit." "The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance." (To be concluded.)

Stand still in the hour of trial and you will see the help of God, if you trust in him. Let God work for you when the hour of the trial of you faith comes, and do not work a deliverance of your own.—Muller.

TO MY BRETHREN.

Dear Brethren in the Ministry:—What is our motive in preaching? Is not this an important question? It involves another inquiry,—will it do for us to preach the gospel with any other motive than to save souls? With me this is a serious question. When I look at Jesus, and think of the motive he had in preaching his gospel, and his object in sending out his disciples to preach, I am led to ask, Have I myself the same motive? and do I keep always this same object in view?

Is it not necessary, my brethren, to examine ourselves on this point, as well as upon all others? If there is danger in every direction, as we admit there is, there is surely danger to us here. We know the enemy is making every effort possible to deceive all men, and so we are included. We who stand next to Christ in the work of saving men, are not left without our temptations; and among the attempts of the adversary to destroy us, may there not be this one: to induce us to preach with a motive foreign to that which Christ had, and which also we must believe the apostles possessed? To preach the gospel "for the gospel's sake," is a great thing to do. But is not this for us to do, as well as for Paul? If out of love for Christ and perishing men, he proclaimed the gospel, and with no other motive than this gave himself to the work of the ministry, surely we can do the same. If we are preaching the same gospel that Christ and his apostles proclaimed (and are we not?), should we not preach it for the same reason, and with the same object in view? Should we not be without all desire for personal benefit or pleasure through preaching the gospel?

These are perilous times for us, my brethren in the ministry, as well as for those to whom we preach. Have we not need, therefore, to take heed to ourselves, that we feed not the flock of God with a selfish motive, or for a personal advantage? Is there not danger of our having respect unto a present recompense of reward, and so we lose that unto which alone we should have respect? The temptation to preach for some worldly benefit is as great to-day as it ever has been; and the love of ease and pleasure is as liable to spring up in our hearts as it was in the hearts of those who lived in the earlier ages of the dispensation. We are men of like passions, no farther removed from the world than they were; and if it was necessary for the preachers of Christ in the early days of the gospel to guard against loving the world, and preaching with the motive of gain of any kind, it surely is necessary for us now to do the same. And are we not, my brethren, put on our guard in the Scriptures against entering upon this work with an unhallowed motive, and a worldly expectation? We know the admonitions and exhortations to us there, as well as those to others; and if others do not preach to us, let us preach to ourselves, and be as free from covetousness as we preach that all should be.

Let us, dear brethren, look closely into our motives in regard to our work of preaching the gospel. Let us see that it is not a selfish one; for if it be, we may lose the reward that is to be brought by Jesus at his coming. Let us have love enough for Christ and the perishing everywhere to prompt, yea, constrain, us to preach the gospel. If we have not this love, how can we effectually preach it?

Our work is almost done. We shall soon be called to receive our reward. Let us have it all then and there. If we have preached, sacrificed and suffered by our preaching—preached from love to Christ and sinners—preached with a heavenly motive—then will the reward be great, and cheerfully given, and the "Well done" emphatically pronounced. I. I. Leslie.

REPORT OF BRO. J. J. SMITH, ALA.

Dear Brethren:—Since my last report, I have had much affliction in my family. At one time all, but myself, were confined to bed. For about four weeks, I was obliged to remain at home and watch and care for the sick ones. Thanks to the Lord for the strength that bore me through without being prostrated myself. While thus confined at home I lost the appointments I had made for preaching on a tour westward. I had devoted some time with our churches laboring to build them up. The evil one had sown in some of them the seeds of discord; in others the love of pleasure had overcome some. Some of us have wept and prayed over these troubles. The question comes up with new force, "Lord, are there few that be saved"? How few? Yes, how few are there that believe and live up to gospel teaching? And are those only to be saved? Well, thanks to the Lord, there are a few who are the salt of the earth, perhaps, more than we are aware of.

Since our recovery from afflictions, I have been out in the harvest field at work. I have made a tour into E. Tenn., and N. Ga., preaching to many who never heard the truths to which we give prominence, as meat in due season. I met with none who seemed disposed to contend with me. I was as courteous as I knew how to be toward others, but spoke the truth plainly.

In Ga., I visited a Baptist church, that I had preached to twenty years ago. I found but few of the former members or neighbors present; nearly all had removed from the country or from the living. But I found a few warm-heared, liberal-minded men and women, who extended many a token of their kindness. I gave them a regular series of five discourses on the Bible, as a revelation from God; the prophecies of the Bible and their fulfillment, the signs of the times, the coming kingdom, and the saints' inheritance. I have seldom seen more attention given to the word preached. I had warm solicitations to come and repeat the course, and extend it, when the crops are worked, and the people have more time to attend meetings. I handed out a goodly number of tracts, which the people seemed to appreciate. A Baptist minister was among those who solicited my return. I hope the seed sown may bring forth fruit in its season.

I have also made two trips westward, in one of which I visited Goose Pond church, to which Bro. J. M. Stewart preached last year; but moving back to his old neighborhood had left them without a pastor.

A call has been made upon our little churches in Alabama to hold a general meeting, at Edgefield, near Stevenson, on Friday, before the fifth Sunday in July, for the purpose of forming a conference, if the churches think it proper to do so. There is some diversity of views on the subject. May the Lord give us wisdom and understanding to know what we ought to do. 1 Chron. 12; 32.

To all of like precious faith: Pray for your unworthy brother, that his faith fail not. Oh, how it is tried! but the hope of speedy redemption yet sustains the worn-out pilgrim. It does seem to me that we will not have to wait much longer for the loving Savior. Am I ready? What lack I yet? Lord, help me to be, to do, and suffer all thy will. Yours in patient waiting.

THE WORK OF GOD.

G. W. STETSON.

"Bless the Lord, O my soul. O Lord my God, thou art very great; thou art clothed with honor and majesty." "God is greatly to be feared in the assembly of the saints, and to be had in reverence of all them that are about him." "Among the gods there is none like unto thee." The work of God in our midst, manifested at our recent quarterly meeting (June 10 and 11), when we were permitted to give "the right hand of fellowship," on behalf of the church, to twenty-eight happy souls, rejoicing in the Lord on account of his great compassion, wherewith he has loved them, and his mercy graciously extended unto them, attests the truth of the Psalmist's declarations above given.

We had the sweetest time for baptism, on Saturday, ever witnessed. The morning came with clouds and rain, but mid-day swept them all away; dust gone, sky clear, air bland, water pure, warm, and limpid, with a good gravel bed for a firm footing, and the people, in crowds, thronging the banks of the stream, but so quiet, so respectful, so profoundly reverent, in the presence of the Lord, as we administered his holy ordinance of baptism to the willing souls obeying it, that our heart was moved with gratitude to God for his pervading presence, as we never felt it stirred before. Not a jeer, not a scoff, not one disrespectful utterance was heard from that crowd of "lookers-on." And the immersed ones, O how their faces did shine through the water, as we laid them beneath the yielding wave, in that symbolic grave, where they were "planted in the likeness of his death," and then as they "rose again," in "the likeness of Christ's resurrection," how the joy beaming on their faces, proclaimed to all that "the way of obedience is the way of peace."

But I am taking too much of your space, and must close by saying the Lord was with us in Spirit, and we had a most precious time. Some came from Franklin with the Macedonian cry, "Come over and help us;" and the "church" decided that I should "comply," and go to them once in two weeks for the summer. May the good Lord give us health of body, strength in spirit, wisdom and discretion, to sow the good seed of the kingdom.

OUR RESPONSIBILITY.

WM. SHELDON.

If the light of truth has dispersed the the clouds of tradition and error in our experience, that truth is as valuable to others as to ourselves. But how much are we doing to enlighten error-befogged souls? Are we making special efforts to chase away theological darkness, by disseminating the light of truth? God has thrown a responsibility upon us in this matter, and we cannot shake it off. One part of our work is war on false theology, though this war should never be carried on in a sour, censorious spirit. Wave the flag of truth high above the banners of error, and keep it floating in the presence of its foes. It is our duty to place the standard of truth just where God has placed it in his Word. We have no right to compromise with error in any guise.

While we should elevate the standard of theological truth, let us also lift up the standard of experimental religion, and raise it it above the low type now so generally accepted. Men must be "spiritually minded" in order to please God here, or enter the kingdom hereafter. But in order to give due prominence to this vitally important theme, we are not warranted in smothering God's unpopular truth. "The spirit and the word agree"—do not seek to divorce them to please men, for it cannot please God. If the apostles had waited till Christianity was relished by the Jews, before pressing the message, it never would have cut its way through opposition.

GEMS.

— All carnal pleasure is Satan's bed, into which he casts his victims.

— God often sends judgments, because we will not own his hand of mercy.

— Faith will teach thee to use means as God's ordinance, but rely on God to bless it.

— We could as rationally set out to find a sound that had expired in air, as to find a lost moment.

— Combat all thy discontent through prayer, every care through faith, every fear through hope.

— Two things are to be particularly aimed at by every minister—good conduct and sound truth.

— In evil times it fares best with them that are most careful about duty, and least about safety.

— In every instance in which we have been wanting in love to our brother, we have been wanting in love to Christ.

— It is not the mentioning of mercies but the improvement of them to piety, which expresses our thankfulness to God.

— There is no sweeter spirit than a yielding spirit, submitting to God, and saying, "thy will be done."

— If rich, be not too joyful in having; too solicitous in keeping; too anxious in increasing; nor too sorrowful in losing.

— Until a man knows himself to be justly lost, he can never know himself to be graciously saved.

— A single sigh breathed from the bottom of a burthened heart is a loud cry in the ear of God.

— Stumbling proves our tendency to fall, but it proves also our capacity to stand erect.

— It is a great mercy to want that patiently which God denies justly, and to use that wisely which God bestows bountifully.

— In times of affliction we commonly meet with the sweetest experiences of the love of God.

The birds rise betimes in the morning, and are saluting the rising sun with their sweet notes in the air. Thus should we strike up our harps in praising God at the first appearance of a mercy.

RESTING IN JESUS.

L. B. WEAVER.

I never in my christian experience felt more confidence in Jesus than at the present time. My trust is perfect. My whole soul is in the work of the Lord, and in him I find peace and abiding rest. O, if ever I felt to praise and bless the Lord for his goodness and mercy to me it is now. Jesus is my Shepherd, my Savior, my Friend, my all-in-all. How blessed it is to dwell under the shadow of his wing, and feel that I am safe; safe in the arms of my beloved. Yes, I do feel that, like a wife, who has a dear, kind husband to lean upon, I can lean upon him, and feel safe, nestled down upon his loving breast. O how sweet to know and feel that we are all the Lord's; not a wave of affliction, not a sigh, nor trial, not one pain too much, will God suffer to come upon us; but like a gentle, loving Father, he will see that not one single thing will come upon us but what is for our present and our eternal good. My whole being goes out in praise and adoration to Him who has loved us and washed us in his own blood, and who will perfect that which concerneth us, and who will do for us all he has promised; therefore, though all else fails, he is the same. I will trust and rest in him, and soon I hope to see him face to face, and be made like him.

REPORT OF YORK CO. A. C. CONFERENCE.

The York Co. A. C. Conference, held their quarterly session at Bar Mills, commencing Thursday, June 1st, and continuing over Sunday, the 4th, the President, Jesse Gay, presiding.

The ministers present at this meeting were Jesse Gay, Wm. H. Mitchell, E. A. Stockman, Geo. W. Brown, Mark Stevens, A. Stillings, R. F. Emerson, Jer. Hill, J. R. Tripp, and G. F. Haines. Thursday, P. M., was spent in social worship. In the evening, Bro. Wm. C. Stewart, of Exeter, called and gave us a discourse, founded on 2 Pet. 5: 7. Friday, both morning and afternoon, was spent in social worship. Preaching in the evening, by R. F. Emerson.

Saturday, met at 7 o'clock, A. M. for business. The items of business attended to were as here stated. The Secretary being absent, G. F. Haines was requested to act in that capacity.

Voted, to hear the report of the Treasurer, which was given and accepted. The report of the Evangelists was then called for. G. F. Haines reported as having held meetings in company with Bro. Sweet, in the following places: "Beach Ridge, Parsonfield, East Baldwin, and Sebago. Besides the above-named places, Bro. Haines visited and held meetings at Bar Mills, Hollis Center, Springvale and Bonny Eagle. Received for his three months labor, $20.87; paid for traveling expenses $4.65, leaving a balance of $16.22.

After hearing the above report, the following resolutions were read and adopted:

Resolved, "That we, as a Conference, express our approval of the course pursued by our Evangelist, Bro. G. F. Haines, as given by his report for the last three months. Also,

Resolved, That as members of York Co. Conference, we pledge ourselves to contribute according to our ability, on or before the next Conference, means to reasonably compensate Bro. G. F. Haines for his labor as Evangelist, during the past three months; the aforesaid mentioned contributions to be deposited with Bro. Haines or with the Treasurer.

Voted, To hold our next session at South Hirham, commencing Thursday, Sept. 21st, at 2 o'clock, P. M.

Voted, To adjourn our session to meet at South Hirham, Friday, Sept. 22nd, at 4 o'clock, P. M. We hope our ministering brethren and delegates will remember this.

We had preaching Saturday and Sunday from the following brethren: A. Stillings, Jer. Hill, Mark Stevens, Geo. W. Brown, Jesse Gay, R. F. Emerson. At the close of the Sunday afternoon, Bro. R. F. Emerson was duly set apart to the work of the gospel ministry. At this meeting, our congregations were small at first, but continued to increase. so that Sunday the house was well filled. There was not witnessed that revival interest which we would liked to have seen; still the good seed was sown, and we hope that ere long, it will spring up and bare fruit to the glory of God. To this end let us pray.

CHARITY.

T. L. WAUGH.

"And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity."—I Cor. 13: 13.

This term was employed in the apostles time with a different signification, somewhat, than at present. It is from the Greek agapee, which is love. I merely mention this that some may have an accurate idea of the early usage of the word, which we use to express a different meaning. Love, then, is the mainspring of action with the christian, and incites him to activity for his Lord and Master. It also binds the hearts of christians together without which but little can be accomplished. When the heart is filled with this divine element, it naturally flows out toward others and delights to labor for Jesus. It is this of which the apostle speaks, which is the fulfilling of the law. Charity or love, unites; while the opposite divides and distracts the flock of God.

How precious is this love which is shed abroad in the heart, and makes us love not only the saint, but the poor sinner and wanderer. It sweetens the cup of affliction; brightens the pathway before us, which leads to the land of rest.

Praise God for his wondrous love to mankind, and for Jesus, who so loved us that he died that we might obtain life. Glory to God and the Lamb I feel to exclaim. Let us love one another and God supremely.

The Watchmaker's Question.—A young man was for several months in a backsliding state, which manifested itself in the usual way of conformity to a fashionable and unholy course of life, and a neglect of the ordinances and institutions of the house of God. During this time he called on a deacon of the church, who was a watchmaker, and asked him to repair his watch.

"What is the difficulty with your watch?" said he.

"It has lost time lately," said the young man.

The deacon looked up to him with a steady and significant eye and said, "Have n't you lost time lately?"

These few words brought the backslider to repentance, to the church, and to duty.

The store-house of God's bounty is to-day as full as ever, and prayer is the key that unlocks every door of God's treasury.

HOME AND HEALTH.

SPRING FOODS.

All writers on diet agree that special kinds of food are adapted to special seasons and climates. This adaptation is due to the different constituents of different foods, or, rather, to the differing proportions in which the various elements of food are found. Thus, certain vegetable products, as nuts, corn, and beans, contain a considerable proportion of oil; while many others, as wheat, rice, the potato, the apple, and most fruits. contain no oil at all. Vegetable products which contain the most oil are the best suited for use in the cold season, since they are more productive of heat than articles which contain less. We need more heat in the cold season of the year than during the warmer seasons; consequently, we should, eat, during the colder months such articles as nuts, corn, and beans, more freely than at other times.

But what has this to do with 'spring foods?" It has an important bearing, since it teaches us that on the approach of spring we should drop from our dietary foods calculated to produce heat. If this course is not pursued, serious injury may occur, the system being liable to become clogged with unused material.

The foods most appropriate for use in the spring are grains which are comparatively free from oil, acid fruits, and green vegetables. The craving for sour foods and fresh vegetables which many people experience at this season of the year is a natural instinct, and its indications should be regarded. One of the causes of spring sickness is a failure to regard the indications of nature in this respect.—Health Reformer.

NOSTRUMS.

There is scarcely a newspaper in the country whose columns are not burdened with the advertisements of infallible cures for all manner of maladies. The waters of a hundred medicinal springs; one hundred and fifty alcoholic preparations; a hundred specifics for consumption; fifty panaceas for dyspepsia and liver complaint; a score of rejuvenators for nervous debility; a dozen nostrums for rheumatism; many pills for constipation; with innumerable bitters, buchus, sarsaparillas, resolvents, detergents, pain killers, aperients, pulmonics, cholagogues and electuaries, are sold extensively all over the country. These remedies are all warranted to cure.

And now, dear unthinking people, did it never occur to you that if these nostrums possessed one-tenth or even one-hundreth part of the virtue pretended for them, invalids ought to be scarce? But statistics, mortuary and sanitary, as well as ordinary observation, will show that the particular diseases they are guaranteed to cure, are undiminished in frequency and fatality. Take consumption for example. In all our cities there are one or more consumption curers. They advertise special plans or specific remedies which are infallible even in the second and third stages. Patients flock to them in droves. But those who will take the trouble to inform themselves, will ascertain that the death-rate is not diminished in the least.

In New York, several fortunes have been made within twenty years, by specialists who set up business as consumption curers; but not one person has been cured by them. Does not this fact alone prove the knavery of the whole business.?—Health Reformer.

First Floor Bedrooms.—If we had a house with a bedroom on the first floor, we would at once abolish the use of that room as a sleeping apartment, because we are satisfied that it is a wrong custom, it being much healthier to sleep up-stairs, to have the beds, summer and winter, exposed the whole day to the fresh air from open windows (except of course when there is rain or mist), and also to have during the whole night one window partially open, even in winter, so as always to inhale the fresh, cool air from the outside, but using at the same time the precaution to have sufficient bed covering to secure warmth.

Worth Knowing.—A lady friend who lived in the far west many years, informs us that for the bite of a rattlesnake, an application of saltpetre, pulverized and kept moist with water, will effect a cure in the course of three or four days. We have also been told that the yolk of an egg thickened with salt to the consistency of paste, and applied to the wound, is an unfailing remedy.—Ex.

Why Children Should Sign the Pledge.

It will lead them to inquire what ardent spirits, beer and wine-diinking does.

It will lead them to resolve that theirs shall not be the drunkard's end.

It will teach them their moral and free agency, and that they are to be actors for themselves in future life.

It will cause them to feel as they have never felt before, their own responsibility.

It will give them a new and permanent interest in the temperance cause.

It will preserve them most effectually from the enticements of the wine cup.

It will prevent them being urged to drink by others.

It will make them good examples for others.

It will bring them out and embody them as a temperance army—a Band of Hope.

It will make them active and bold to gather in others, and extend the cause.—N. Y. Witness.

AFTER THE STORM.

After the storm, a calm;
After the bruise, a balm;
For the ill brings good in the Lord's own time,
And the sigh becomes the psalm.

After the drought, the dew;
After the cloud, the blue;
For the sky will smile in the sun's good time,
And the earth grow glad and new.

Bloom is the heir of blight,
Dawn is the child of night;
And the rolling change of the busy world
Bids the wrong yield back the right.

Under the fount of ill
Many a cup doth fill,
And the patient lip, though it drinketh oft,
Finds only the bitter still.

Truth seemeth oft to sleep,
Blessing so slow to reap,
Till the hours of waiting are weary to bear,
And the courage is hard to keep.

Nevertheless, I know
Out of the dark must grow
Sooner or later, whatever is fair,
Since the heavens have willed it so.

AM I IMMORTAL?

BY THOMAS WILSON.

Am I immortal? Yes, if what I have always believed is true; if what thousands of others believe is true; and if what our minister teaches is true. But here are three ifs. Is a doctrine of such great importance contingent upon ifs? Is it not settled beyond controversy? No, the very asking of the question, implies a doubt. But it must be so, that I am immortal, else the great majority of mankind believe falsely. Still, that cannot be relied upon as proof of my immortality—the mere fact of a majority of believers can settle no great truth. Instances are numerous, I find, on the pages of history, where majorities have attempted to settle what was true and what false relative to matters of faith, as well as the great principles of science, and decided after all on the side of error. Again, if I attempt to dismiss the inquiry, and rest contented on the ground that most men assert their immortality, I am confronted by a fact in history that disturbs my security by proving that at one time most men believed the opposite. Socrates, who was a great champion of the doctrine of inherent immortality, when reasoning upon it says: "Can this soul of ours, being such, and of such a nature, when separated from the body, be immediately dispersed and destroyed, as most men assert?"

But when I reflect still further, I am compelled to relinquish this line of argument as affording no proof of my immortality, for I find that were the Christian religion tested by the majority rule, the verdict would be against it; for it is well known that out of a population of over one billion two hundred millions now on the globe, over nine hundred millions are openly opposed to Christ. The fact then, that a great majority of men believe that they are now immortal, affords no proof that they believe aright.

And I am not satisfied, either, to rest for proof upon the mere fact that I have always believed so. The long continued belief of error will not prove it to be truth, So that I am forced to examine the foundation upon which my belief rests. What reason can I give for believing that I am immortal? Really, I am almost at a loss to answer. Let me see; our minister has taught his hearers for many long years that they were all immortal, and that they would in consequence, either live forever in happiness or misery. Why, the doctrine is so common and universal that I am almost amazed to find myself in the act of questioning it, or seeking for proof of its truth. Still, the apostle Peter tells me to "be ready to give an answer to every man that asketh me, a reason of the hope that is in me, with meekness and fear." 1 Pet. 3: 15. Yet I am sure if any man should ask me for a reason for believing that I am immortal, I should be at a loss for an answer. To propound such reasons as those I have been debating in my mind would certainly be weak and unsatisfactory. Surely there must be stronger reasons somewhere, either in nature, or in God's word. I will try and call them to mind, and examine them, for I am determined now to settle this question thoroughly, so that I may be ready, as Peter says, to give every man who asks me, a reason for my hope.

First, I remember that I have heard that the very fact of man's longing for and reaching out towards eternal life, affords strong presumptive proof of immortality, else why should he yearn for it? But this, to me, is very unsatisfactory reasoning, for following the same line I might say: There is my hired man, John, he is incessantly wishing he was rich and telling how happy he would be, consequently this is strong presumptive proof of his present rich condition. And there is a man who is hungry; he smells the savory meats that are cooking, and he longs for them, therefore he must be already full of them. A sick man longs for health, which is strong proof that he is at present well. Such reasoning as this is worse than childish, and if I can find no better arguments with which to prove my present immortality, I certainly shall be led to doubt it.

Next, I am told that the very fact that I am endowed with reasoning powers, and possess a conscience, is conclusive proof of my immortality, since the brute creation are destitute of these. True, I am endowed with powers that the animal creation do not possess. But this is merely a gift of brain power, which the Almighty saw fit to confer upon man as the head of the whole creation. And this brain, when exercised, produces effects which are unknown amongst the animals. But I also find that even among the animals there are differences existing in brain power, one class of animals possessing certain organs of the brain that others are deprived of. Hence when I reach man, and find him possessed of organs, which none of the animals can boast, I am simply led to the conclusion that he is truly at the head, next to God, being created in his image and likeness. To reason that I am therefore immortal, would certainly be strange reasoning. The mere fact of my possessing the organ of causality which enables me to reason from cause to effect, does not prove that I shall live forever. Neither do the additional organs of veneration, conscientiousness, etc., confer immortality upon me. They may help me to comprehend the teachings of God's prophets and of his Son Jesus Christ, and enable me to love the Author, but to say that I am therefore, or for this cause, immortal, is certainly gratuitous. At least so it seems to me. As well might I reason that the horse is immortal because he possesses organs of the brain that are superior to the animals below him. I see no proof of immortality in such reasoning. In fact I am driven from outside research to God's word, where I feel confident satisfactory proof alone exists. To the pages of this blessed book then will I gladly come, and rest my wandering feet on its firm foundations. By way of assistance, I will call in Cruden's Concordance, and find every text in the Bible which speaks of "immortality" or of those who are "immortal." I am determined now to settle my mind upon this most important question, and be ready hereafter to give a reason for my hope.

First I will find all the texts where the word "immortal" occurs, for there must be a host of them, judging from the preaching of our ministers who tell us so much about "immortal souls," "immortal spirits," and "immortal man." I will examine each one carefully in the light of the context, and in the light of each other, and see if I cannot triumphantly prove my immortality from this great fountain of all truth. I will take the texts in order as I find them, and go on to the end.

The first I find is in 1 Tim. 1: 17. It reads as follows: "Now unto the king eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God, be honor and glory forever and ever. Amen" This certainly does not mean me, nor you, nor any one but the "King eternal." He, according to this text is immortal. This is a good beginning. It proves that immortality is not a fiction, but a reality, and that it is possessed by "the only wise God." Now I must look for other texts which speak of men being immortal. . . .

What! is it possible! No more texts in that Book of books where this word "immortal" is found? So it seems. I have carefully examined my Concordance and I find no other place where the word occurs. And that solitary text leaves man entirely out, and speaks of God only. What becomes of our minister's frequent references to "immortal souls," if the word "immortal" is never found in God's word in connection with "soul?" Why, I am utterly astounded at the result of my examination thus far. New revelations seem to dawn upon my mind. But I will proceed. I will search for the noun "immortality" and see whether or not any of these texts refer to man. The first I find is in Rom. 2: 7. It reads thus, beginning with the sixth verse: "Who will render to every man according to his deeds. To them who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory, and honor, and immortality, eternal life."

This certainly refers to man, and it speaks of immortality, too, but I find that according to the context it also refers to a certain day, yet future, when God will "render to every man according to his deeds," and that eternal life (which of course is a life that never ends) will be rendered to those men who "by patient continuance in well doing have sought for glory, honor, and immortality." Now I perceive that this does not agree with the idea that I am already immortal. If I am, then I am possessed of a life that will never end, or in other words of "eternal life." And if this be so, God certainly cannot confer it upon me in the future, seeing that I already possess it. Again, I see by this text, that the parties who will be thus rewarded in the future, are those who by patient continuance "seek for immortality." If immortality already dwells within me, as I have been assured is the case, and as I have always believed, how can I seek for it elsewhere? To seek for that I already possess is nonsense. It cannot be possible that God would so teach. Hence I am led to conclude, if I reason fairly, that this text does not teach me that I am already immortal, but it does teach me to and it assures me that if I do this patiently, and continuously, and couple the search with acts of "well doing," that God (who as we have already seen is immortal) will confer eternal life also upon me.

JESUS LOVES ME.

Miss ANNA WARNER. Wm. B. BRADBURY. By per.

"We love Him because He first loved us."—1 John iv. 19.

2. Jesus loves me! he who died,
Heaven's gate to open wide;
He will wash away my sin,
Let his little child come in.
Chorus

3. Jesus loves me! loves me still,
Though I'm very weak and ill;
From his shining throne on high,
Comes to watch me where I lie.
Chorus.

But this is only one text: perhaps I can find others that speak more in harmony with the popular view. Ah! here are two verses in 1 Cor. 15: 53, 54, each of which contains the word sought for.

"For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. And when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory." What does this mean? Paul is arguing, I find, all through the chapter, upon the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead. He points us to a time yet future, when "death shall be swallowed up in victory," which he says will be accomplished by means of a certain transformation or change that will take place in connection with those disciples who "sleep in Christ," and those who do not sleep. He alludes to them as being corruptible and mortal now, but those who are corruptible he says will then "put on incorruption," and those who are mortal, will put on immortality." In order that I may be certain as to who are meant, I must learn the precise meaning of these two words "corruptible" and "mortal." Webster is my authority, and I find that he defines the meaning of "corruptible" as follows: "That which may decay and perish—the human body." And "mortal" he says means "a being subject to death, a human being, a man." I conclude therefore that the apostle Paul uses the word "corruptible" in reference to "human bodies which may decay and perish," and the word "mortal" in reference to "beings who are subject to death —human beings, or men." Hence when he says that "this mortal must put on immortality," he does not intend to teach me that I am already immortal, or that I put on immortality at my birth, but that I shall put it on in that future day, when the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and the living or mortal believers in Christ, will be "changed."

This change will consist in the putting on of immortality—a state of deathlessness in exchange for that subjection to death which belongs to the mortal state. This certainly does not teach me that I am now immortal, but as the other text taught me to seek for immortality (implying its non-possession), so this teaches me that I have it not now, but that I shall put it on, when the trumpet sounds and the dead are raised. I can really begin to see a beauty and harmony in God's word. I had always supposed that we put on immortality when the spirit left the body, but now I see that such a proceeding would be more properly described as "this immortal putting off this mortal," but God's word says, "This mortal must put on immortality," and thus far I have discovered nothing to teach me that I am already immortal.

But I will proceed still farther, and introduce another text. I find it in 1 Tim. 6: 15, 16, and it reads as follows: "Which in his times he shall show who is the blessed and only Potentate—the King of kings, and Lord of lords, who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto, whom no man hath seen, nor can see, to whom be honor and power everlasting. Amen." This certainly refers to the great God, and not to man, hence I cannot find any proof here of my immortality. In fact I discover, on a careful reading of it, that not only myself, but the entire race of man are totally shut off from any pretense even to present immortality, for it distinctly declares of God that he "only hath immortality." If this be so, pray how can I set up a claim to possessing the same thing? If he only hath it, it is certain that I have not got it, and if I have not, other mortals like myself have it not. And I see wisdom in this now. If God only hath immortality, then man is dependent upon God for it, and if he desires it and seeks for it as God has said, he will at last put it on, when the trump sounds. This presumes that man is now mortal, or subject to death, which he certainly is, as sad experience has so often taught us in the case of dear ones already dead.

But I now see that although death may seize me, yet if I long for immortality, it is placed within reach, and I can obtain it. I can thus secure a mighty transformation when Jesus comes. He will change my vile body, and fashion it into the likeness of his own glorious body, by making it deathless or immortal. Phil. 3: 21. This reveals to me a highway to immortality that I had little dreamed of. How securely I dwelt in the belief that I was already immortal! I am not only astonished but rejoiced to know the truth that this great boon is not transmitted by mortal men but comes from God alone. It removes a dreadful thought that has always oppressed me, viz.: that wicked men are immortal and must exist forever in their wickedness. Now I see that to live forever is to be immortal, and vice versa. And I also see that living forever—eternal life—immortality (all synonyms) is possessed by no one now, but in the future will be conferred on those who have patiently sought for it. This the wicked never do, consequently they will never possess it—hence, they must eventually perish, or cease to exist. This thought is certainly more in harmony with a true sense of justice and mercy, than the horrible and fearful idea which I once entertained, that they will live forever in horrible and increasing torments. I never could harmonize the latter idea with God's character as revealed by himself, and I feel a great sense of relief now in finding that his word does not teach it. To live forever, is to be raised to the Divine nature, and this none will experience but the righteous, or those who desire and seek for it. At least this seems to be the teaching of God's word thus far, in my investigation.

But there is one more text, and only one, where the word "immortality" is found. It is in 2 Tim. 1: 10, and is as follows; "But is now made manifest by the appearing of our Savior Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." This is the last text, and still I find no proof that I am immortal. I do find here a declaration that my Lord Jesus hath brought immortality to light through the gospel. And here I am led to ask myself the question—does this mean that Jesus has brought to light through the gospel, the fact that I am now immortal, or is it the fact that immortality may be obtained through a belief and obedience of the gospel? Clearly the latter, judging from the previous testimony.

In conclusion, I find that the word "immortal" occurs but once in the Bible, and there it is applied to God. I also find that the word "immortality" occurs but five times, and three times it is applied to man, and twice to God. But where it is applied to man I find that in the first place I am told to seek for it, thereby plainly teaching that I have not got it in possession, and in the next two places where the word is applied to man, it is plainly taught that immortality shall be put on, when the trump of God shall sound, which could not be if I already am immortal. An immortal being cannot put on immortality. In the other two instances where the word "immortality" is found, I learn that God only hath it, and that it has been brought to light through the gospel. Hence I am forced to conclude that I am not immortal, but mortal.

DEATH AND DYING.

I am sure the dreadful stigma applied to the Scriptures as the word of God, and to the character of God himself, cannot be too thoroughly exposed. It is not an ordinary error, or small in importance. As there is no possibility of fully comprehending and describing the truth of that divine love by which we are redeemed and saved, so there is no possibility of comprehending and describing fully the blasphemy of that Satanic falsehood, which imputes to the God and Father of all, the act of consigning to endless, unmitigated, irremediable woe, the great majority of the human family. It turns upside down, and directly contradicts the intent and meaning of that act of grace, which drove out the sinners from Eden, lest, having become subject to pain, and sorrow, and shame, they should put forth their hand and take also of the tree of life, eat, and live for ever in that terrible condition.

Our friends seem not to think and observe that endless life to the sinner, from the moment that sin entered, became an impossibility, except through faith in Jesus, who that tree of life typically represented. Endless life in sin and sorrow, was directly and distinctly prevented. It was prevented in their removal from the place of the tree of life, and in barring on every side access to that tree. What is that but the final casting ont, and driving away of the wicked from the presence of Jesus, and the guarding of those entrance gates to the New Jerusalem where the tree of life luxuriates forever, so that none, except those who are previously prepared, can enter or abide in the glory, and eat of the life-sustaining fruit. Besides which, another figure used by the Lord, indicative of the helpless and lost condition of such as are cast out, is that of an unbridged and impassable gulf; a gulf that is equally and alike impassable by both those who are rejected and those who are saved, for all the purposes of communication. The lost can neither obtain access to the tree, nor have the fruit sent to them; neither in that fire of Gehenna is there any relief; from thence there is no deliverance; the fire is unquenchable; utter destruction by death is inevitable.

Endless torment requires the possession of endless life in order to the conscious endurance of such torment. The Scriptures never call the torment of the wicked death. Death is the end of the process of dying, as it is written, "dying thou shalt die;" but that which, or he who, never dies, cannot in truth be said to be dying. "The death that never dies," is self-contradictory. The dying sufferer who really never dies, (if it be possible to conceive such a state), lives forever; and wheresoever or whatsoever his suffering, he is not even dying. They are distinct states, the one preceding the other; death inevitably following and consummating the state and process of dying, when no remedy avails to save and keep alive.

"A never dying soul to save, and fit it for the sky," may be poetic; but it is utterly and doubly false. It is a couplet containing the doctrine of natural immortality, and the reward of heaven at the moment of death; and it has the further defect of hiding, if it does not ignore, the resurrection, as the means to which hope is directed for full deliverance from death. An unsaved, never-dying soul is an ever-dying soul that lives forever in torment! Does there exist a proposition more absurd? Can untruth be plainer or greater? It is surely the most blind of all philosophy to speak of the lost as ever dying, and yet incapable of dying, and never dead! There is no misconception or contradiction of the Scripture greater than this; none can possibly be greater. The believers in transubstantiation, and purgatory, and the headship of the Pope, and the intercession of saints and angels, and the worship of the Virgin Mary, and the miraculous power of relics and images, and other such like errors and contradictions, have quite equal ground for their belief.

THE COMING AGAIN.

The coming again of our Lord Jesus Christ, literally and visibly, to this earth, for the purpose of ending this dispensation and inaugurating his own reign, is a subject of christian thought and study that seems to have been, for a thousand years or more, singularly and sinfully ignored by Christ's own people. The truth itself as Biblically revealed—the Scriptural setting forth of the momentous fact of the next advent—the inspired announcements of both Testaments concerning our Savior's second personal coming—are so frequently and distinctly urged, that the inattention and indifference of the church in relation to the subject seem unaccountable. Just now, the truth of our Lord's second coming is gaining notice among his people, and we doubt not that there will be from henceforth a share of attention given to this blessed theme that will cause it to come more immediately to the front, as one of the principal subjects of christian contemplation.

The modern church is totally unlike the ancient church in regard to its treatment of the great and precious truth of the second coming of our blessed Lord. In the primitive church, the second coming of our Lord Jesus Christ was anticipated with delight, and the prospect of the Savior's speedy return was the occasion of their constant joy. Their eager expectancy of the immediate return of Jesus to this earth, caused them to err on one side—our sleepy unexpectancy of his coming, and our fond imagination that such a coming is indefinitely distant, cause us to err on the other side. They were given to the most restless inquiry as to when should be the "times and seasons" of their Lord's return—we are given to the most listless unconcern on the whole subject, apparently not caring whether our Lord shall come at all. They were incessant and urgent in their asking, "When shall these things be?" We are asking, if we are forced to any asking on the subject, in the very words of all primitive and modern infidels, "where is the promise of his coming?" If extremes have been touched, certainly we are one of them, and the worse one at that. What may be true or untrue concerning this grand theme of revelation, one fact is unchallengeable.

It is observable in church history that where God's people have adjourned the coming of Jesus to some remote date of the far-off and shadowy future, religion has fallen into coldness, worldliness and formality. And when, on the other hand, the people of God have been vigilantly observant of coming and passing crises, and have regarded them as premonishing the near advent of Jesus, the church has returned to spirituality and has seemed to imbibe much of the watchfulness and zeal of apostolic times. Such being the voice of history, and such the high moral effect of this great truth, it is certain that the calling back of the church's attention to the long ignored truth of our Lord's second coming is a duty that interests all who stand as teachers of the church at this day. If the unspirituality, and coldness, and worldliness, and formality, and unfaithfulness, and inconsistency, and carnal-mindedness, and covetousness, and disobedience, and idolatrous loves and practices of the now-a-days-church do not make an occasion for the introduction of some urgent and startling form of religious doctrine that will shake the christian world out of its deep slumbers, then we confess our inability to imagine a condition of churchly declension that would create such an occasion.

No doubt this sad and doleful condition of lapsed churchism is the prime cause of the current ignoring of the great event herein spoken of. The church of to-day (we speak in the general) is not ready for the Lord's coming, and is not seeking to become so, and hence its unwillingness to anticipate that event, and its growing scepticism as to the truth of the predictions which relate to it. But even in this, prophecy finds its fulfillment, for there can be little doubt that the non-belief which Peter reproves in his second general epistle is a form of infidelity that pertains to the church—to such as are the professed people of God.

But the Judge will come. And he will come to receive to himself all who look for his coming with joy, and to visit upon those who do not "love his appearing," whether within or without the church the long-threatened damnation.

"Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him; and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him."—Banner of Holiness.

WHAT IS TRUTH?

J. H. WOOD.

When Christ prayed for his disciples he said, "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth"; and all professors of religion to-day say God's word is truth. David, in Ps. 96: 11–13, says: "Let the heavens rejoice, and the earth be glad; let the sea roar, and the fulness thereof. Let the field be joyful, and all that is therein; then shall all the trees of the wood rejoice before the Lord; for he cometh, for he cometh to judge the earth; he shall judge the world with righteousness, and the people with his truth." Now I think if God's word is truth, and he is going to judge his people with his truth, we had better believe it, and get ready for the judgment, for I believe that it is right at hand. But it is strange that people are so willing to believe heathen theology in preference to God's word.

We hear some say that the Bible is full of contradictions; but the contradictions are made by men's heathen ideas; and when I hear some of them, the question arises, "What is truth?" Says a preacher, in his prayer, "We thank thee, O God, for this blessed truth, that we are immortal." Is it true, the doctrine of the immortality of the soul? is it true that christians go to heaven at death? is it true that the wicked are to suffer eternal torment? is it true that the dead know more than they did when alive? We answer, in the light of God's eternal truth, No. They tell us that there is a germ in man that never dies; is it so? Job says: "There is hope of a tree, if it be cut down, that it will sprout again; and that the tender branches thereof will not cease. Though the root thereof wax old in the earth, and the stock thereof die in the ground, yet through the scent of water it will bud and bring forth boughs like a plant; but man dieth and wasteth away; yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he? As the waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up; so man lieth down, and riseth not till the heavens be no more"; and adds to all this, "they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep." We ask, Where is the germ? The wise man says, "To him that is joined to all the living there is hope; . . . for the living know that they shall die; but the dead know not anything." David says, in Ps. 6: 5—"In death there is no remembrance of thee." Who, then, is immortal?

Paul, in writing to Timothy, says—"I give thee charge in the sight of God, who quickeneth all things, and before Christ Jesus, who before Pontius Pilate witnessed a good confession; that thou keep this commandment without spot, unrebukeable, until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ; which in his times he shall show, who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords, who only hath immortality." The word immortal has become a common word in prayer-meeting today; but we only find it recorded once in all the book of God, and that is in 1 Tim. 1: 17, and then it is applied to God. I am glad that the day is not far distant when He who is our life shall appear; and to me it is sweet to feel that while we walk around among the dead and the dying, we have such words as Paul gives us in 1 Cor. 15: 51—"We shall not all sleep [die], but we shall all be changed [the living and the dead], in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we [the living] shall be changed; for this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality."

But this kind of truth receives but little sympathy in the popular churches of to-day; and if one tries to hold it up he has to suffer persecution; but Peter says—"If any man suffer as a christian, let him not be ashamed, but let him glorify God on this behalf; for the time is coming that judgment must begin at the house of God; and if it first begin at us, what shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God?" This is one of the things we have in consideration, what shall be the end of the wicked? Paul says they "shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." We read in Malachi, that they "shall be stubble, and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts."

Beloved, let us gird on the whole gospel armor, that we may be able to stand in the evil day, "and having done all, to stand."

FAITH OF CHRIST.

F. A. VERGE.

"God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."—JOHN.

In this scripture, we find that the conditions upon which we are to get eternal life are, that we believe in Jesus, the Christ of God. But faith in Jesus is not what a great many christians say it is, both minister and laymen. We often hear from the lips of professors of religion, even those who have had long years of experience as such, such words as these: "If we but believe that Jesus saves us, is able to save us, we are his." "If we only believe that Jesus died to save sinners, that we are the sinners he came to save, we are in a saved state." "Look, and live." This, say they, is the faith Jesus requires for salvation; and if we but do this, we shall feel our sins forgiven; we shall joy in the earnest of the Spirit.

Now I do not think, dear brethren, that this is truth, but rather that the poor sinner who desires salvation will, by such instructions alone, be misled and lost eventually, unless he receives better guidance. A man may bring himself to believe almost any absurdity, and may rejoice in a thing which he has no real good reason for believing. For instance: a man may be in deep distress, when to his great joy he receives word that help is coming. He rejoices and is elated; but is he sure of the looked-for help? He believes it will come, and has good feelings, but if the word is false, what then? You say he was deceived. True.

Again. A poor Roman Catholic commits a sin; he feels guilty. But he believes his priest has power to forgive him, and therefore goes to the confessional weighed down with a sense of his guilt. He pays a certain sum of money and receives absolution, and returns home joyful and glad with a sense of pardon. Are his sins forgiven? Certainly not. 1 John 2: 4 reads—"He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him." And Jesus said—"If ye love me, keep my commandments." John says again, "If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar." To turn faith in Christ as meaning only that he saves us upon that belief, is to believe a lie, and to turn the grace of God into the same, while our lives clearly show that we are not saved.

That this is clearly seen is true, when we walk after the flesh; when we are found doing its work, and fulfilling its carnal desire; when we hate our brethren, and love the world with its things, sayings, and doings. And further, when we are unforgiving, proud and sensual, and caring nothing about the prosperity of God's cause, being selfish; or for the salvation of others; or when we see a brother or sister have need, and, having the means, shut up our bowels of compassion from them. If these be our characteristics, no matter what our pretensions or feelings may be, we are not Christ's. We have not the faith of him. To be saved by the faith of Christ, is to have the evidence of salvation from God's blessed word, and in our hearts by the consciousness of having rendered implicit obedience to God's commands, loving him with all the soul. This kind of faith is based upon God's word, and not upon emotional feelings. This is the faith which is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. Eph. 5: 5; 1 John 2: 4; 3: 6; 2: 15; Rom. 8: 9; Matt. 6: 5; John 14: 15; 1 Cor. 3: 10–16.

May God help us to live out our religion, that we may purify our hearts, even as he is pure; so that at his coming we may be accepted of him.

CONFUSION OF FACE.

SILAS HENN.

"Since the days of our fathers have we been in a great trespass unto this day; and for our iniquities have we, our kings and our priests, been delivered into the hand of the kings of the lands, to the sword, to captivity, and to a spoil, and to confusion of face, as it is this day."—EZRA 9: 7.

There is one expression in this passage which strikes us, and which is very suggestive; viz., "confusion of face." Now where there is "confusion of face," there is generally a guilty conscience. The face is an index to the state of the heart. A man who has studied human nature well, and is a keen observer, can almost read another's heart in his countenance. The expression of the face bespeaks, in a measure, the state of the mind. When a lie is uttered, when evil is spoken against another, when an act of hypocrisy is committed, the higher part of man's nature is prompt in condemning such conduct, and the countenance of the sinner betrays his inward consciousness of guilt.

Look into the face of a little child, who has brought no disquiet into his mind by transgression. How beautifully clear is his eye! How open, bland, and sweet, is his countenance! So ought it to be with the full grown man. With a pure motive, and an honest purpose, and his end the divine glory, though earthly trouble may have left its marks upon him, there will still be a truthful, sincere, mild, generous expression in his face. To avoid "confusion of face," the opposition must be given up between the flesh and the spirit, and the former must yield in all things to the latter.

JESUS cried with a loud voice, "Lazarus, come forth," but the restoration was as easily effected when he gently said, "Maid, arise." Zaccheus was called from the tree with a voice that the crowd could hear, but it was a still voice which in the garden said "Mary." Let us be content with gentle wounds, and let us not seek heavy blows as a proof of his faithfulness.

THEY SHALL DRINK.

"Ye shall certainly drink."—JER. 25: 28.

Who shall certainly drink? "All the kingdoms of the world which are upon the face of the earth." V. 26. What shall they drink? The "wine cup of this fury at my [God's] hand." V. 15.

In ancient times criminals and captives, especially honorable and royal captives, who were defeated and taken in battle, were executed by being compelled to drink deadly poisons mingled in cups used for that purpose. Those cups and circumstances are taken in this prophecy to illustrate God's destruction of all the nations upon the face of the earth at the great battle of the last judgment. As those criminals and captives drew back from drinking, and were compelled to drink, so the Lord said by the prophet, "If they refuse to take the cup at thine hand to drink, then shalt thou say unto them, Thus saith the Lord of hosts: Ye shall certainly drink." V. 25.

This language proves clearly that when the time comes for the cup of bloody war to be presented to the nations, threatening fearful slaughter, that they will labor like a man to escape the terrible execution of death, to avert that threatened war by mighty effort to maintain peace. But the servant of God is instructed that when the time comes that the nations are threatened with a general war, and the predicted preparations are made for a fearful and exterminating slaughter, it becomes his duty to "say [proclaim, publish] unto them," in the name of the Lord, "Ye shall certainly drink;" that is, ye shall certainly be plunged into the war that ye are so determined to escape. As ancient victorious kings sat upon their thrones, and ordered the cup of hemlock pressed to the lips of their captivated foes, so the "Lord of hosts, the God of Israel," will say to the wicked kings of all the earth, "Drink ye, and be drunken, and spue, and fall, and rise no more, because of the sword which I will send among you." V. 27.

The Lord taught the prophet to use the strongest words in his language to express the extent, fury, and exterminating results of this last human battle. He thunders this fearful truth upon human ears on this wise: "The Lord shall roar from on high, and utter his voice from his holy habitation; he shall give a shout as they that tread the grapes, against all the inhabitants of the earth. A noise shall come even to the ends of the earth; for the Lord hath a controversy with the nations; he will plead with all flesh; he will give them that are wicked to the sword, saith the Lord." "The slain of the Lord shall be at that day from one end of the earth even unto the other end of the earth; they shall not be lamented, neither gathered, nor buried; they shall be dung upon the ground." This is certainly a most clear and terrible history of the "battle of that great day of God Almighty."

But what have we of this generation to do with this wonderful matter? Do we find in these inspired sentences anything which demands service at our hands? Is it our duty to "say" to the people of the nations, "Ye shall certainly drink"? If the people of this generation are not those making up the nations that shall be thus slaughtered, then it is not our duty to give this warning or make this cry. But if the present inhabitants of the earth and the kings now occupying the thrones of earth are those presented in this picture, then God makes it our imperative duty, as his servants, to proclaim to all men and nations, from the pulpit and press, that a woful day is upon them; and continue to echo God's voice "Ye [those to whom you speak] shall certainly drink; for, lo, [behold, mark this] I begin to bring evil on the city which is called by my name, and should ye be utterly unpunished; for I will call for a sword upon all the inhabitants of the earth, saith the Lord of hosts."

God made the Jews a typical people, and the destruction of their national polity, with the demolition of their city, a prefiguring of the final overthrow of all the Gentile nations at the end of the gospel age. Therefore the principles of the divine government involved in the destruction of political governments, at the end of a divine dispensation, must be exhibited in their typical history, connected with the war which resulted in their national destruction. God sent them the gospel of the kingdom, notifying them that the time had come to change the administration of their government by the introduction of the Messiah as their Head; but they persistently refused to accept him, therefore the Romans were permitted or sent to break their nationality and ruin their city.

That was all typical, shadowing forth what should come upon the Gentile nations, antitypically, so that Jews could say—"This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations, then shall the end come."

The message to the Jews was—"The time is fulfilled, the kingdom of God is at hand, repent ye and believe the gospel." Such a message must be preached to all the Gentile nations, and then this war will come, and they will be forced to drink of the bitter cup when "the cities of the nations fall," and blood shall flow "even unto the horse bridles."

Such a message has been preached in the four quarters of the earth during the last fifty-six years; and now the winds of war are pressing hard, while the four angels—the four great European Powers—are straining every nerve to hold the disturbed elements and prevent a general outbreak.

It is a fact, patent to all the world, that the great prophetic or European nations are now pressed on every hand with factious parties, complicated national questions, which have for a long time excited threatening jealousies, and caused them to prepare for human slaughter as never before since the world began. This certainly looks like pressing the cup of death to their quivering lips.

It is also a fact that they are making the most desperate and exhaustive efforts to protract the period of peace, stay the tide of war, or, as the prophet said, "They refuse to take the cup."

All of this seems to be exactly in harmony with the divine record; and if they are the very events so sublimely foretold, then we know from the statement of Jehovah what must follow the present position—drinking and falling to "rise no more." A fearful doom! A tragical fate! A picture too bloody and dark to look upon with an unfeeling heart, or to strive about with a curious speculation! Every day adds deadly poison to the cup, and darker shades to the gloom. The Sick Man begins to turn nervously upon his fevered bed, while the enraged Bear growls fearfully in his northern mountain, and the aroused Lion begins to roar on his "fast anchored isle," and hastens his "young lions," with open mouths, ready to vomit forth death and destruction upon Gog and Magog.

O wonderful and fearful earth-scenes written in the book of God! Who can escape beyond the range of their batteries and rest in the sunlight, where no gleaming sword shall disturb the repose of defenceless innocence? O that men might understand that a starless night is now wrapping its dark folds of hopeless woe around the Christless nations! By faith we almost hear the wailings of kings and the fruitless lamentations of their ruined subjects. Soon the din of battle and the piercing cry of countless slaughtered ones shall echo from a thousand battle fields and fill the world with woe and anguish.

Ye servants of the great God, tell the nations that Jehovah has mingled the cup they now so terribly fear. Tell them that without speedy repentance the Almighty will pour into their lips the deadly contents of the last mingled cup of divine wrath. Push out your life boats into the foaming, maddened waters; it may be that you can save a few struggling seamen—a few Christless sinners.

DEATH OF CHRIST.—Dr. Farrar has published the life of Christ, which is considered the most interesting one that has ever been issued. We take the following from his description of the death of Christ:

"A death by crucifixion seems to include all that pain and death can have of horrible and ghastly—dizziness, cramp, thirst, starvation, sleeplessless, fever, publicity of shame, long continuance of torment, horror of anticipation, mortification of untended wounds—all intensified just up to the point at which they can be endured at all, but all stopping just short of the point which would give to the sufferer the relief of unconsciousness. The unnatural position made every movement painful; the lacerated veins and crushed tendons throbbed with incessant anguish; the wounds inflamed by exposure, gradually gangrened; the arteries became swollen and oppressed with surcharged blood; and while each variety of misery went on gradually increasing, there was added to them the intolerable pang of a burning and raging thirst; and all these physical complications caused an internal excitement and anxiety, which made the prospect of death itself—of death, the awful unknown enemy, at whose approach man usually shudders most—bear the aspect of a delicious and exquisite release."

THE FOURTH OF JULY, 1876.

This is a noted day in the history of the American people. So far as we know, they are doing what no other nation ever did, —celebrating their centennial of freedom. Wonderful things have been done on this continent during the century which closes to-day. The works of art, and the magnitude of the exhibition now open in Philadelphia, place the American people second to none on the globe. In financial, military, mechanical, and literary ability, they stand in the front ranks of the civilized nations.

The few weak colonies of 1776 that lined the eastern shores, have been multiplied into great and powerful States, spreading from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and their sails now whiten all seas, and their flag receives the honored salute of all nations. They have passed from childhood to mature manhood, and to-day stand at a dangerous height, where their prosperity may result in sudden ruin, because of their pride. As Israel fell, a Nebuchadnezzar, Belshazzar, or Napoleon; as Greece and Rome fell, so may this nation fall, unless it speedily turns from its pride and wickedness. God has not changed. To-day, strong men are met in convention at the birthplace of American liberty, to devise means and measures to turn out the Bible and prayer from the schools; abolish the christian's rest day, and all church protection, so far as the State is concerned. Should time continue but a few years longer, infidelity or Catholicism would have the control of this government.

As the Lord has prospered and built up this nation, while it honored his name, so, when it forgets him, and exalts itself in its pride, as at the present time, its mene, mene, tekel, will soon be written upon its "Liberty Hall."

THE EASTERN QUESTION.

"The Eastern Question" is awakening great interest among the governments of Europe. England has fears that the road to her eastern possessions may be closed, especially if Russia should obtain possession of Constantinople, which looks like a natural result of the death of the "Sick Man." England will probably make a terrible struggle before she will be cut off from her eastern subjects; hence her apparent sympathy with the Turkish power. Russia seems to be fully committed to support the insurgents, consequently must be brought into antagonism with England.

The German Cologne Gazette says:

"In well-informed circles, the opinion prevails that England is in full earnest in her preparations for war, and that, should Russia attempt this time to advance upon Constantinople, she would find the naval force of England barring the way. The English men-of-war dispatched to the Mediterranean are purposely over-manned, in order to enable them in case of need to render assistance to the Turkish iron-clad squadron, and to make it fit for war; and all requisite measures for possible contingencies have been taken. As other Powers likewise incline to the views of England, which is desirous to preserve Turkey not merely as a pretence, as Russia does, but in genuine truth, we may hope that Russia will kesist from all such plans as may endanger the peace of the world."

GOOD SENSE.

It seems strange that men of strong minds should believe that man originated from the lower order of animals, as taught by Dr. Darwin; but we are informed that many able men are adopting his system. It is a well-known fact that talent and education afford no certain security against the belief of error; for some noted infidels have been distinguished among literary men. When one turns away from the word of the Lord, there's no telling what strange notions he may be led to believe. He is like one walking in darkness, and liable to stumble at any time.

In an able work, by Thomas Ragg, entitled, "Creation's Testimony to its God, or the accordance of science, philosophy, and revelation," we find the following sensible remarks:

"Let us suppose, then,—a supposition which all authentic historical records, and the results of geological researches, combine to substantiate,—that somewhere about six thousand years ago the first pair of creatures endowed with the capacities and functions of human life existed. The problem, then, resolves itself into this: 'Given, on earth, six thousand years ago, the first human male and female pair, with their faculties fully developed, and capable of reproducing their kind—How came they?'

It is clear that they either must have been there for ever—have existed by necessity—have been generated by parents—have been produced by a combination of fortuitous circumstances—have made themselves—or have been created by an independent power.

But they had not been there for ever; because, if they had, they would have been there without a beginning, and, therefore, have grown no older; whereas, they both grew older and died; and their posterity, begotten in their likeness, grow older and die also. Moreover, they could not have been there for ever, because the earth itself had not been there for ever. It also had a beginning, and grows older; and every revolution on its axis adds a day and a night to its age.

They did not exist by necessity; because the same necessity which called for their existence then, would equally call for their existence now; and they do not exist. Moreover, the same necessity which called for their existence in one point of space or immensity, would call for their existence in every other point; and, therefore, if they existed by necessity, they must have been, and must be now, infinite, instead of finite beings.

They were not generated by parents, because they had no parents, but were the first of their kind; and if the atheist objects that we have fixed the first pair at a period too near our own time, I answer, it affects not the argument, since there must, sometime, have been a first pair.

They were not produced by a combination of fortuitous circumstances; since, if such a combination had, in the course of an untold duration, brought together, by accident or chance, the material frame of man, those circumstances could not have imparted life, of which, singly or combined, they were not in possession.

They did not come of themselves; because that would be simply an effect without a cause—a palpable and acknowledged absurdity.

They did not make themselves; because, to have made themselves, they must have been in being before thenselves—i. e., have been in being before they were in being.

We are, therefore, forced to rest upon the remaining hypothesis—that they were the creation of some independent power."

A PROPHETIC DREAM, BY THE PROPHET DANIEL, CHAP. 8.

There are certain original principles, which God evidently incorporated in human nature when he created man, which still inhere in him. He was designed for intelligence, but not to enjoy intuitive knowledge. The channel, through which God designed that man should receive his knowledge, was the organs of sense which he gave him. Take away the power of those organs, and he would know no more than a paving-stone. What could we know about color or sound without the use of the eye or ear? We get the strongest and most natural impression of objects, coming within the reach of our knowledge, by the action of those organs. When we wish to obtain a satisfactory knowledge of any absent object, we always first demand its presence; so that the knowledge of it may be obtained by seeing, hearing, tasting, or smelling. If the first desire cannot be gratified, the next natural desire is, to have some representative of the object present, upon which those organs can act, and thus, through a proxy, gain the desired understanding.

To accomplish this in a natural way, or in harmony with the laws of our being, all languages have been produced. Each language embraces certain characters, which call into action the eye. Each character represents a sound, which calls into action the ear.

The primary necessity for language is the absence of many objects we desire to understand; therefore taking into account our necessities and our nature, we get language which employs at least two of our organs of sense, upon the representatives of absent beings and objects.

In harmony with these principles, we find in the earliest ages the hieroglyphic language, or a language of pictures, was used. Each picture was designed to represent, as perfectly as possible, the object or idea it was intended to signify. If any particular characteristic or feature of an object was to be represented, a picture was prepared to especially represent the facts. In that language, the picture designed to represent eternity was a perfect circle, because to run on the line to find its end would require an endless race; so to travel through eternity would require an endless journey.

In all languages, or modes of communication, political governments have had their representatives. In the earliest ages, the habit of representing them by the human figure, either male or female, was practised. But as the required variety in the symbols could not be found, the habit changed to representing them by birds and beasts. The latter habit has continued in practice till the present time. Nearly all the kingdoms of the world have their national symbols according to the ancient custom.

The eagle represents the great American Republic. The lion represents the British Empire. An eagle, with two heads and three crowns, the Russian Empire. No one would think we were talking about mystical subjects of very doubtful import, if we should discuss those symbols, and the government they signify. Why then should men think, when God uses them in his communications, and gives particular interpretations of them by angels and inspired men, applying them to specified governments, that they are dark and uncertain in their application?

In the vision before us, we have the symbols which God selected to represent the ancient empires, and his prophet Daniel, to whom he presented the symbols and their explanation. Reader, look upon the illustration before you, and reflect that many hundred years ago God proposed to raise the veil which hides the vast future from human eyes, and present to the tribes of men a part of its impending and important history.

To do this effectually, he selected his faithful servant Daniel, pure in spirit, through whom to tell the wonderful story of mighty kings and falling empires. He communicated the hidden wonders, just as a great literary teacher would have done at that time, if he could have viewed the grand scenes.

There lay the holy dreamer, surrounded with royalty, enjoying kingly favor, pillowed in the imperial palace at Shushan, while the midnight clouds were silently sweeping over the slumbering thousands of Elam. God then rolled up a heavenly curtain, and let the streaming effulgence of the bright world drive the darkness of night away, illuminating the valley of Ulai, when the holy man, wrapped in heavenly vision, seemed to lay among the rustling foliage of the river's brink.

God turned the mental eye of the sainted dreamer to see, upon the verdant plain, two combative beasts. He saw a ram, standing in a defiant attitude, having two horns, one higher than the other, and determined that no beast should track the soil of the broad fields except himself. He moved with threatening violence against every beast that stood in his way, and none was able to resist him; so that he became master of the field.

While he was thus enjoying his proud triumph, the prophet's eye caught in the hazy distance of the west a he-goat, having an unusually developed horn between his eyes, moving with wonderful rapidity, so that he seemed "to touch not the ground" in his flight. He came near the ram, and with quick calculation and remarkable precision, smote him with his deadly horn, destroying his power of resistance, and laying him upon the field quivering in death. Then the goa became master of the field, and exercised supreme authority over all.

After this, Daniel saw one appearing as a man, when a voice sounded over the waters of Ulai, commanding Gabriel to make the prophet understand the vision. He began by showing that the beasts were presented by God to represent political governments, just as men were in the habit of using them as symbols. The ram represented Media and Persia, and the goat Grecia.

As the two beasts represented governments, the other beasts, seen in connection, must have been governments also. Therefore the vision would show that the Medes and Persians, for a time, would conquer and hold in vassalage all nations, and that at the end of that period Grecia would conquer them, leaving them in a broken, oppressed condition, and that the first kingdom of triumphant Grecia would subjugate all rival powers for a short period, and then lose its central government, and be divided into four kingdoms.

When the prophet saw this vision, and received its interpretation, there was no political probability that the symbolized government could ever reach the limit of power and glory expressed. The kings of Babylon had for a long time been the masters of the world, and were then so strongly intrenched within the massive walls of their great city, that it seemed impossible for any earthly power to dislodge them.

But God had previously instructed his prophet that the Babylonian family would cease to rule the world, while Nebuchadnezzar's "son's son" was occupying the throne. When that time drew near, and that son was passing the third year of his reign, Daniel had this dream, which re-affirmed the prediction.

If the dream had been a natural one, then it could give no assurance of the things spoken; but if the Ruler of the world had given it, then they might be expected with perfect confidence.

God has given demonstrative proof of the divinity of the dream, by perfectly duplicating the interpretations of the symbols in the history of those governments. Medo-Persia did arise, and make war upon all governments, in all directions, who opposed its dictation. It took Babylon, and slew the grandson upon the throne, exactly as foretold. It suffered no government to exist, as a peer and antagonist, for more than three hundred years. How exactly were the words of inspiration fulfilled—"so that no beasts [kingdoms] might stand before him."

No kingdom could withstand the Persians in war. But when the divinely appointed time came that the goat kingdom should arise and fatally smite the mighty Persian dictator, Alexander suddenly mounted the stage, and swiftly led the brazen-armored Grecians to the bloody fields of their wonderful victories.

God had measured the day of Persian triumph, and fixed the bounds of their pride and glory; and when the prophetic index marked the setting of their sun, no earthly power could save them. The numbers and valor of their hitherto invincible armies were swept away. Their riches and fame disappeared like the morning dew; while the foretold youthful conqueror darted from city to city, like the bounding goat, thrusting his horn, or death-dealing army, into every province of the vast dominions, until the swift pursuer halted to gaze upon the pierced and lifeless body of Persia's last dictator of the world—Darius Codomanus. Thus ended the Persian Empire, after continuing two hundred and six years, from Cyrus to Darius, exactly as represented by the ram.

The reins of universal government were then transferred from Persian to Grecian hands. Alexander and his successors ruled over the same countries and cities, and controlled the same nations as did the Persian kings, for a long period.

How gloriously perfect and sublime are the revelations of God. We might look upon their external manifestations as of little importance. A man in a dream, seeing beasts in a warring attitude, might seem hardly worthy of a second thought. But when angels come to explain them, and the grandest and mightiest events in human history fulfill them, they may be looked upon as sublime productions of God. Mighty kings and great captains may forecast devices, and fail of their accomplishment. Kingdoms and empires may fortify their powers mightily, but be overthrown and demolished. The earth and heavens may seem changeless, and run their trackless course age after age, and yet experience great changes. But the word of God is immutable like himself. Every symbol and figure must be met by realities foreshadowed. Every word and sentence must be responded to, so that every revealed principle, idea, and fact, will be duplicated in history. O God, thy word is sure; upon it we plant our feet, and confidently wait for immortality.

"UGLY SIGNIFICANCE."—The London Times says the working men in Italy have recently held Sunday meetings in Rome which were quite "threatening in their appearance." When speaking of the assemblage, it says:

"But on each occasion it had about it all the signs of those dangerous gatherings out of which grow the most formidable organizations that threaten society. The president of the meeting was, for instance, an almost avowed Communist, and it is not to be doubted that of the so called working men a large proportion were mere political agitators. Then the debates, not only in their tone, but in their actual purport, were full of ugly significance."

There is but little hope of a better state of things, but strong reasons for believing it will soon be much worse. The signs of approaching "perilous times" continue to increase in all directions. Let us trust in the Lord.

WORTHY OF IMITATION.—The late Methodist General Conference, held in Baltimore, took a bold stand against the use of tobacco by their ministers. It was

Resolved, "That we advise all our ministers and members to abstain from the use of tobacco, as injurious to both soul and body; and that we recommend to the annual conferences, to require candidates for admission, to be free from the habit, as hurtful to their acceptability and usefulness among our people."

Is it not high time that this great evil was forever abandoned by the followers of Jesus, and especially by those who preach his pure gospel?

Correspondence.

From Bro. A. N. Seymour.

Editors of the World's Crisis:—Dear Brn., grace, mercy, and peace, be multiplied to you, in your responsible position as editors, and heralds of the cross of Christ. Your message is a heavenly and blessed one; one that thrills the church of Christ in all her parts, and gives her bright hope of the future, and endurance to wage an uncompromising warfare against sin, and the unhallowed influences that especially characterize these last days of trial and peril. Withhold nothing from the body that will be meat in due season; and may your courage, devotion, zeal, and example, be like Paul's, and then be followed by every servant and member of the household of faith. Evidently, the church and world are standing upon the threshold of all probationary time, and the scenes of the eternal judgment. All chains of consecutive prophecy seem to be rapidly culminating that usher in that glorious morn—that long-sought-for rest—the home of the blest. O how cheering to God's anxious and waiting children, who have endured the oppressive influences of an opposing world. May it speedily come, and bring its welcome blessings, and we hail it with joy and gladness.

During the spring and summer thus far, we have traveled some six hundred miles, and have not ceased or neglected to tell the church and world that Jesus is coming. For the last thirty-three years our voices have been heard wherever we have been; and we expect, by God's favor, to still utter the cry until faith is lost in sight. But while looking at the condition of the professed church and a sinful world, I am sad. Why? First, because such a large body of professing christians take no interest, and manifest no concern about so momentous a theme. True, they speak in meeting, tell how much they love the Savior, and that they are going directly to heaven at death, there to enjoy their reward; but not a word drops from their lips about Jesus' coming, the resurrection, restitution, the kingdom of God, and the reward to be given at Jesus' coming. Is their hope a true one? I do not find one scrap of testimony, flowing from the pen of inspiration, that promises christians a translation to heaven at death. Paul, when speaking of the gospel proclamation, declares that "though we or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel unto you, than that we have preached, let him be accursed." Would he have uttered such language, if any faith would answer? I think not. God has revealed but one system, plan, or arrangement, by which to save a race lost in sin and death, and it will not do to trifle with this divine institution at all; and whoever does it knowingly, to say the least, perils his eternal salvation.

Never have I seen the importance more than now of making prominent the great fundamental truth of no immortality, or endless life, except through Christ. I discover distinctly that the direct tendency of the doctrine of inherent immortality in man, during this life, completely undermines the plan of human redemption as revealed in the holy Scriptures, and creates any amount of skepticism and infidelity among men. The sooner that first lie of the old serpent is thoroughly exposed, the sooner man will grasp the arm of Jesus for salvation. May every soldier of the cross of Christ throw his whole mental ability against that enormous error, for there is no greater one in the religious world; and when that falls, all other errors which hang upon that will fall with it.

In the second place, I feel sad because some well-posted ministers and brethren, that once so nobly defended the cause of no immortality, or eternal life, out of Christ, have joined those that uphold these errors, and consequently their mouths are closed, and they virtually, by their acts, uphold the things they once destroyed. Will the Master say to such, "Well done, good and faithful servants," etc? I do not propose to withhold my voice on that question, more than on any other or all other biblical questions. The faithful servants of God must preach the truth, present truth, and keep back nothing that is profitable to the church. So I conclude to preach the coming of Christ, and no immortality, or endless life, out of Christ, till the dear Master comes; and may Heaven grant us perfect readiness on our part.

A few days since, in conversation with a noted Spiritualist, I told him that I had long since renounced the heathen dogma of the immortality of the soul, the consciousness of the dead, going to heaven and hell at death, endless hell torments, and a kingdom beyond the skies. At which he replied: "Well, if you renounce all this, what have you left?" I replied, "An almighty Savior, 'in whom dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily'; 'in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge.' He is a fountain of everlasting life, blessedness, honor, and glory; and through him we obtain an eternal reward at the resurrection, to be enjoyed in the new earth, or kingdom 'under the whole heaven.'" I guess he thought that was enough, for he made no reply. So in rejecting the above stupendous monstrosities, we reject no part of God's revelation to man, but cherish the whole, down deep in our hearts, and ever rejoice in the same. O that all men would investigate, and behold the absurdities of these human inventions. How true it is that God created man upright, but he has sought out many inventions.

Reading, Mich.

From Sr. L. B. Weaver.

When I think how near we are to the final consummation of all things, I feel solemn; yet I can but rejoice, more than words can express. I feel solemn, because there are so many near and dear ones out of the ark of safety, who seem so little concerned for themselves. But if we cannot persuade them to come to Jesus, what can we do but pray for them, and leave the result with God, who doeth all things well? I feel at times as if I could not have it so, but so it is. It seems hard to see those we love so dearly going on in sin, regardless of God and his laws. I do want to be a worker for Jesus. I am trying to show by my life and conversation that I am the Lord's, and that I want to do some good while I have time and opportunity. May God help me to speak some word for Jesus; that I may say something that will be the means of some one's turning to Christ.

O what a solemn time in which we are living! The Lord is soon coming, and so few ready to meet him! I want to know that I have done something for Jesus every day. He is my All-in-all. O how I do love him. I am trying to do all I can for him. Dear ones, pray for me. I hope soon to meet you beyond all these trying scenes. Be faithful to God and his word.

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. L. D. CAREY writes from Cherokee, Iowa:—"Our society here numbers about twenty-five, and we are letting our light shine. We have preaching out through the country, and quite a goodly number, who were once prejudiced against us, are now rejoicing in the hope, and working for the salvation of others. We have been instrumental in removing a mountain of prejudicein this community; but the good work is hardly begun. Satan is working mightily to ensnare the faithful, and lead them down to ruin. But a few will stand firm, and hold on to Christ. I am determined to do my Master's will, and be prepared to hail him with joy when he returns to make up his jewels. The Crisis is doing much good in this section of country. Some families that would not read it at first are now eager for it; so you see God is using it in saving souls. You are doing a most glorious work, and may God speed you on your way, until many more, who are now trying to seek pleasure and contentment in the world, may be brought to a saving knowledge of Christ. I believe we are almost to our journey's end, and it behooves us to put forward every energy to scatter the good news to all men, and warn a skeptical world and sleeping church of the soon coming judgment.

It is indeed sad to see the condition of our popular churches of to-day. They are mixing with the world so much, that you cannot draw the lines of distinction. It seems that Satan is making his last great effort. My prayer is that we may continue faithful unto the end, and then share the glories of Christ's everlasting kingdom.

BRO. H. F. CARPENTER writes in a private note, June 12th, 1876, from Vallejo, Cal.:—"The Lord is good. He has dealt kindly with us in Vallejo. For six months, hard times have scattered our membership, and the Centennial has drawn some East, yet our prayer-meetings have held their members, and greatly increased their interest and power. I never saw the church standing so well before. As a whole, its members have laid hold on faith, and this has lifted them above otherwise dark circumstances, and enabled them to say, 'Thou hast put gladness in my heart more than in the time that their corn and their wine increased.' Ps. 4: 7. Our congregations are good, and I never enjoyed preaching better. They are a precious people, and I know of no church among whom I should prefer to live, if I could have my health, which has been very poor for the past six weeks. The church has been praying very earnestly for me, and I am much better, and feeling quite like myself again, for which I thank a kind heavenly Father. My wife is much better."

BRO. G. E. MERRILL, Worcester, Mass., writes:—"Some time has elapsed since offering any thing to the readers of the Crisis. It has not been from a lack of interest that I have so long delayed to write, but on account of poor health and hard work. I know not when I shall be able to address you again, but may the Lord bless you all, and bring you home at last. As for me, I am still 'looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ; who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works.' I feel to say,

'Lord, I am thine, entirely thine,
Purchased and saved by blood divine;
With full consent thine I would be,
And own thy sovereign right in me.'"

BRO. P. A. SMITH writes from St. Joe, Mich., June 17th:—"I am thankful to our Father in heaven for his kind providence. What would his dear children do without such a paper, coming week after week, laden with precious and present truth, and the cheering letters from the dear ones scattered abroad, as pilgrims and strangers on the earth. Often do I feel sad and lonely while pleading with my neighbors to prepare for the coming kingdom. 'He is honest,' they say, 'but mistaken.' This is trying. They invite me to their meetings if I will talk as they do. I understand their language, but I cannot talk it. I have learned the language of the kingdom, and the voice of the good Shepherd. I cannot talk any other."

Bro. P. P. Dawson writes from Cawker City, Kansas, June 19th:—"Editors Crisis, and the brethren and sisters scattered abroad, allow me to say that I love to read the testimony of others. I wait with anxiety the arrival of the Crisis. I have been a reader of it for two years. It is the best paper that I have the privilege of reading. There are only four of like faith in this place. We have to hear the scoffs of many, though it only serves to strengthen us in the faith. Dear brethren, we are living in perilous times, and it becomes us to put on the whole armor. It seems there is every thing to allure us from the truth; but thanks be to Him who is able to succor us. We shall not fall as long as we cast our burdens upon him. I long for the time when the Savior will come to gather all the faithful into his kingdom, that shall stand forever. Praise the Lord, we can bear all manner of evil for the sake of winning Christ. Brethren, pray for us that we may meet you all in the kingdom."

Bro. J. M. Stewart writes from Bass Station, Ala., June 18th, 1876:—"I am still looking for Jesus to come to set up his kingdom on the earth, and put a stop to all human government. I am working on public works, and to-day there were two drunken fights in sight of my house. O how I long to quit this unhallowed ground, to be with Christ at home. I confess I have no continuing city here, but I seek one to come, which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God. I have troubles on the way, but when I get home, I shall forget that I ever had any. O how I shall shout and sing praises to Him that died for me; and not for me only, but for all that love his appearing."

CARROLL—MARSTON. In Portsmouth, N. H., June 28th, 1876, by E. Owen, Mr. Addison Carroll and Miss Anna F. Marston, both of Portsmouth.

Obituaries.

Morrison. At her home in Lexington, Mich., June 1st, 1876, after a short illness, Sr. Elizabeth Morrison.

Sr. Morrison was born in Clarksville, Ohio, in 1837; was converted under my labors, baptized about six years ago, and has since lived a consistent christian life. Bro. Morrison was absent from home, in southern Michigan, at the time of her death, which made it very sad. He, with his dear children, four in number, have the sympathy of the entire community in their sudden bereavement. Our village press in giving a notice of her death, says, "Mrs. Morrison was an estimable lady, held in high regard by those who knew her best." Her dying words were, "The Lord is my Shepherd" (Ps. 23), from which sweet words I tried to comfort the mourning friends.

Geo. W. Wright.

Shortridge. In Wolfboro, N. H., April 22d, 1876, of typhoid pneumonia, Clarence H. Shortridge, eldest son of J. H. and M. J. Shortridge, aged sixteen years, six months, nineteen days.

In the resurrection morning we hope to meet dear Clarence, to part no more forever. He was a good and loving child, and was never known to use any vain word whatever. He had many friends. He never allowed himself to retire without saying his prayers. During his sickness, which was but nine days, he was very patient, and did not murmur, though his sufferings were great. He said he put his trust in the Lord, and asked him to forgive his sins, which he believed he had, for it seemed as though he could hear him say he would. His dying words were, "O my blessed Savior." Sermon by C. Coleman, from Isaiah 25: 78.

M. J. Shortridge.

Cate. In Portsmouth, N. H., May 10th, Hattie D., daughter of Daniel and Mary J. Cate, aged twenty-nine years, three months.

Sr. Hattie was converted and baptized some seven years since, and has lived a consistent christian, and died in hope. When told that she must die, she remarked, "I am not afraid." Sermon by the writer, from 1 Thess. 4: 18. J. W. White.

Cate. In Portsmouth, N. H., May 18th, Mary J. Cate, wife of Daniel Cate, aged sixty-one years, five months.

Sr. Cate professed faith in Christ and was baptized some thirty-four years since, and has lived a self-denying christian. She was beloved by all with whom she associated. She has left a heart-broken husband, and four sorrowing children to mourn their irreparable loss. The funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Bro. I. B. Potter, and Bro. Harmon of the Baptist church.

J. W. White.

Cate. In Portsmouth, N. H., June 10th, Daniel Cate, aged sixty-five years.

Bro. Cate was converted and baptized thirty-six years since, and has lived a conscientious christian life. It may be said of him, Behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace. Thus, in the short space of four weeks, father, mother, and sister have been snatched away by the hand of death. My God, bless those sorrow-stricken and heart-broken children, with the sad-hearted brothers and sisters of the deceased father and mother. The funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Bro. Noyes of the Methodist Church, and Bro. Elwyn of the Episcopal Church.

J. W. White.

Turner. In Hebron, Me., April 29th, 1876, Isabel P., wife of Winfield S. Turner, aged thirty-three years and eight months.

For many months she was wasting under that terrible disease, consumption, hoping for health again, as the many thus dying do. She clung to life, not because she was afraid to die, but for the sake of many friends. It seemed hard to leave the husband with three little boys, so needing the care of a mother's hands. She embraced the gospel hope years ago, and sweetly sleeps in Jesus we believe. May God's grace surround the dear ones she has left to mourn. J. Albert Libby.

Andrews. In Sutton, N. H., June 12th, '76, Sister Harriet, wife of Bro. Israel Andrews, aged sixty-one years.

Sister Andrews has long loved the coming of Jesus, and fell in death with her armor on, believing he would very soon call her from her dreamless slumber. May God bless the sorrowing family, and unite them again in Eden restored.

John Parsons.

Sargent. In Andover, N. H., May 3d, '76, of consumption, Mrs. Elizabeth G. Sargent, aged thirty-nine years.

She had been a great sufferer for over seven years, but she bore it all without a murmur, and died with the hope of soon being raised in the likeness of Jesus. God grant that we may meet her on that blissful shore never to part.

I. H. Tucker.

Harris. In Black Brook, N. Y., Jan. 27th, 1876, of scarletina, Cynthia Ann, only child of John and Eveline Harris, aged four years.

She was a great joy to her parents and grandparents. She was a sweet singer, but we shall hear her little songs no more till the Life-giver comes to call his people home. Our hearts are sad, but we look forward to the time when we shall meet our loved one in our happy Eden home.

B. P.

Roberts. In Ossipee, N. H., June 18th, 1876, Mr. Joshua Roberts, aged eighty-two years and three months.

Funeral attended by A. Stillings and C. H. Sweet.

— Bishop Dupanloup has written a pamphlet entitled, "Whither are we going?" It endeavors to show that society and religion are in the greatest peril through the triumphant progress of atheism and materialism.

FOREIGN NEWS.

London, June 27. The Gibraltar Guardian states that owing to instructions from England the fortress of Gibraltar is being placed in a complete condition for defence. Artillery men are every where mounting guns; two ship loads of powder a day are expected to arrive, and all furloughed officers have been recalled.

June 29. The Telegraph's Belgrade special says Servia only desires autonomy. Bosnia and Herzegovina are acting independently and contrary to Russian advice. The population is calm and determined and prepared for any sacrifice.

The Times quotes the St. Petersburg Exchange Gazette's Zara special that Servia has already declared war. The Times says that even if this is untrue, there can now be but little hope of the maintenance of peace.

A Belgrade special is as follows: Events of the greatest moment may be expected in Servia. The people have finally determined to take any steps and make any sacrifice necessary to secure the autonomy of Herzegovina and Bosnia. Nothing further is aimed at. The situation is uninfluenced by Russia. Servia acts independently and desires no intervention.

A Berlin dispatch to the Times reports that the Bosnian insurgents have issued a manifesto proclaiming Milan King of Bosnia.

The Daily News' special from Paris says that there is great confusion and lack of provisions in the Servian camps.

A dispatch from Belgrade states that the departure of Prince Milan for the army is fixed for the 30th inst. On the same day a war manifesto will be issued, and on July 1st a state of siege will be proclaimed throughout Servia.

June 30. A Pera letter dated June 23, says: "The new Sultan of Turkey is overwhelmed with difficulties of his position, and it is reported that he contemplates abdicating in favor of his younger brother.

The Turks are actively preparing to meet the Servian attack. The camp on the Bosphorus opposite Therapia has been broken up and every available man forwarded to the front. It is reported that the Government has formed the desperate resolution of enlisting 80,000 Bashi Bazouks throughout the empire, who, if they cannot do much as soldiers, may prevent the spread of insurrection, by constant menace of general massacre of Christians.

Yesterday Gen. Ignatieff, Russian Ambassador, embarked his children aboard a Russian dispatch boat for Odessa. The General himself and his wife remain.

The reported recall of Innatieff is not confirmed. Insulting and threatening letters reach him daily, and he is certainly exposed to imminent danger.

Zealous Mussulmen regard the Government's resolution to quash the sentences of the Salonica authorities as evidence of subserviency to European powers, from which an aggravation of their hostile feeling towards Christians may be justly apprehended. The aspect of things here becomes more serious every day.

The Diritto an Italian paper, says that the English ministry was cognizant of the fall of Abdul Aziz, and indeed brought that event about. It is added that Lord Derby obtained Queen Victoria's assent to the plot only on the assurance that the late Sultan should receive no personal harm, and that she is now overwhelmed with sorrow at having been in any way a party to the catastrophe. The Diritto is a very respectable paper.

Tremont Campmeeting.

The annual campmeeting at Tremont, Mass., will commence Monday, July 31st, and continue to Aug. 8th. Arrangements will be made as formerly for board and lodging. All who can bring tents are requested to do so. Dear brethren, as we may be permitted to have one more gathering on this consecrated ground before the Lord comes, let us avail ourselves of this opportunity to do all we can to arouse the church, and save the lost. We intend to secure good laborers to help in this blessed work to give the last notes of warning to a lost world; for the omens which are now looming up in Europe strongly indicate that our work will soon be closed up for this world.

AT SCHOOL.

I sat in the school of sorrow—
The Master was teaching there—
And my eyes were dim with weeping,
And my heart was full of care.

Instead of looking upward,
And seeing his face divine,
So full of the tenderest pity
For weary hearts like mine,

I only thought of the burden,
The cross that before me lay—
So hard and heavy to carry,
That it darkened the light of day.

So I could not learn my lesson,
And say, "Thy will be done!"
And the Master came not near me
As the weary hours went on.

At last, in my heavy sorrow,
I looked from the cross above,
And I saw the Master watching
With a glance of tender love.

So I stooped to that weary sorrow—
One look at that face divine
Had given me power to trust him,
And say, "Thy will, not mine."

And thus I learnt my lesson,
Taught by the Master alone:
He only knows the tears I shed,
For he has wept his own.

—Selected.

COMING.

G. E. MERRILL.

Who? Christ. How do we know? Jesus informs us of the fact. Hark! "If I go away, I will come again." What a blessed, precious promise, made more tthan eighteen hundred years ago. But the promise is sure. "I will come again." Yes, the beloved Christ is coming. O, blessed thought!

He's coming back to earth again,
To take the world that he has bought;
Then the saints with him shall reign,
In a kingdom where there's no pain.
O, blessed Jesus, precious name,
Thou wilt forever banish pain,
By and bye, when thou shalt reign.

Jesus is coming the "second time, without a sin offering, unto salvation"; coming with power and great glory; coming with all the holy angels; coming to beautify this old earth.

"It is ruined now by sin, and cursed,
But He will speak it fairer than at first."

He is coming to give life and immortality to all who love his appearing; to the holy, the pure in heart, the faithful, trusting ones. And, beloved, we are nearing the time when the tabernacle, the city of God, the New Jerusalem, will be with men, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God.

Yes, O yes, the time is nearing
For our blessed Lord to come;
Sings the pilgrim's heart how cheering;
Sings that we are nearing home.

Nearing the time when the ransomed of the Lord shall return from the land of darkness and death, and come home to their Father's house with joy, while sorrow and sighing will flee away. "Sweet, sweet home."

O bless the Lord, brother, sister,
Our mourning days will soon be past,
And we shall see our blessed Master,
And live and reign with him at last.

Is it possible we shall live and reign with Christ? Yes, we shall live and reign with Jesus on this earth made new. Blessed thought! We shall see Jesus, and reign with him,—the lowly Jesus,—the One who wills the salvation of all, if they only will be saved. The One who,

"To procure us perfect pardon,
Suffered, groaned and died;
On the cross the healing fountain
Issued from his wounded side."

This One we shall see, be like, be with, and that for ever. No separation, no parting; never more to sever.

"O blessed day! O glorious hope!
My soul rejoices at the thought
When, in that holy, happy land,
We'll take no more the parting hand."

Then our tears will be wiped away by his own soft hand. Things causing sorrow and pain will be removed. Here we have trials and troubles, sorrow and pain, sickness and death; but soon they will all be over. No trials, troubles, sorrow or pain in that holy, happy land—the paradise of God, the kingdom of Christ. None will say "I am sick" on the immortal shore. Sickness and sorrow, pain and death, will be felt and feared no more. Then the saints of God will enjoy full and perfect satisfaction—LIFE PERFECTED, for we shall have awaked in the likeness of our divine and blessed Lord. O may we all, who are traveling on toward Mount Zion, the city of God, look upward to Father, and onward to the kingdom, and remember that when our cup is most bitter, when our sorrows are the greatest, and our burden the heaviest, in a very little time our trials will be over, the night of sadness ended, and the morning of joy, everlasting joy, will break upon us. Lift up your heads, ye saints of God, for then there will be "no more pain," "neither sorrow or crying."

"O what a glorious hope is ours,
While here on earth we stay;
We more than taste the heavenly powers,
And antedate that day."

This hope—the coming of Jesus—is a grand, a glorious hope; a blessed, precious theme, never ceasing to afford consolation and comfort to my poor soul; and it ought to every one who professes to love Christ. I do not expect in this life to get "enough of Jesus so as to be satisfied to have him remain away." O no, we never shall be satisfied until we "awake" in the likeness of our Lord. Then, as I have stated, we shall enjoy full and perfect satisfaction—LIFE PERFECTED. It is mortal now; then it will be immortal. It is dying here; then it will be undying. O bless the Lord for a perfect life. O let us have our loins girt, our lamps trimmed and burning, our hearts crying out, "Come, Lord Jesus," "come quickly"; yes, ever praying, "Thy kingdom come." In this blessed state we are ready for labor or for rest. No matter; all is well. We are resting, "sweetly resting," being in harmony with the holy will of God. "Those who believe do enter into rest"; rest NOW, rest by faith in Jesus. "There remaineth a rest for the people of God"—physical rest;—

"Rest from tears, and grief, and sighing, Rest from pain, and woe, and dying."

The Lord grant, beloved, that we may enter into rest now—that we may enter into the rest that "REMAINETH."

ALL birds when they are first caught and put into the cage, fly wildly up and down and beat themselves against their little prisons; but within two or three days sit quietly upon their perch, and sing their usual notes with their usual melody. So it fares with us, when God first brings us into a strait, we wildly flutter up and down, and beat and tire ourselves with striving to get free; but at length custom and experience will make our narrow confinement spacious enough for us; and though our feet should be in the stocks, yet shall we, with the apostles, be able even there to sing praises to our God. —Hopkins.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN FAITH.

DEFINED BY ONE OF THEMSELVES.

The denomination of Christians called Advent Christians is a younger body than many others, and is not as numerous as some other bodies. Their principal center is now in Boston, Mass., where they publish a paper called the World's Crisis, and have a Publication Society, whose work and sphere of operation is enlarging constantly. They have also an organ in the West, The Advent Christian Times, and several other papers are published disseminating their views. They now number from fifty to seventy-five thousand. It may be of interest to notice the sentiments of these people, as they have awakened considerable inquiry, and there is a live question involved in the peculiar views of doctrine which they hold and disseminate. It will be seen by the following synopsis what these views are, and wherein they agree with and dissent from the commonly received opinions of the other religious bodies. They believe:

1st. That the Bible is the inspired word of God, and, as the Assembly's Catechism has it, that it is "the sufficient and only rule of faith and practice." On this account they deem no formulated creed necessary.

2nd. They also believe that the true method of biblical interpretation is that which recognizes literal language as the basis of all lingual expression, and the key therefore to the proper understanding of all rhetorical figures, and they therefore repudiate the spiritualizing method of Origen and others, which they think is too likely to mislead by allowing too large a latitude for fanciful interpretation; for while they do admit that there is a figurative use of language in the Bible as in other books, they do not think it allows a departure from the sense of the literal as a basis.

3d. They understand that all the doctrines of the Bible are taught first in literal language as well as in figures of rhetoric.

4th. They believe that the "wages of sin is death" in the literal sense, and that death, as now in the world, was brought to the race by the sin of Adam.

5th. They believe, therefore, that man was made liable to be sentenced to death, and that when sentenced there was no reprieve for him or his race, but that when sentenced and dead there is no consciousness in that death, for "the dead know not anything"—they think according to the Scriptures.

6th. They believe that Jesus Christ came to redeem the race from this death, and to open the way for eternal life to believers by a resurrection from the dead, which they think is the only way for future life.

7th. They do not think that the Bible teaches the immortality of the soul or the endless misery of the wicked.

8th. They believe that in the resurrection all, both good and bad, will be raised and judged, and that the wicked will then be destroyed, and cease to live and sin, and that this must be because they think sin and misery cannot exist without end in the government of God without reproach to the omnipotence of Jehovah.

9th. They believe this resurrection and judgment will be at the second coming of Jesus Christ, who will then reign on the earth after it has passed through a change by fire, and that there will be then not a blot or speck or stain on the government of God, or that God will then fully vindicate himself and present the spectacle of a government freed from the last vestiges of evil, and holiness and purity will be alone the characteristic of all the living in the universe, all evil coming to a perpetual end.

They believe that there are evidences, physical, political and moral, to indicate that that day of God is nearing, and that Jesus will soon come.

There is at present but one church in Montreal which is recognized by the body at large as belonging to the denomination—the one now worshiping in Union Hall.—Montreal Morning Star.

WHAT DOES IT MEAN?

We refer to the present revival of holiness. There is manifestly going on to-day in all the churches in all parts of the world, an extraordinary revival of holiness. I do not believe there has been anything equal to it since the day of the apostles. The seal of the divine approval makes it manifest that God is in it. The men and women whose personal efforts are being so signally owned of God, are walking in the light of holiness, and most of them are making holiness prominent in their teaching. The meetings where the power of God is so wonderfully manifest in the conversion of sinners are holiness meetings, or "higher life" conventions. The attention of the church is turned to this subject as never before.

In the presence of these thrilling events many are asking, "What does it mean?" To our mind, this question is pertinent and important. What does this revival of holiness portend? Does it mean that sectarianism and bigotry are to cease, and that universal christian unity is to be realized? Does it mean that pride and worldly conformity in all its phases is to be banished from the church? Does it mean the purifying of the church? Does it mean the conversion of the world? Is this present revival of holiness the dawning of the blessed day when men shall "beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks?" When the "whole earth shall be filled with the glory of God?" When "one shall not need to say to his neighbor, know ye the Lord, but when all shall know the Lord from the least to the greatest?"

Or is this wonderful spiritual awakening the harbinger of a storm of persecution? Is it the preparation for a fiery ordeal through which the people of God are to pass? Does it indicate the near approach of the end, the apostasy, the falling away? The revelation of the man of sin? The second advent of our blessed Savior? The gathering of the elect? The first resurrection? The end of the world—what does it mean?

The apostles and disciples seemed to understand fully the wondrous baptism of Pentecost? "This is that [said Peter] spoken of by Joel, the prophet," etc. What does this present pentecost mean? Who can stand up, like Peter, and explain, in the light of a "Thus saith the Lord," the wonderful spiritual phenomena of the present day?

It seems to me if we would satisfactorily answer the question before us, we must carefully consider two things: first, the present condition of the church and the world; and secondly, the statements of Scripture. What are the facts then, as to the present condition of the church and the world? and right here I ought to say that I use the term "church" not in the New Testament sense of the word, but in the more modern acceptation of the term, meaning thereby the whole body of those who profess to be the disciples of Jesus, including the various sects and organizations of Christendom.

What is the condition of the church? What are its predominant characteristics? We answer pride, selfishness, worldly conformity, formality, unspirituality, unrighteousness. Let the gorgeous church edifices, empty missionary coffers, costly apparel with gold and pearls, multiplied ecclesiastical machinery, diminished power, and unscriptural conduct of professors bear witness to the truth of the foregoing.

What is the condition of the world? We answer, read the papers; crime of every description rampant; vice festering in every part of human society; avarice seeking its own by means diabolical and ingenuity infernal; ambition wading through ruin and blood to reach its goal. Seven million of armed men in Europe. Wars and rumors of wars. Nations groaning under burdens whose weight increases with the flight of time, etc. Leaving Scripture out of the question just now, and looking simply at the condition of the church and the world, with the history of the past before us, we should unhesitatingly answer: This holiness revival means, as to the church, separation; as to the world, persecution. But this question cannot be fully answered outside the Scriptures. "To the law and to the testimony." What has the word of God to say concerning these last times?—Banner of Holiness.

THRILLING PROSPECT.

WM. SHELDON.

The weary watcher for redemption feels the thrill of sacred ecstasy as the consoling tidings are wafted to his eager ear, Jesus is coming soon. This is the event that he has long desired, and earnestly prayed for with the fervent feelings and earnest language of the Revelator, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus." As the Master's voice salutes his waiting ear—"Surely I come quickly"—"Occupy till I come," his loving heart glows with deep anxiety and insatiable longings for that event. When authentic testimony is presented, demonstrating unmistakably the nearness of the advent, a thrill of ecstasy is conveyed to his heart that no other tidings could produce. It is a message that finds a warm welcome in his heart, for then comes the long-contemplated redemption of the mortal body. Then sleeping friends will leap from the bed of death, clothed with immortality, to greet us where death will be an obsolete foe. Then the glittering crown will deck the brow immortal; then the once weary ones will find rest unending; then comes the day of glory never to be darkened by the gloom of sorrow's night; then comes the great deliverance from tears, grief, and pain; then comes the promised reward in a realm of sinless and deathless perfection; for then "our house which is from heaven" will be here, and "the tabernacle of God be with men" made immortal, even the city of God, having "come down from God out of heaven."

Truly, this is a thrilling prospect to the friend of Jesus. A scene so lovely, so desirable, so real, and so near,—let it stir the heart, and move us to greater activity in the work of God.

THE WORLD IS JUST AWAKENING TO ITS SITUATION.

THOS. FITZSIMONS.

The signs, changes, distresses, perplexities, and revolutions, that for eighteen hundred years past the learned and pious fathers of the church and scriptural writers have been writing on, and predicting from Scripture to a heedless and ridiculing world to dawn upon it, the world is just beginning to learn for itself, from its present ample experience; in other words, the world is just awakening to its situation.

The world's teachers, statesmen, politicians, scientists, worldlings, and the press, are now coming to the front, with a doleful catalogue of woes and troubles, distress and perplexities of nations, great wars, strange events, etc., that in the daily papers of Christendom find neither end, or hopes held out of reformation. The world is now learning from actual experience what any less system of castigation would have failed to teach it. The Lord is working mightily! Behold he makes these assumed teachers of the world, who ignore him, come to the front, and give their testimony to his sure word of prophecy. A good many to-day are not quite so sure of the future, when their former teachers, the statesmen, politicians, the press, and schemers and dreamers, are putting in public print their fears for the coming times. Whence this corroboration of prophecy by worldly sources?

BE YE STEADFAST, UNMOVABLE.

A. H. SMITH.

In these strange times in which we live, when union and compromise seem to be the watchword, there is great danger of being moved away from the hope of the gospel. Not a few unstable ones, that once put their hands to the plow, are now looking back, having forgotten Lot's wife; and being tired of this wilderness life, and loathing such light food as comes down from heaven, have now gone back to the flesh-pots of Egypt, and are feasting on leeks and onions (or fairs and festivals), eating and drinking with the drunken; and we greatly fear the Lord of those servants will come in a day when they look not for him, and appoint them their portion with unbelievers. We believe the message concerning the coming of Christ is of God, and we cannot accept any substitute for it, however plausible it may appear. We have no faith or confidence in any system of religion that has not a soon-coming Jesus in it; no matter what it is called, or who believes it.

We are aware that it is being taught by some, that it makes no difference whether we accept this great sanctifying message in the love of it, or reject it as an unclean thing, wholly unworthy of our notice; but we believe it makes a wide difference. It made a difference with the Jewish church, when they rejected Christ at his first advent; and for not knowing the time of his visitation, their house was left unto them desolate. God was not longer with them; and as God is no respecter of persons, we believe it will be even so with the Gentile church that rejects him at his second advent, and scoffs at the evidence of his near approach. "Are not my ways equal?" saith the Lord.

Wolcott, Ct.

WAS CHRIST RAISED?

There are thousands at the present day who discard all faith in the literal resurrection of Christ from the dead, and who still retain their church connections. When Christ is thus assailed by his professed friends, what may we not expect from his avowed enemies? For the sake of establishing the minds of any who are wavering as to the truth of this sublime event, we subjoin a brief argument as follows: The following facts in the case are acknowledged by friends and foes:

1. Jesus Christ frequently predicted the circumstances of his death. 2. He actually died. 3. Was buried. 4. Was missing from the tomb.

Now there are but three conceivable ways by which the body could be removed from the sepulchre: by his enemies, by his friends, or by his Father, as he had predicted. If by his enemies, their motive must have been to produce the body, and thereby confront the apostles, and convince them of fraud in their Master. But the body was not produced by them. If by his friends, we cannot tell for what purpose. The dead body could not prove to them or others that he was risen; but on the contrary, be a standing and visible proof against them. It is true his enemies reported that his friends had "stolen him away" (Matt. 28: 1, 16); but when their report is examined it will appear false.

1. So manifestly improbable is the report, that Matthew, though he faithfully records the whole, does not offer a syllable to refute it.

2. The disciples were few in number, and destitute of natural courage. They were generally dismayed and terrified at the fate of their Master. Hence, when he was apprehended, they all forsook him and fled. Peter followed him afar off; and when accused of being a disciple, denied it three times with vehemence and oaths. Not one attended him in the judgment hall. And when he was crucified, the only persons that ventured to stand near his cross were his mother, with two or three other women, and John. It is not therefore probable that they would be found at such a work, especially at such a season; for,

3. It was the occasion of the great festival, the passover, when Jerusalem was full of people. It is also said to have been a time of the full moon.

4. It is not probable that all the guard would fall asleep at once, especially as they were in the open air.

5. If they were all asleep, they could not depose to anything that passed meantime. Sleeping witnesses! They could not know that it was stolen; or, if it was, by whom.

6. It was certain death to Roman soldiers to be found sleeping upon guard. Hence, if they had been asleep, they would not have voluntarily confessed it.

7. If the soldiers had been believed, the rulers would have punished them. This they never did.

8. If the soldiers had believed their own story, they ever after would have reproached the disciples with it. This they were never known to do.

If, therefore, the body could be removed in no other way, it must have been by Divine power, as he had previously said.

The more direct evidence of this great miracle is contained in the following particulars:

1. There were eleven distinct appearances of Christ after his burial. These were at different hours of the day, at different places, and, on one occasion, to above five hundred persons.

2. He did not appear to them silently, but talked and ate with them, showed his hands and feet, made them handle him, etc.; held several long conversations with them, and at last ascended up to heaven in their sight.

3. The witnesses, being a class of unlearned and despised men, were unequal to the task of imposition.

4. They were by no means credulous, but slow to believe in the resurrection of their Master.

5. There is a most remarkable change in the disposition and conduct of the disciples; from being the most timid of men, they suddenly become courageous and undaunted; they boldly preach that very Jesus whom, but a short time before, they had deserted in the greatest distress; and that, too, in the synagogues of Jerusalem. And, although his crucifixion was fresh before their eyes, and they had reason to expect a similar fate, they still avow his resurrection.

6. The Lord's Supper was instituted as a perpetual memorial of his death; and the Lord's Day to commemorate his resurrection.

These memorials were instituted at the very time when the circumstances to which they relate took place, and have been observed in the Christian world ever since. The resurrection of our Lord is thus established, and is proof sufficient of his divine mission. The Savior often appealed to his resurrection as the grand proof of his being sent from heaven; and his disciples constantly referred to it as the foundation of their faith.

Finally, this great event contains in itself the evidence both of miracle and prophecy. The prophecies herein completed are recorded in Ps. 16: 10; John 2: 19–22.

RELIGION AT HOME.

Religion at home is more precious than at church, or in the world. Every day each family should worship as regularly as they eat. Have they time to eat? Let the soul have food. Open the Bible and have God talk to the family; pray and praise in song, and on bended knees ask mercies. A family without worship is a domestic orphanage, and a school of unbelief, sensuality, and sin. Without spiritual life at home, it will be wholly lacking or exceedingly thin abroad. Children will grow up Christless and physical objects, carnal life will absorb attention and engross affection. With pure, sincere, tender religion at home, children will begin to be christians so soon as they learn of the Savior's love, and never know rebellion. Why should the offspring of saints be for one moment exposed to condemnation? Why should they not know the Savior so soon as they know sin? Generally they will if Christ is honored at the family altar. But he is not honored. Thousands upon thousands of church members live like infidels at home. The Bible is unread, praises never sung, prayer never heard. Can they not read? Why not let God speak to them out of his word? Can they not pray? The Lord's prayer can at least be repeated in concert. Is there no time? It will save time to take counsel of God. It is waste of time and waste of life to ignore God. We can have no real home without him. It requires a heavenly Father as well as earthly parents to make a sweet, healthful, absolute home.—Baptist Union.

SURELY I COME QUICKLY.

The Lord did not mean these words to be empty sounds. He meant his church to listen and give heed to the solemn announcement. They speak to each passing age with deeper tone and more awakening voice. The voice of this trumpet waxes louder and louder as the ages roll away.

"Now is our salvation nearer than when we believed." Are we, in the eager joy of our hearts, trying to measure the ages and count the few years or days that may lie between us and the Lord? Who can wonder that we should do so? Who would not wonder if we did not?

"His wife hath made herself ready." Are we ready? Is the bridal dress put on, "the fine linen, clean and white?" Are we decked for the marriage supper? Are we keeping our garments undefiled? Are we "keeping ourselves in the love of God, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life?" Jude 21.

And are we warning the ungodly? Are we Noahs in the prospect of that fiery deluge that is coming on the earth? Are we "preachers of righteousness?" Do we "condemn the world?" Are we laboring to pluck brands from the burning? Are we becoming more and more earnest in urging our message upon sinners—"to flee from the wrath to come?"—Christian Treasury.

"BE YE KIND ONE UNTO ANOTHER."

Be kind one to another,
Ye brothers in the strife,
That stand in armor side by side
Upon the field of life.
The battle rageth fiercely,
And dangers round thee dart,—
And wouldst thou turn thee from the foe
To pierce a brother's heart?

Be kind one to another,
Ye sailors o'er life's deep;
Let not the hand and heart grow cold
When winds and tempests sleep;
For soon the skies will darken—
No light upon thee shine,
And thou wilt wish that brother's hand
Was warmly clasped in thine.

Be kind one to another,
Ye reapers of the plain,
That have gone forth with sickles bright,
To garner golden grain;
The night will come when ye must leave
The dusky fading lea,
And would ye have a brother turn
With no good night for thee?

Be kind one to another,
Ye children of one God;
O clasp your hands, and trusting keep
The path your Savior trod.
The world hath little for ye,
But he hath much to give,—
Then raise your hearts, ye brother band,
And hope in him and live.

CHRISTIANITY.

The weak spot in religion, to-day, is not seen in the fact that men are heretical intellectually, not that men hold notions different from those their fathers held. No, this is not it. The weakness of religion, to-day, is seen in this; that it does not prevent its disciples from cheating and lying; does not prevent them abusing, and slandering, and fighting each other; does not prevent them from running in debt, when they know they cannot pay their indebtedness; does not prevent them from being mean, and tricky, and cunning, bitter, bigoted, and cruel; these are the great balefully luminous facts that stand over against our churches, and cast their light into the faces of those who ascend the steps of the sanctuary; and the watchful, laughing, cynical world notices that as the light falls on the streams that come and go, a quarter of the faces are ghastly.

Christianity was not intended to be fashionable, refined mannerism, tinctured with piety around the edges; but a compelling force, able to control the conduct; an inward power able to renovate the nature. It starts, if it starts at all in a man, in the renewing of the mind. It takes the lying propensity out of a man. It makes him love love, and hate hatred. It causes him to be kind and charitable in speech, patient under attack, forbearing toward his enemies. In short, real Christianity is a thing of character and conduct. It has direct relation to what you do and say, think and feel.—Ex.

STOP AND SHAKE HANDS.

Why is it men dart out of a prayer-meeting as they do, the moment the benediction is pronounced? The true idea of the church is, that it is a family—God's family. Its members are children of one Father, and brothers and sisters one of another. A prayer-meeting, therefore, is a family meeting. It is a re-union of brothers and sisters. The service is of the character of a feast; and we all know that after feasting comes talking and the exhibition of good nature. After the former portion of the service is over, brethren, why not stay and have an informal service of your own? Talk of whatever the Spirit suggests; tell your joys and your sorrows, your hopes and your fears, to one another. "Laugh with those who laugh, and weep with those who weep." Do n't file out of the room, solemn as crows fly to the groves at night passing through gloom into deeper gloom; but go forth happy, as children pour out of the door when father or mother start out with them for a ramble in the bright sunshine across the green fields. At least stay long enough, after the formal service, to shake hands with the pastor and with each other, and greet any stranger that may have chanced to have dropped in among you of an evening. Lubricate the wheels of your church machinery with the "oil of gladness," and you will be astonished at the ease with which all parts will soon be working together. "Salute every saint in Christ Jesus."—Golden Rule.

"LOVE one another, as I have loved you" (John 13: 34.) He asks not that our love should equal his, but resemble his; not that it should be of the same strength, but of the same kind. A pearl of dew will not hold the sun, but it may hold a spark of its light. Let us not mistake the meaning.

SOUL-SAVING.

Men want more than the knowledge of the facts of religion. A man may utter the whole truth, and be as cold as an icicle. It is the reaching out of the heart's anxiety that moves men. In some of the evangelists who are most successful in the revivals of to-day, there is manly, straight-forward appeal—"I am anxious for you, brother! Christ wants to make you happy. Won't you come to him now and have life?"

Next, personal contact with those whom we wish to save. In some way or other there must be this personal contact. It has been so in Scotland and Ireland; it is so in England at this day. There is not much difficulty where the religious interest is high enough to create the need. It is often easier to preach a sermon than to take a man aside for personal dealing; and it is of the greatest consequence that those who have this duty should be judicious as well as pious. We do not entrust the sufferers in our domestic circles to any but skilled hands; and care should be taken that those who have to deal with sin-sick souls should know their work.

Unbounded faith in God will prevent many mischiefs. It will repress the anxious craving for instant and manifest results, and prevent discouragement when they are delayed. The prayer of faith is not passion, not agony, but trust. God works at times more powerfully without than with visible evidence of his operation. Let us engage in the work in the calm confidence that he wants the people saved; that he is ready to use instrumentality, and that as we humbly follow his directions the work will be done.

"He that doeth the will of God abideth forever." And let us mark this: christian life is action; not a speculating, not a debating, but a doing. One thing, and only one, has eternity stamped upon it. Feelings pass, resolves and thoughts pass, opinions change. What you have done lasts—lasts in you, through ages, through eternity; what you have done for Christ, that, and only that, you are. The days are fleeting away, and there is little done for Christ; much for self and sloth. And I sometimes shudder when I wake, as it were, for a moment, to remember that while we are dallying the wheels of the chariot of the Judge do not tarry too, but are hurrying on with what will be to some of us fearful rapidity. What need have we to pray for an ever serious, solemn mind, and an abiding sense of the presence of God within and around us! —King's Highway.

HOME AND HEALTH.

DRESS.

Look at our love of display in the matter of dress, not only at select parties, but in the sanctuary. St. Paul and John Wesley have spoken very plainly and pointedly on this subject, but the reply is, St. Paul was an old bachelor and Wesley was an ascetic. Our Methodist rule stands in the book of discipline to this day, forbidding "the putting on of gold or costly apparel." Paul wrote to Timothy requiring that "women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety, not with braided hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array;" and Peter exhorted wives not to adorn themselves with plaiting of hair, and wearing of gold, or putting on of apparel, but rather to wear the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit. The word of God is very exacting in forbidding any display in dress, but during the past few years christian women have grievously departed from its teachings, and the reading of our Methodist rule on this question only extorts a smile. Think of thirty yards of silk for a dress for a christian woman, whose duty to God and the church is to save all she can, that she may more abundantly give to objects of charity. Think of a consecrated woman with apparel costing hundreds of dollars upon her person, giving only a pittance to our poor fund. We all need to go back and take our first lessons over again in the school of self-denial.

Think of the time and money spent at ornamentation; of the necklaces, chains, bracelets, rings, ear-rings, and ornaments for the hair; think of the frizzes, curls, crimps, coils and braids, which are usually very expensive. Think of the work and trimmings on material worn, the puffs, tucks, and ruffles; the plaits, feathers, bows, and flutings; the pipings, fringes, flowers, and gimps; the cords, ribbons, buttons, laces, and read the third chapter of Isaiah, and ask yourself were those vanities of the daughters of Zion any worse than ours, which were so abominable in the sight of God, and upon which he pronounced such a terrible curse?—S. H. Adams.

HOW TO KEEP SOBER.

In a rural district in the north of England the following dialogue lately took place between a Friend and a shoemaker who had signed the temperance pledge:

"Well, William, how are you?"

"Oh! pretty well. I had only eighteen pence and an old hen when I signed, and a few old scores, but now I have about ten pounds in the books, and my wife and I have lived through the summer without getting into debt; but as I am only thirty weeks old yet (so he styled himself) I cannot be so strong yet, friend."

"How is it you never signed before?"

"I did sign, but I keep it different now to what I did before, friend."

"How is that?"

"Why, I go down on my knees and pray."

Better informed persons might learn a lesson in this respect, by applying to the source of strength now possessed by William the shoemaker.

IT DON'T PAY.

It don't pay to have fifty working men poor and ragged, in order to have one saloon keeper dressed in broadcloth and flush of money.

It don't pay to have these fifty working men live on bone soup and half rations, in order that the saloon keeper may flourish on roast turkey and champagne.

It don't pay to have the mothers and children dressed in rags, and starved into the semblance of emaciated scare-crows, and living in hovels in order that the saloon keeper's wife may dress in satin, and her children grow fat and hearty, and live in a bay window parlor.

It don't pay to have one citizen in the county jail because another citizen sold him liquor.

It don't pay to have ten smart, active and intelligent boys transformed into hoodlums and thieves, to enable one man to lead an easy life by selling them liquor.

It don't pay to give one man for fifteen dollars a quarter, a license to sell liquor, and then spend $20,000 on the trial of Jim McLaughlin for buying that liquor, and then committing murder under its influence.

It don't pay to have one thousand homes blasted, ruined, defiled, and turned into hells of disorder and misery, in order that one wholesale liquor dealer may amass a large fortune.

It don't pay to keep six thousand men in the penitentiaries and hospitals, and one thousand in the lunatic asylum, at the expense of the honest, industrious tax-payers, in order that a few rich capitalists may grow richer by the manufacture of whisky.—California Rescue.

VEGETABLE DIET.—Dr. Graham presents a vast array of facts to prove superiority of vegetable food over that of animal food. He shows that a vegetable diet is more favorable to the development and manifestation of the intellectual powers than meat diet or a mixed diet of meat and vegetables. It is true many will not agree with him in this view, yet the facts he presents are of such a character as to demand a careful investigation of this point. If intellectual power is so greatly promoted by the use of a vegetable diet, as he seems to prove it is, then it becomes a matter of vital interest to all our people, and especially to students, teachers, and professional persons.

Numerous examples are given where children reared upon a purely vegetable diet were found to surpass all others in aptitude and quickness to learn, and possessed superior clearness and sprightliness of intellect. Instances are also given where the addition of animal food to the diet of these same children, had the effect to render them more stupid and dull of comprehension.

SICK PERSONS AND SUNSHINE.—If possible, the sick-chamber should be the room of the house which has the most sunshine coming into it, and if the bed can be so placed that the person lying on it can see a good piece of the blue sky, so much the better it will be. If the patient can see out of two windows instead of one, he will be twice as well off. It is found in all hospitals that those rooms facing the sun have fewer deaths, all things considered, than those which are upon the shady side of the house; and where statistics have been kept for a period of years, it is found that the average time for recovery is less upon the sunny side than upon the shady side of the building. Not only do fewer patients die, perhaps, in the southernly exposed sides of hospitals, and sick people get well there faster than those on the northern exposure, but it has been shown recently that in asylums, prisons, etc., more of the inmates become ill who are compelled to dwell on the shady side of the building than those who live on the sunny side.—Care of the Sick.

SAYS the Scientific American, "If mosquitoes or other bloodsuckers infest our sleeping rooms at night, we uncork a bottle of the oil of pennyroyal, and these insects leave in great haste, nor will they return so long as the air in the room is loaded with the fumes of that aromatic herb. If rats enter the cellar, a little powdered potash, thrown in their holes or mixed with meal, and scattered in their way, never fails to drive them away. Cayenne pepper will keep the buttery and store-room free from ants and cockroaches. If a mouse makes an entrance into any part of your dwellings, saturate a rag with cayenne, in solution, and stuff it into the hole, which can then be repaired with either wood or mortar. No rat or mouse will eat that rag for the purpose of opening communication with a depot of supplies."

LEARN A TRADE.—I never look at my steel composing rule that I do not bless myself that while my strength lasts, I am not at the mercy of the world. If my pen is not wanted, I can go back to the case, and be sure of work; for I learned the printer's trade thoroughly; newspaper work, job work, book work, and press work. I am glad I have a good trade. It is a rock on which the possessor can stand firmly. There is health and vigor for both body and mind in an honest trade. It is the strongest and surest part of a self-made man. Go from the academy to the printing office or the artisan's bench; or if you please, to the farm—for, to be sure, true farming is a trade, and a grand one at that. Lay thus a sure foundation, and after that branch off into whatever profession you please.—Horace Greeley.

FOOD AS MEDICINE.—Dr. Hall relates the case of a man who was cured of his biliousness by going without his supper and drinking freely of lemonade. Every morning, says the doctor, this patient arose with a wonderful sense of rest and refreshment, and feeling as though the blood had been literally washed and cooled by the lemonade and the fast. His theory is that food can be used as a remedy for many diseases. As an example, he cures spitting of blood by the use of salt; epilepsy by watermelon; kidney affection by celery; poison, olive or sweet oil; erysipelas, pounded cranberries applied to the part affected; hydrophobia, onions, etc. So the way to keep in good health is to know what to eat—not to know what medicine to take.

BORROWING TROUBLE.—Some persons have the foolish habit of always borrowing trouble from the future. The trials of to-day are not enough; they must send a telegram into the future to inquire what may be to-morrow. Such men are frightened at their own shadows. Their fear leads them to suspect a foe where they find a friend; like the man in the fog, whose heart beat because he saw a monster form approaching on his path, which he found to be his "brother John!" While there is prudential wisdom in preparing for the worst, there is equal wisdom in always hoping for the best.

AGRICULTURE is an employment the most worthy the application of man; the most ancient and the most suitable to his nature. It is the common nurse of all persons in every age and condition of life; it is the source of health, strength, plenty and riches, and of a thousand sober delights and honest pleasures. It is the mistress and school of sobriety, temperance, justice, religion, and, in short, of all virtues, civil and military.—Socrates.

FOR THE AGED.

(Composed by Charlotte Elliot, in her eightieth year.)

In life's evening long and dreary,
From the treasures once possessed,
Is thy spirit faint and weary?
Dost thou long to be at rest?
On this sweet promise fix thy sight:
"At even time it shall be light."

"Light is sown" for thee and gladness,
Even in this vale of tears;
Soon will pass the night of sadness,
Grief will fly when morn appears;
Still to faith's strong illumin'd sight,
"At even time it shall be light."

Look not on the ills around thee,
Earth grows darker every hour;
Let not crime's increase confound thee,
Limited is Satan's power.
Look on to regions pure and bright,
"At even time it shall be light."

Dwell not on the growing weakness
That precedes thy frame's decay;
Rise above depressing sickness,
Catch the dawn's approaching ray.
Faith can discern the day-star bright,
"At evening time it shall be light."

See thy Savior bending o'er thee,
Even to old age the same;
Set life's one chief end before thee,
Still to glorify his name,
While on himself is fixed thy sight,—
"At evening time it shall be light."

REPORT OF THE "Conditional Immortality" Conference.

But it is high time to refer to the conduct of that part of the religious press which is unfettered by sectional restriction. Here we may take, as a leading example, the Contemporary Review. This great Review deserves all the honor and success it has attained. It has hitherto been conducted with signal ability, equity, and courage. But in relation to the doctrine of immortality, the Contemporary is acting on the same policy with the sectarian periodicals just described. The Universalist doctrine of the final salvation of all mankind is frequently advocated in its pages. The ancient doctrine of the endless misery of the wicked, has just been maintained by the Rev. Mr. Oxenham, a Roman Catholic priest, in four long articles. But the editors have not yet thought it their duty to allow of even the briefest representation of Life in Christ, or Conditional Immortality, while printing, in the articles of other writers, the most serious and scornful misrepresentations of our faith in these particulars. Well, you must be patient with the Contemporary Review, and allow it time to adjust its vision to an unfamiliar object. The able proprietors and conductors, evidently at present, know little of the subject which so much interests us. They are themselves Universalists, and hence are willing to assist that cause by allowing Mr. Oxenham to publish his incredibilities. I have no doubt that before long they will discover that in the conflict between science and faith, your doctrine at least deserves a fair representation; as they will also learn that a mode of thought which obtains the earnest adhesion of such men as Professor Stokes, Mr. Dale, Professor Barlow, Mr. Heard, the late Dr. Rothe, and Professor Hudson, is at least as deserving of a fair exposition as that supported by Mr. Jukes and Mr. Oxenham (hear, hear). Of the cheaper periodicals unfettered by party, I have pleasure in commending the conduct of the Christian World (applause), with its enormous circulation of one hundred and twenty thousand weekly. This journal has found its delight, and doubtless also its interest, in advocating editorially, what I must call the popular delusion of the salvation of all men; but it has always allowed a fair representation of the doctrine of conditional immortality, and has never descended to the meanness of pretending to ignore a mode of thought which only wilful blindness can deny to be gaining a firm hold on the convictions of myriads of able and good men in Christendom as the very truth of revelation.

We have now spoken of the press, knowing well the immense aid which it might bring to a cause which we know to be divine. But allow me to remind you, in conclusion, that the press is not the only instrument by which ideas can be spread abroad. It is far too common to undervalue the mighty agency of speech, of public and private discourse, as the original and by far the most effective method of propagating truth. Christianity was successfully spread throughout the Roman empire, and even beyond its limits, fourteen hundred years before the days of Guttenberg or Caxton. Men sometimes think to-day, that unless they have at command a press devoted to their principles, the diffusion of these among large masses of men is impossible. But we have the unwilling testimony of Caiphas, that a handful of unlearned but inspired and resolute men, filled Jerusalem with their doctrine, without the aid of a single tract, newspaper, or magazine. The gospel was well known before the Gospels was written, and had risen to be the greatest power in the world long ages before the Bible was printed even in black letter (hear, hear).

St. Paul, almost single-handed, preached the gospel throughout Asia Minor, from Tarsus to Ephesus and Miletus, and by one short autograph letter, written in capitals, written to the Galations, smote to death the heresy which would have converted the churches of Christ into strongholds of corrupted Judaism. There is scarcely any limit to the influence in truth-spreading, under God's gracious providence, of one man, who can think clearly, speak plainly, declare a divine message perseveringly, and suffer for it patiently (applause). Five hundred such brethren operating at once, will be capable of persuading a whole world of the resurrection of Christ, if they have beheld him alive after his passion. Men—not books (hear, hear)—are the greatest forces upon earth; and books and magazines are valuable only as they promote the growth of men. Even, therefore, if all the press were engaged in a conspiracy to ignore or to controvert the doctrine that eternal life is the portion of those alone who are born of God, we need not doubt the possibility of widely diffusing these divine ideas.

But the greatest calamity that could happen to this movement would be, that it should fall into the hands of men who are anxious for nothing else, and who are engaged in no other good works; who are concerned to spread no other truths; or who labor to spread these ideas only in a negative form, as the doctrine of extinction, apart from their vital connection with the whole divine revelation. Or, lastly, into the hands of men who deny all that revelation positively teaches on future punishment, on the action of evil spirits, and on the incarnation and atonement of the Son of God. There are those engaged on this question—none of them here present that I know of—who would wreck any reform by their extravagances and their ignorances (hear, hear). These ideas will benefit the world only as they are proclaimed by men who fear God, by men who love Christ, by men who are superior to the childish passion of forming a sect or party with a fanciful name, by men who truly labor for the salvation of souls (hear, hear).

As for the numerous persons in eminent positions who, being convinced of the truth of the doctrine of conditional immortality, with all its consequences, yet "conceal their belief out of regard to their usefulness," there is very little to be said that is honorable to them (voice: Yes). What can such men understand by "usefulness," or by loyalty to God? Why, if it were commonly reported that any one of you who is a father were in the habit of holding your less instructed offspring for their faults on the rack, or before a blazing fire for hours together, so that by their report your character was utterly blackened and ruined; so that your neighbors shunned you; so that no one had the slightest faith in your professions of justice or benevolence; what would you think of a friend who knew thoroughly well the untruth of the report, who, from a regard to his own "usefulness," refrained from uttering a word in your vindication and defence? (applause); would you not denounce him as a coward and a traitor? (hear, hear); and remind him that his true usefulness as a man would be to be honest and straightforward, and boldly to tell the truth in a case like this? But what must the Eternal Justice and Love think of his sons who, in order to maintain their "usefulness," will allow to pass uncontradicted far fouler calumnies,—who ever assist in alienating from him nearly the whole thinking section of mankind (hear, hear); who leave to a difficult and isolated battle the few who have "counted all things but loss," that they might remonstrate against this vilification of God (hear, hear), and who allege some great unsettlement of mind, or equilibrium of judgment as to the question whether or not it ought to be taught throughout heathendom, that the God of love and righteousness will inflict suffering throughout an endless duration of being on the bodies or souls of countless millions of Pagans unsaved in the ages foregone? (hear, hear.)

We will leave such persons to the meditation of their own consciences and to the style of usefulness which they prefer (hear, hear.) I cannot sit down without reminding you that this mode of presenting Christianity, which we advocate as apostolic and divine, as a message conferring eternal life as a donation upon dying men, is not only fitted to assist the faith of European minds, deprived of their old hopes and fears by recent scientific conclusions; but also, probably of the countless millions of Buddhists throughout India, Siam, Japan, and China. In those lands the loss of individual being, which they call nirvana, has, under the inspiration of demons, become the final expectation of the human race. Will it not give to the joyful voice of Christianity a new energy, when it has learned to proclaim through Christ the promise of individual life in conscious union with Deity, as the eternal blessedness of the righteous? You will never succeed, I think, in persuading the four hundred and eighty million Buddhists that man possesses by nature an indissoluble soul; for it is the first principle of the Buddhist that the soul can be dissolved; and his second, that separate existence is so miserable, that the highest object of hope is to lose individual being and be absorbed in the All. But a better result will probably follow, if you teach him that the Eternal Essence has spoken to mankind, and has declared in a loving message to all men, that it is sin which renders separate existence a curse; that that curse is removed by the incarnate Son of God; that everlasting life is given to us in Christ; and that therefore nirvana need no longer be pined for as a boon. Life in God's image is endless life and endless joy, and consciousness needs no longer long for annihilation of being. But you must add to this message and promise the awakening warning—"Fear God and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come," and "Whosoever is not found written in the book of life shall be cast into the lake of fire;" for "the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men."

If I could do nothing else this morning, I should like to end by commending to public attention, and especially to missionary colleges, the speech of Mr. Barrett of Norwich, last Thursday, at the meeting of the London Missionary Society, in which he showed that the prevalent questioning of the old doctrine of the endless misery of all unconverted Pagans, is very likely to run to the opposite extreme of doubting altogether their danger, as "sinning without law." Nothing is more needed at home and in the mission field, and pre-eminently in China and India, than a credible and operative doctrine of "judgment to come" upon all mankind. And such a doctrine cannot, I think, be re-established, until the religious public consents to discuss over the sacred Scriptures, not only Universalism or the Restoration theory, but the doctrine of Conditional Immortality and the infliction of the second death. Certainly, the church ought to try to find out what St. Paul meant, when he said with trembling, "Who is sufficient for these things? To some we are the savor of life unto life; and to others the savor of death unto death." Surely, it is the duty of the religious press to assist us in this dread investigation; for, as Robert Hall declared fifty years ago,—"The evils of controversy are all transitory; but its benefits are all permanent and real." (Prolonged cheering).*

THE CHOSEN.

R. P. ELDRIDGE.

"Many are called, but few are chosen."

Who are called? Every son and daughter of Adam, from the palace and hovel, from the street and alley, from the workshop and from the farm. None too high, none too low; noble and ignoble, rich and poor, the bond and the free. God is no respecter of persons. Christ invites all; yes, all may be numbered with his chosen ones. Glory be unto his name forever and ever.

Who are chosen? If he is no respecter of persons, why "but few" chosen? Because God will have a tried people. What does John the Revelator say? "These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." The chosen ones have been to Christ, the living fountain, and there they have been cleansed. "Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean; from all your filthiness, and from all your idols, will I cleanse you." They have obeyed the command, as Naaman of old. They have dipped in that fountain, and come forth clean and white.

These are the chosen ones. They have counted the cost. They have weighed the transitory pleasures of this world in the balances, and found them wanting. They have sounded the deep waters of trouble and trial, and found that, by the help of Christ, their little bark can be borne upon the surface of the water, and the billows will not be permitted to overflow them. And though neighbors may turn the cold shoulder upon them, friends and relatives forsake them, it is all for Jesus, and his smile is worth it all; and they are determined to be the Lord's, whatever the cost may be. Though the enemy may tempt them at every point, even as Christ was tempted, saying to them—Now you have gone far enough in this way; there isn't any need of so much painstaking to get to heaven; let me show you a way that's easy and smooth, from which I have removed all the obstructions, leveled down all the uneven places; and you can go to heaven without any trouble at all. Look at those christians down there in that pleasant valley; see what a beautiful temple they have to worship in! and I make it so pleasant for them. I remove all trials and crosses, and they do not think me as bad as I am represented to be. In fact, I think some of them like me the best. Come, Christian, turn back, and go down there to that temple and worship; you will find so many friends there, and all the pleasures of this world. Here it is hard toiling to get up Calvary's rugged hill; but down in this pleasant valley you will have so many to worship with you; the rich and the titled, the young and the gay, and the great men too. Come, christian, can I not persuade you to turn back and join this pleasure-seeking company and be happy?—they will still be firm and unmovable, fixed upon the Rock of their salvation.

Have not some of the dear pilgrims been tempted in this way? But the chosen ones are not to be found with those who are seeking their happiness in the things of earth; no, they feel that "Brighter joys than earth can give,

Win them away;
Pleasures that forever live—
They cannot stay."

They also feel that there is a work to be done, a battle to be fought; and their language is—

"Sure I must fight if I would reign;
Increase my courage, Lord,
To bear the toil, endure the shame,
Supported by thy word."

Yes, the religion of Jesus of Nazareth destroys at once in the heart all desire or love for the trifling and fading joys of earth. The chosen are looking for a better country, a "city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God."

Dear reader, are you one of Father's chosen ones? Are you climbing up Zion's hill, bearing your cross, and despising the shame? If you are, take courage from this text—"No man cometh unto me, except the Father which hath sent me draw him; and I will raise him up at the last day." Though Father may draw us through fire and afflictions, Jesus has promised to raise us up at the last day; and has said also that we shall sit with him on his throne. Can it be possible that such worthless worms as we are will ever sit with Jesus on his throne? that we are to be made like him, like the holy and blessed Jesus? What a sublime thought! O what an incentive for faithfulness on our part! How earnestly and assiduously should we be engaged in striving to be one of the chosen ones.

But, dear reader, are you one that yet prefers remaining down in the valley with those pleasure-loving christians, bearing no cross for Christ? If you are, take warning from this: "Be not deceived; God is not mocked." As you sow, so shall you reap. If the Judge is nigh, even at the door, it is of the utmost importance that we all have our lamps trimmed and burning, and waiting for the Bridegroom's return, that when he comes we may exclaim, "This is our God, we have waited for him, and he will save us." So prays your sister in the faith.

Chatham, Mass., May 21st, 1876.

SCIENCE AND REVELATION.

ASA G. GORDON.

Webster defines science as meaning—"Knowledge reduced to system." Revelation he defines as "The act of disclosing what was before unknown." Paul in his charge to Timothy tells him to "avoid profane and vain babblings, and oppositions of science falsely so called." 1 Tim. 6: 20. There is a knowledge of earthly things, and there is a knowledge of heavenly things. "For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? even so, the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God. Now we have received not the spirit of the world, but the Spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given us of God." 1 Cor. 2: 11, 12.

Earthly things are demonstrated beyond a doubt. By observation and experience we may learn and know some of the causes and the way natural things are changed; and new phases of the same material are observable. Why will some people use the laws of nature as a weapon to destroy the doctrine of a divine revelation, and even to prove the uncertainty of a divine Being that rules all nature and nature's laws? Has the greatest philosopher that ever lived, or the most astute scientist that ever wrote upon the laws of nature, or the relation of cause and effect, ever shown any cases, or demonstrated by any process of reasoning, that inanimate matter ever produced animal life? Until such a law is discovered, let the pretender to science ascribe the origin of man to some power that was, instead of imagining laws to exist that cannot be shown as possible.

Some of these would-be scientists may exclaim, "Oh! but where is your God? who has seen him? Unless you will give his history, we will not accept of him." Very well. Do you require as much evidence as this to satisfy you that there are men? No, you do not. You say we do not know how man originated, but still you accept the idea that man is, without knowing all his antecedents. "O yes, we know men exist, for we see them."

It seems to me that the human mind must be exceedingly dark not to recognize a great Intelligence, when every thing gives unmistakable evidence of a designer of incomprehensible knowledge and wisdom. "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth his handiwork." Psalm 19: 1.

I will admit that nature and nature's laws do not give us knowledge of the number of the powers that exist, or the purposes of the great mind, or minds, that created all things; consequently, we need a revelation from the highest authority. Now this revelation we have, the Bible and the Holy Spirit witnessing, and showing the things of God. All true science is truth, and never precludes the necessity of revelation, or in any way conflicts with spiritual truths, which are as much higher than natural things as God is higher than the works of his hands. Consequently, in order to make the most of human reason, we must let reason work, and not stultify ourselves by denying the great first cause, which the Deity has so kindly condescended to give some light upon.

And now, because we cannot fathom infinity, shall we deny obvious facts? No; let us add to, instead of diminishing the light which we already have. "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him." James 1: 5. My mind is frequently exercised on this subject, in consequence of the unbelief which prevails so extensively at this day in regard to eternal things.

Quite recently, I asked an old man of more than fourscore years if he loved the Lord? His reply was that he "never saw him"! He also informed me that "we know nothing about such things." May God help us, and keep us from the skepticism of these last days; may we have our lamps trimmed and burning, and be ready to go in "to the marriage supper of the Lamb."

THE PERVERTED PARABLE.

THE RICH MAN AND LAZARUS.—Luke 16.

W. LAING.

In spite of the many plain statements of Scripture regarding the utter unconsciousness of the dead—such as, "The dead know not anything" (Eccl. 9: 5); "The dead praise not the Lord, neither they that go down into silence" (Ps. 115: 17); "When man's breath goeth forth, he returns to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish" (Ps. 145: 4)—this parable is constantly brought as demonstrative evidence to the contrary. Surely this, to say the least, is making a different use of the parable from what our Lord intended. Besides, it is a fair rule to apply to the teaching of Scripture, that those parts which are parabolic, metaphorical, or obscure, must be understood by the light of those parts which are plain, direct, and explicit.

We must not understand parables literally, if, by doing so, we require to make plain, direct, or explicit statements figurative. Dr. Kitto wisely remarks: "The rule seems to be, that in parabolical discourses, provided the doctrines inculcated are strictly true, the terms in which they are inculcated may be adapted to the prevailing ideas of those to whom they are addressed. If any question arises about the particular circumstances, in such a discourse, the clue for our guidance to the correct interpretation must be sought in those parts of Scripture which speak to us plainly, and not in parables." Thus, in the parable before us, two dead men are represented as conversing with each other—suffering, desiring, and reasoning; while in the Scriptures we are told that "the dead know not anything;" that in the same day that man "returns to the earth, his thoughts perish." These direct statements regarding the condition of the dead are not to be understood by the representation given in the parable, but as containing in themselves an expression of absolute truth; while the representation in the parable must be understood in a sense harmonious with these direct statements regarding the condition of the dead. This, we submit, is fair dealing.

No one supposes that the story told by Jotham (Judges 9: 8–15), of the trees electing and anointing a king to reign over them, to be a description of facts; and when we read of the blood of Abel crying unto God from the ground (Gen. 4: 10), and that "the blood of sprinkling speaketh better things than the blood of Abel" (Heb. 12: 24), we never imagine that a real voice was heard. And if shed blood be represented as speaking, as well as other inanimate objects—such as mountains breaking forth into singing, and trees of the field clapping their hands (Is. 45: 12), is it at all wonderful that dead men, who know not anything, should be (for a purpose) represented acting as if alive? Surely not.

This is not the only instance in which the dead are represented as speaking. In Is. 14: 10, the inhabitants of Sheol are represented as rising up to meet the king of Babylon, and exclaiming with astonishment, "Art thou also become as weak as we? Art thou become like unto us? Thy pomp is brought down to the grave, the worm is spread under thee, and the worms cover thee;" yet no one would affirm that those thus covered with worms in the grave were at the same time in a state of conscious being; and it requires no great endowment of ideality to perceive the beauty and force of the figure. Let the parable in question be viewed in a similar way, and its teaching shall be found in no degree contradicting the direct testimony of Scripture regarding the unconscious state of the dead.

To understand the parable to be a real description of the condition of the righteous, and the wicked dead, before resurrection and judgment, is to ignore not only the plain and direct teaching of the Bible regarding the condition of the dead, but also its positive testimony that we "must appear at the judgment seat of Christ, to receive the things in body, according to what we have done, whether it be good or bad."

The Lord himself taught plainly that it is "at the resurrection of the just," that recompense shall be given to those who are worthy (Luke 14: 14); and this truth is strikingly illustrated in his memorable words: "Many will say to me in that day, "Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name, and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you; depart from me, ye that work iniquity." Matt. 6: 22, 23.

The day here referred to, is evidently the day of judgment, and the parties introduced are represented as being surprised at the fate awarded to them. But why should they be surprised at their rejection if they had been suffering in Hades ever since the day of their death, till they came forth to judgment at "the resurrection of damnation"? (John 5: 28, 29). The idea that the wicked dead are punished by the Judge before resurrection and judgment, is thus utterly at variance with the teaching of the Lord, as it is opposed to the principles of reason and justice.

Whatever, therefore, be the import of the parable we cannot believe that our Lord used it to teach a doctrine so utterly opposed to his own testimony on other occasions, and at variance with the uniform testimony of Holy Scripture.

Here the matter might be left to rest; but in confirmation of what has been advanced, we submit a few animadversions on the common method of understanding the parable as setting forth a conscious state of disembodied existence between death and resurrection. The representation in the parable gives no countenance whatever to a disembodied state of conscious existence. By what process of reasoning could we infer the consciousness of a disembodied spirit from the declaration that, in hades, the rich man lifted up his eyes, and felt his tongue tormented in a flame, requesting that Lazarus might dip his finger in water to cool his burning tongue? Besides, the scene of the representation is in hades—the grave, or state of the dead, where there is neither "knowledge, wisdom, nor remembrance," and where the blessed Redeemer himself lay for three days (Acts 2: 25–30.

The rich man died, and was buried, and in the grave he lifted up his eyes, being in torments. Does it not meet all the requirements of the case to understand our Lord as making use of a parable to convey reproof or instruction to his prejudiced auditors, the Pharisees?

According to Whitby, this same parable was contained in the "Gemare Babylonicum," and was probably familiar to the Jews at the time our Lord repeated it in their hearing. His object seems to have been to reprove the Pharisees for their covetousness.

While this parable by no fair means can be held to militate against the positive declarations of the Scriptures regarding the condition of the dead, it contains strong presumptive evidence against the theory that men exist consciously, as spirits, between death and resurrection. Observe, that the rich man is represented pleading that Lazarus should be "sent from the dead," to warn his brethren. From the answer given, it is assumed that, in order to do this, Lazarus would require to "rise from the dead" (verses 27–31). This certainly does not favor the notion that, at death, or what is vulgarly called death, the soul, or man proper, only bursts the cerements of his chrysalis covering and soars forth unfettered to the exercise of noble and transcendent powers, capable of performing far more arduous duties than that of carrying a message of warning to men in the flesh. Having never ceased to live, such a person had no need to rise from the dead to perform that service. The spirit mediums manage such affairs otherwise, though, unfortunately for them, and the philosophy which sustains them, the words of the living God proclaim them "deceiving and being deceived."

From such seductive and ruinous devices, let the reader turn to and rely on the sure word of God, which tells us of a coming judgment and a coming Judge, who will render to each one according to his work. For "all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good to the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil to the resurrection of condemnation." Above all, make sure that you are "in Christ Jesus." To such, "there is no condemnation" (Rom. 8: 1).

THOUGHTS BY NIGHT AND DAY.

C. COLEGROVE.

THE POWER OF GRIEF.

How impossible to count the heart-aches of God's people in all the ages gone by, to say nothing of the pitiable woes of all the other living and dead millions. God only can count. I know we may look out on the sunshine and laugh; we may hide sorrow from our eyes for a while; but not for very long. Who can be truly merry with the anguish still protracted and repeated of innumerable mourners? Never, until the Lord shall come and utter the omnipotent word of deliverance. Needy, needy earth; needy, needy people.

There is this, however, to think of, the bruised believer can learn to believe in spite of his afflictions. Nay, his afflictions draw or drive him to God, and if the trouble grows even as he is pleading, and disappointment still awaits him, and his heart is sore and heavy, then he can learn to believe, by believing in spite of temptation, and this tested faith is faith perfected or at least approaching perfection. Take, for example, the sickness and death of a friend. The anxious believer beseeches God's mercy in rebuking disease. But no, the sickness is unrebuked, and the heart bleeds and cries as the dread malady marches on, and death comes in and shuts the scene. O the tears that never flow, locked in the heart like a prison, and longing for exit in streams from eyes that might open like gates to relieve the imprisoned floods! The believer is woe-struck and mystified. "My God," he cries, "why didst thou not please to put forth one atom of thy power to save me from this bitterness? Is my prayer so futile and ineffectual? Why could I not prevail?" What is bodily fatigue in comparison with the deep crying which no one can see but God? for the face may be serene and tell no tale. A man thus pained and grieved, with his heart full of rifts and seams, may seek to shun the scrutiny of men for the time, and take some new route through the fields; for what are hills or hummocks, bushes, fences, pools of water, and scorching sunshine to him now? The sorrow in his heart is greater than bodily labor or weariness. Such is the power of grief.

But there is a greater power. It is faith in God, in spite of affliction. It is faith which looks and speaks to Jesus, and says, "I believe in thee and in the Father, in spite of my bitter disappointment. I believe in thee." The grief has a power or a mission. It is to develop this loyalty to God. Formerly, in some such extremity, faith might have wavered and almost failed. Perhaps there was confusion, weakness and well nigh, despair. It is not so now. Faith declares, I will believe, though I am slain.

THE NEED OF GOD.

The need both of God and of Christ, that is, both of the Father and the Son. What a crying need when the earth has grown old and worn, and the green fields but disguise the locked up bitterness. Hence the enlightened and yet suffering pray, "Thy kingdom come." Who is so enlightened as not to suffer, or who by illumination is saved from suffering? Nay, after illumination comes the fight of afflictions. And by instruction and understanding, both from trials and from prophecy, we cry out after God—cry for the King, cry for the Restorer, that he will exercise his power. We want the power of God. The enemy is stirring up his power, and we want our absent and silent Friend to stir up his power. Hence it is said our God will come and not keep silence. How long he has seemed to keep silent. Every thing is in a kind of lethargy and half-life, because there is such a sore need for God to speak. Now the vociferations of men go for not much. We may hear much vain hallooing. But when God shall speak we will be glad.

There are some so profoundly sad, they will never laugh from the heart until God shall speak. They are waiting the electrifying work. They are waiting for the heaven there is in the look of his recognition and love. Until then they will never be perfectly well—never. O pity still lingering, still delaying, and still waited for! when will thy wave of refreshment and resurrection roll over us? When shall power reach its magnetic, immortalizing spark, to us trembling and lonely, and make the dry bones of our death spring together into the stature of a new-made man, after the faultless copy of Christ? Laugh who will, some of God's tried ones will never laugh aloud until Jesus comes, and then there will be merriment never dreamed of; laughter full and running over with joy; laughter better than the peal of trumpets, or roll of drums, or singing of birds, or music of orchestras, all mingled and blended into one.

TIME OF THE ADVENT.

There is a great inclination with some not only to search, but to declare the definite time of Jesus' personal return. And this declaration is often made with much positiveness and assurance. Is this a virtue, or is it an infirmity? Is it an excellence, or is it a fault? Amid all the repeated errors of conjecture or belief, it is clear enough that if the estimates and declarations are continued without interruption, there will be at some time a correct opinion, whether the expectation is from perfectly logical premises, or whether it is a kind of accident or coincidence. Now there is a charm in prophecy, and a charm in the expectation of the coming Christ to bring in everlasting righteousness and rest; but is it not hazardous to make positive pronunciations and predictions? Is it enough to say, we have heretofore been disappointed, and never inquire if harm is done by miscalculation? Let us seek not to do harm. Wherever the upright and sensitive man has a rational apprehension of having done the slightest injury, is he not profoundly grieved? Now it is undoubtedly true that the coming and kingdom of the Son may be earnestly, constantly and definitely looked for, and that it is very imminent. But I would not dare to say it will occur this year. It may occur within the year, or within a month. But can we not believe this, and believe it profoundly, and not enter into the hazard of positive affirmation? Is there no true, and high, and intense vigilance, without the picture of precise time before the mind? Is this the true rectitude of the pious mind, its best condition or most holy attitude, that it expects the advent absolutely at a certified time? What is the mental quality or condition that cannot find rest without venturing a prophecy of time?

I repeat, there is very powerful reason to believe the kingdom at hand. The great pyramid teaches this. The social, political, and religious condition of the world teaches it. The vast increase of knowledge teaches it. The public demoralization teaches it. Certain very peculiar features in the aspect and attitude of Romanism teach it. A kind of universal commotion heralds it. The hopelessness and vanity of all human wisdom assures it. Chronology lends its powerful aid. There is much to solemnize and intensify expectation in the state of the nations, in the solubility (so to speak) of society, in the multitude of sects, factions, societies, parties, and the simmering and movable condition of the millions, like the commotion in some salt liquified, prior to crystallization. And true enough the Lord Jesus may come immediately, as a thief, and no doubt will come very soon. There, we may italicise and emphasize that. We should be constantly looking, and looking out to be ready. From 1876 to 1882 is a wonderful, and wonderfully interesting and critical period, deeply interesting because it is a period radiant with promise to the waiting saint, and very precious and peculiar, like a golden cloud out of which the Messiah may any day come forth. Let us then be habitually watchful.

Apparently, very grave and great events are at hand, and many may be exceedingly surprised. But, at all events, let us seek to be prepared for them, and with deep sighing and the keenest lookout, let us await the intervention of almighty power, and the coming of a sorely needed deliverance.

Sardinia, N. Y.

IF the gospel be the field, Christ is the pearl hid in it; if the gospel be the ring, Christ is the diamond in the ring. Indeed, what would the gospel be without Christ? where would be its beauty, its power, its life? Truly it would cease to be the gospel; it would be no good tidings to perishing sinners.

ENVY inflicts the greatest misery on its votaries; their sadness is perpetual, their soul is grieved, their intellect is dimmed, and their heart disquieted.

ABUNDANT LIFE.

Jesus said, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." John 10: 10.

Human life makes up the stream of seeing, hearing, tasting, smelling, loving, enjoying, praising, adoring, hating, blaspheming, suffering and dying. The more of life we have, the larger the stream will be; the less of life we have, the smaller the stream will be until life shall end and the stream cease to flow; then seeing, hearing, loving and hating will end.

When the eye is dead there is no more seeing; when the ear is dead there is no more hearing; when the brain is dead there is no more thinking; when life is gone its results must cease.

The volume of human life is much larger than animal life, because the thought has a wider sphere of action, and love more numerous and exalted objects upon which it fastens.

Social life, which has but one object of affection and friendship, is diminutive, while that which has a multitude of loved ones in the social circle is abundant. Intellectual life, which has but one idea, is narrow and circumscribed, while that which rises high and reaches far in its comprehensive powers is broad and voluminous.

Human life is much less in volume than angelic life, because the bounds of its action are much more circumscribed, and these bounds are fixed by the degrees of its powers to act. Our thoughts can extend no further than our intellectual powers can send them. Our love can embrace no objects which our intelligence does not pronounce lovely.

Mortal, human life must be much less than immortal human life, because it is infinitely less in duration and also in degrees of power of action. Our mortal organs of sense, through which life produces its results, manifest their comparative weakness by becoming so soon impaired and dying; while the immortal ones exhibit their strength by acting with undiminished forces through the everlasting ages.

By breaking the divine law man fell from his original status in the gradation of God's creatures, losing his original volume of life, producing a degree of weakness of life forces which resulted in death. This weakness extended through every part and element of life—physical, intellectual and moral. His eye was dimmed and his intellect dwarfed, his heart was corrupted and his soul depraved. The broad stream of a glorious and happy life had suddenly diminished to a diminutive, muddy rivulet, leaching its impure waters through the sand of the curse.

But Christ, the Restorer of humanity, came from God to the earth for the sublimely glorious purpose of not only giving back to man life, after he had lost his life, by the ills of the curse, but to give to him the broad and eternal stream of "everlasting life" to be enjoyed amidst the beatitudes of the kingdom of God.

When the Savior of fallen humanity shall have brought his redeemed up from the depths of the pit into which sin had plunged them, having cancelled the account of transgressions and shaken off the dust of the tomb, he will exchange the weaknesses of mortal life for the God-like powers of an endless life. Then shall the human eye shine with the vigor of immortality, and its lenses be fixed to magnify the vision a thousand-fold, so that all the citizens of the "heavenly country" will be enabled to behold all the land northward, southward, eastward and westward, as did their father Abraham in prophetic vision. Then shall he be enabled to let in upon the optic chord, with sweet delight, the scintillations from the heavenly world, the peerless effulgence of Deity's throne, and the indescribable glories of the Maker of all worlds. Then shall we see as we are seen, so that the eye shall feast upon the beauty and glories of countless objects and beings at the same time. The ear also shall be electrified with the powers of angelic life, so that it shall catch every sound from Jehovah's lips, and gather all the tones of praise to God from unnumbered angels and saints, blending them into the rapturous melodies of heaven's sweetest anthem. Then shall the human intellect be touched by the finger of God, and the power of thought and understanding be magnified and enlarged, so that we "may know as we are known," breaking through the vail of mystery, comprehending all beings and things, dismissing all question of doubt, comprehending all causes and effects, fully understanding the divine will and purposes, discerning every principle and act of the plan and work of redemption. We shall need no introduction to or description of the saints in glory, for we shall have the power to know them at sight, because ignorance will be incompatible with the perfect knowledge promised to the perfect citizens of a perfect world.

Love is the mainspring of the social machine, producing happiness, and its volume is just equal to the life capacities of its possessor. It does not take as large a stream to move a small machine as a large one, or as much love to enjoy one object as two. Gospel happiness is produced by divine love, and the volume of that love is increased as the gospel knowledge of lovely things is increased. As God giveth his people a supply, and only a supply, of heavenly blessings, here, he gives just such degrees of his love as we have life capacities to use and enjoy, so that a growth in grace implies an enlargement of christian life powers, which are measured by the degrees of our knowledge of the things God has revealed to us. He will never give us power to understand a thing which he has not purposed that we should know, neither will he give us the love by which we enjoy a thing before he gives us a knowledge of it. Our christian happiness can never go beyond our christian knowledge. We cannot enjoy a friend before we know him, and our enjoyment of a friend cannot be full until we fully know him.

The intelligence of life is all that makes it valuable socially. Human life is not as valuable as vegetable life, dispossessed of intelligence at present and prospectively.

An earthly life with an earthly knowledge gives earthly advantages, and so a heavenly life (christian life) with heavenly knowledge (a knowledge of revealed things) gives heavenly advantages. We wickedly dwarf ourselves as to the power and volume of life when we indolently neglect the prayerful study of God's open volume of heavenly wisdom.

The believer enjoys in this world a much more abundant life than the unbeliever, for he has the privilege of possessing the same profitable knowledge of earthly things, and also a degree of understanding of a vastly superior world of which the unbeliever has no truly enjoyable understanding. Therefore the christian's volume and powers of life are much more abundant through Christ, in this world; for through faith his vision is greatly extended, seeing glorious things beyond the range of unanointed eyes, and hearing melodies which never charm unsanctified ears. His life is a life of faith, not bounded by the limits of a cursed and shattered world, but by the powers of a divine nature rises above the gloomy shadows of sin, and sweeps beyond the groans and graves of a fallen race.

The life of faith is a life enlarged by expectancy and not by possession. The eye gazes with inexpressible delight upon "a heavenly country," not yet trodden by the feet of the holy tribes. But when the life of faith and hope shall suddenly be disrobed of its garment of expectation, and by the command of the great Immanuel be robed with that of eternal possession, then will man's life manifest the mighty powers of its mighty Author, and unfold its wonderful capacities to know and enjoy. Then will all the wonderful powers of its divinely constructed and adjusted organism be sweetly and eternally developed. Then will the eye feast upon infinite and fadeless beauty. Then will the ear concentrate the melodies of the universe, and revel through the endless cycles in angelic song. There will the heart drink in the infinite sweetness of divine friendship and communion with God, his Christ, and all the holy angels and saints. Then will the whispering desire be hushed in everlasting silence.

That life will be supplied from the infinity of Jehovah. It will be measureless and endless, like its Author.

The richest gift of God to man—Christ—came from heaven to offer it to men. He is canvassing the world to get subscribers for the treasure. The limited time for the canvass is closing. He will come again from heaven to distribute the priceless treasure to all who signify their acceptance of it. O wisdom, wisdom, come and help us secure it! O blessed Jesus, who bought it for us with thine own tears and blood, come quickly, and give to thy weary, panting Bride the object of her prayers and songs—the more abundant life! Amen.

REMINISCENCES OF JUNE.

The inhabitants of June walk upon a greener carpet, inhale sweeter perfumes, hear more charming music, see more brightening prospects, and witness more glorious manifestations of renewed life, beyond death, than those of any lunar period. It exhibits the beauties and wonderful powers of resurrected vegetable life beyond the frigid, lifeless, fruitless state of nature's foreshadowing death. On June's second day we left the dust, confusing whirl, and ever sickening sights of human woes and wickedness of the city, to reach a higher life, a purer atmosphere, and more quiet surroundings among the beautiful mountains of our own Granite State.

The last days' chariots first carried us into the quiet village of Pittsfield, nestled among the green hills on the banks of the winding Suncook. Here we found a few of the tried and faithful friends of Jesus, who have long waited with upturned eyes and ceaseless longings to see the coming Bridegroom. The old camp fires, lighted long ago among those hills, have never ceased to send a gleam of light from the midst of the gathering gloom. May God preserve these faithful watchers blameless unto his heavenly kingdom.

We next went to Concord. This is one of the most pleasantly located and desirable inland cities for a residence that we are acquainted with on the continent. The glorious news of Christ's speedy coming was faithfully proclaimed there thirty-five years ago, and its echo has continued to sound through the beautiful valley of the Merrimac until the present time. Many in Concord have heard with joy the glad proclamation of speedy redemption for the saints, and have united with unmeasured desire for the consummation of christian hope. We enjoyed a precious season with the waiting flock worshiping at the Chapel on Centre St. May God bless all his servants at the capital of N. H., and fully prepare them for translation, when the Judge of quick and dead shall appear.

This was the place of our former residence, where life's varied scenes made indellible impressions upon our memory. Here passed over us the darkest shades of human sorrows, and here the gospel hope seemed most important and blessed. Here stands the sculptured stone, presenting in impressive silence the names of those we can never forget to love.

From Concord we threaded our way over the broad intervales of the beautiful Merrimac, sweeping over the ridge to the outflowing waters of the queen of lakes—Winnipesogee. We whirled like a tempest over the serpentine track on its rock-bound shore, and gazed upon the mirrored landscape reflected from its crystal waters.

From the charming lake the tireless iron horse, swifter than a deer and stronger than a lion, drew us like a shooting star, darting from vale to summit, running like the lightnings, roaring wildly amoung the clustering mountains, and landing us in the quiet village of Lisbon, Grafton Co., N. H.

It seems as if nature had strewn with a bountiful hand her most grand and beautiful pictures, for the eye to feast upon, on this desirable route to the Queen's dominions. On our arrival at L. we found Brn. C. B. Parker and I. H. Shipman, friends very dear to us, waiting to give us a christian greeting. Here we took teams for Sugar Hill, the Mount Zion of N. H. to us. We arrived safely, and once more entered the peaceful home of Bro. and Sister Parker, whom we found just as meek and unassuming as ever, but filled with that true spirit of gospel love and devotion which gives to humanity a nobility of character seen only in the family of christian royalty.

Again the beautifully varied landscape appeared before us. The hills and vales seemed dressed with nature's richest garments, covering the faded, tattered robes of the curse, which winter had wrapped around the ancient mountains. The fields and forests appeared just as full of life and beauty; the flocks and herds enjoyed the license of grazing on the sides of the grassy hills, and the feathered songsters were giving just as free and charming a concert as a year ago. The period spanning the blightings of fall and the howling dreariness of winter seemed to us as the period of death's dreamless sleep will to the resurrected saint,—without days or consciousness of events,—the life before meeting the life following.

When we gathered around the ever smoking altar of the faithful flock on Sugar Hill, we found Bro. N. Wheeler still standing at his post as a faithful sentinel, watching the omens of coming day, and the fearful signs of an approaching tempest. We found some seats vacant, for the occupants had lain down in the silent vale, to rest until the morning. The church seemed to be strong in the Lord and in the assurance of speedy deliverance at the coming of Jesus.

We enjoyed the privilege of spending three days with the N. H. Quarterly Conference at Whitefield. The meetings of worship were excellent, for the spirit of faithfulness and union with Christ and each other was manifested, among preachers and laymen, in all the services. The social meetings were spirited and encouraging, and conviction evidently rested upon unbelievers.

The church at W. appeared to be in a prosperous condition, under the pastoral care of Bro. T. E. Lang. It had received into its fellowship about forty members during the past year. The converts were strong in the faith of the gospel, earnest in christian work, and confident in their expectations of soon meeting the King Eternal, and receiving a welcome to the holy Paradise of infinite love.

We went from Sugar Hill in company with Bro. Wheeler to the Beebe Plain Campmeeting. We found a beautiful grove, well fitted by nature for a religious encampment. Its leafy awning is good, well elevated upon widely extended branches of stately maples; and it has a high and nicely graded dry surface. It lies directly on the line of a good Rail Road, branching to all parts of the country. The brethren have made a praiseworthy commencement in all the fixtures and improvements necessary for a campmeeting. About fifteen very properly built cottages have been erected, for the accommodation of as many families. The meetings while we were present (about four days) were very well attended by an orderly and attentive audience, and were characterized by a spirit of christian union, deep devotion and intelligent zeal. Many expressed an ardent desire to hear upon the signs of the times and the evidences of Christ's speedy coming. There was quite a large number of preachers present, both from the Provinces and States. We earnestly pray that all the sacrificing efforts made for this christian convocation may be sanctified to the perfecting of the saints and the salvation of sinners. Here ended our journeyings and labors in June, having traveled over seven hundred miles, and preached fifteen times.

A few more months, and we believe the end of christian toils will come; a few more sermons, and the last kind offer of salvation will be given to the perishing. Who can estimate the importance of these last days of gospel work,—the last opportunities of warning the world, and leading the Bride of Christ to make full preparation for the marriage of the Lamb? O that light from heaven may shine upon the church, and cause her to see clearly her position, her appointed work, and the magnitude and results of impending events.

BEEBE PLAIN CAMPMEETING.

It was our privilege to be at the Beebe Plain campmeeting from Wednesday evening, June 28th, to its close July 3d. The camp ground is in Canada, near the Vermont line. It is very pleasantly located, well shaded, and within a few rods of the platform on the Passumpsic R. R. All were delighted with the grounds. This was the first meeting at this place. We were surprised to find so large a gathering. The campmeeting committee have taken hold of the work in earnest, determined to do all in their power to secure success. They have erected a boarding house, and a convenient preachers' stand, several plain cottages, and put up seats with backs, also pumps bringing forth an abundance of water.

Some thirty preachers were present, from the States and the Canadian Dominion. A lively interest was manifested in the social meetings. There were converts and baptisms, and others made a full consecration to Christ, and were richly blest. The interest continued to increase daily till the close of the meeting, when the audiences were large and attentive. The people in the neighborhood seemed pleased with the character and results of the meeting. Excellent order prevailed. We heard no profanity, and saw no drunkenness. We think there will be much good fruit from this meeting. It is purposed to hold a meeting there every year till Jesus comes.

The glorious truths, for the belief of which we have received much reproach in time past, are now spreading in all directions, and receiving a hearty welcome by many of those who truly love Jesus. Prejudice is giving way as dew before the sun, and doors long closed are now opening, cordial welcome is extended to those who are preaching the near coming of our Savior. The belief is becoming wide-spread that we have truly come to "the last days" of the present dispensation. We are convinced that there has been no time during the past twenty-five years, when the great truths of the Bible, that we love so well, have been spreading so rapidly as at the present time. Let us thank the Lord, and take courage. Let all sectarian bitterness be laid aside, and in love let us mingle with all the friends of Jesus, and tell them of his coming.

THE TURKISH WAR.

War between the Mohammedans and Christians is now begun in earnest, and one or the other must be conquered. England, Austria and Germany think it is not best to interfere at present, but Russia is rendering aid to the Christians, and seems determined to employ her whole strength, if needed, to put down Turkey. We believe that a war on a grand scale is about to open, that will convulse the whole of Europe, and perhaps the world. Great interests are involved. Other wars during the last sixty years may be considered as only skirmishes, when compared with what is now at hand.

"The Eastern Question" has been of great importance for many years. It has frequently been agitated for a short season, but the great powers of Europe have shrunk back from any definite action, knowing if it ever came up as a bone of contention to be settled on the battle-field, that there must be terrible fighting before the question could be answered,—What shall be done with Turkey? Shall it be allowed to hold its possessions in Europe? Shall it continue to control Jerusalem and Palestine? We believe the time has come to decide this important matter. If so, the period we are now entering is one of thrilling interest to the inhabitants of this planet. A correspondent of the New York Tribune, writing from Constantinople, says: "The last days of Turkey will be marked by such scenes of bloodshed as the modern world has never seen."

There is a class of Turks called Bashi-Bazouks, which are irregular troops, some like the savage Indians in the western wilds. These have been aroused to commence a bloody work in slaughtering the Christians in Bulgarian villages where no rebel has ever been seen; and where the inhabitants are unarmed and unoffending. The Tribune correspondent says:

"A careful estimate shows that they have already destroyed about one hundred towns and massacred in cold blood, with the most horrible atrocity, about forty thousand helpless men, women, and children. The plunder of the towns they have appropriated, and the Christian girls, between twelve and twenty years of age, they have carried off as slaves and compelled them to become Moslems. . . .

A Polish gentleman arrived here from Bulgaria yesterday, who was himself in the Polish insurrection, but has long been in the service of the Turkish Government. He says that all the barbarities of Russia in Poland were nothing in comparison with what he has seen with his own eyes this month [June]. His own Turkish guard cut down every man, woman and child they met on the road, in spite of all he could do. If the Turks would content themselves with simply killing their victims, it would be something; but this is not all; they inflict the most horrible tortures upon these poor defenceless people—burn them alive, cut them in pieces, mutilate them in every way possible."

It is high time for those who wish for salvation, to see that they are ready to meet Jesus.

M. G.

"HARD TIMES."

The cry of "Hard Times" is becoming quite general throughout the civilized world. There is no "silver lining" yet to the dark cloud that hangs over the mechanical, commercial, and financial interests. The people have hoped in vain for better times, but they continue to grow "worse and worse." No one can tell when the sunshine of prosperity will again gladden the hearts of the people. We may have reached the point where the "distress of nations" is beginning to be felt; if so, heavier waves are yet to follow. A short period will enable us to decide. Let us watch and be sober, and occupy faithfully till Jesus shall appear.

The New York Witness says: "There are at least one million persons out of work in this city, of whom probably thirty thousand are young men, who used to make a respectable living, but who now can get nothing to do." The future looks dark What are these thousands of poor going to do? It is a hard problem to solve. To such the world must look dark and dreary; especially if they have no hope in Christ, which, no doubt, is the case with most of them. It is no wonder there are so many suicides. Would that Jesus might come to end this painful state of things. We cannot expect any permanent improvement till he shall appear. We may well pray, "Let thy kingdom come."

M. G.

CATHOLICISM PREVAILING.

The people of the United States will soon find they have a strong foe in their midst. The entire system of Catholicism is opposed to a republican government, that will not bow to the Pope. While the Catholics have lost their civil power in Rome and in Europe, they are laying plans to take possession of this country. They are "prevailing" rapidly, as may be seen by the following from the Catholic World.

"THE CATHOLIC CHURCH IN THE UNITED STATES.—The 15th of next August eighty-six years will have passed since the consecration of Bishop Carroll, and to this period the organized efforts of the church to secure a position in this country are confined. The work then begun has not for a moment been intermitted. In the midst of losses, defeats, persecutions, anxieties, doubts, revilings, calumnies, the struggle has been still carried on. . . . With the more thorough organization of dioceses and congregations parochial schools became practicable, and the great progress made in Catholic elementary education is one of the most significant and reassuring facts connected with the history of the church in the United States.

One hundred years ago there was not a Catholic ecclesiastical student, or theological seminary, or college, or academy, or parochial school, or asylum, or hospital from Maine to Georgia.

Father Badin, the first person who ever received Holy Orders in the United States, was ordained in the old cathedral of Baltimore on the 25th of May, 1793, just eighty-three years ago. It is now eighty-six years since Bishop Carroll was consecrated, and down to 1808 he remained the only Catholic bishop in the American Church, whose hierarchy is composed at present of one cardinal, ten arch-bishops, forty-six bishops, and eight vicars apostolic."

Could the Catholics accomplish their purpose, this would be the last 4th of July the American people would ever celebrate. A new order of things would be introduced at once. Faggot fires for heretics would again be kindled, the Inquisition opened, and the Pope sit as supreme dictator to crush all opposition to his authority. There is no change in Papacy. Its permancy rests in its infallibility. At heart, it is no more tolerant now towards those whom it calls "heretics," than it was in the days of Martin Luther. It is quiet at present because of necessity. It lacks political power; hence dares not persecute, and cause the flow of martyr blood. We believe a struggle is coming that will shake the world; but the Lord will be the hope of his people. Great events are at our doors. "Blessed is he that watcheth." Rev. 16: 15.

THE TRACT FUND.

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN PUBLICATION SOCIETY, at a meeting on Springfield camp-ground, August 11th, 1875, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. LETTER FROM KANSAS.

Dear Editors, and all who look for and love the appearing of our blessed Savior, who will come quickly and bring his reward with him. Reading the blessed letters in the Crisis, and profiting thereby, is what has prompted me to send you a few lines and let you know what we are doing in this corner of the world.

A church was organized at Salem, Jewell Co., Kan., on the 26th of Feb., with twelve members, when three were elected Elders; Sr. Ellen B. Newcomb, Clerk; Sr. Augusta J. Wright, Deaconess. One has joined since, and several more stand ready to go forward in the ordinances the first opportunity. We do not have the Word presented to us as often as we would like, but we are all firm, and are looking for Christ to come, "without sin, unto salvation." We have strong opposition, but the more persecution the more faith. There is a work here to be done, and if some good brother could come and labor here a few weeks, with a chart, it would be the means of starting a goodly number for the kingdom. There is quite a number almost persuaded to become christians. They want a little more light, and we are too weak to give them the light they need. They have had exhortation upon exhortation, but they need light to know the Scriptures and the prophecies, and their fulfillment, which cannot be done without a chart and some good lectures on the same.

We are also destitute of tracts and papers. We are all poor yet in this world's goods. We have not recovered our locust devastation, but we are having a good prospect now of a harvest, and times may be better.

I hope all who love Christ will pray for us, that we may be found worthy in that day to receive a crown of righteousness. Yours in the faith till Christ comes,

THOS. R. COMSTOCK.

THE MEETING

At West Parsonsfield, Me., on the Fourth of July, was a season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord; and, as we listened to the earnest exhortations of the dear people of God assembled at the Chapel there, from Bonny Eagle, Porter, Freedom, Parsonsfield, and other places, and to the highly edifying discourses from our brethren, who are apt teachers of the Word, we felt that we were in the house of the Lord, and in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, celebrating not merely the centennial of our national liberty, but the higher blessing of those in the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free.

Our preaching brethren were well represented, Brn. Jesse Gay, Wm. H. Mitchell, Chas. H. Sweet, Mark Stevens and A. Stillings being in attendance at the meeting. In the morning a social meeting was had, followed by a discourse from Bro. Gay, relative to the saints' home in the world to come. In the afternoon Bro. Mitchell gave us the calling, qualification, etc., essential to the work of the ministry. After the afternoon services, Bro. D. W. Stevens, of West Parsonsfield, was set apart in gospel order to the work of the christian ministry. The ordination services were very solemn and impressive.

ROMAN CATHOLICISM IN THE UNITED STATES.

The following, clipped from the Catholic World, shows how rapidly the Catholics are increasing in this country in numbers, churches, institutions, and wealth generally.

"Eighty-six years ago, next August, the first Roman Catholic Bishop in the United States was consecrated. There are now in the parochial schools about half a million scholars, being not one half of the Catholic school population of the country. The work of building schools is still going on, with a steady growth among priests and people of the conviction that religious education is an indispensable necessity, and with the hope that the time is not very far distant when in this country Catholic children will be brought up only in Catholic schools. In 1800 there were supposed to be forty priests in this country; in 1848, 890; in 1872, 4809; in 1875, 5074 priests, 1273 ecclesiastical students, 6528 churches and chapels, in the United States. There were also, at the same time, thirty-three theological seminaries, sixty-three colleges, 557 academies and select schools, 1645 parochial schools, 214 asylums, and ninety-six hospitals under the authorship and control of the Catholic hierarchy of this country. There are now more than three hundred and fifty convents for women, and probably one hundred and thirty for men. The increase of the wealth of the church in this country is also a subject for gratulation with the World. In 1850, it was nine and one-quarter millions; in 1860, nearly twenty-seven millions; in 1870, about sixty-one millions; and the World estimates that to-day the Catholic church holds the first rank as to wealth of all the ecclesiastical organizations."

The Roman harlot may boast for the time being, but soon she will wail, for "the hour of her judgment" is now nigh at hand.

THE BREAKING UP OF POLITICAL PARTIES.

THOS. FITZSIMONS.

One of the most remarkable events of the times is the breaking up of the old political parties in the United States. There seems no harmonious concentration of sentiment upon any platform; and disorganization and confusion has gone on so rapidly among them the past five years, that we witness nothing but schism, disintegration, and confusion. Arising from the ruins we have also a whole host of radical parties springing up, under the names of Independent, National, Labor, Inflation, and minor elements by the score. The political outlook in this new and chaotic state of affairs baffles, as they admit, our oldest politicians, who say that never before have they witnessed such an entire disintegration in politics in the United States, and that they can make no possible calculations for the future.

Is not this singular state of affairs, that is eliciting the comment of one half the newspapers of the land to-day, the preparation for anarchial confusion?—the way for the development of some great, new political party, that will bring in and organize all the dissatisfied elements for one mutual radical purpose? We think it is. The time seems ripe for this new political development, and we look upon the present remarkable aspect of the country as the preparatory condition for this development.

Phila., Pa.

IT is not so much the length as the strength of prayer that is required; not so much the labor of the lip as the travail of the heart.

From Bro. W. S. McFarland.

Dear Editors:—As I made a request for a Prophetic Chart through the Crisis some time ago, it is but due that I should acknowledge through the same medium the receipt of one from Bro. J. Weston, Brunswick, Ga.; and to all lovers of Jesus I would say, Pray for me, that I may make efficient use of the means in my hands. Besides, I wish thus to acknowledge and confess that as I have trusted I have been helped by power divine in times past, I desire prayers because I am entirely alone in the faith in this section, also because I have an open door for labor, the field so large, and the Lord of the harvest so soon coming to gather the wheat into the garner, and burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire.

Independence, Kan.

Bro. P. W. Hough writes:—"Our campmeeting is progressing very favorably; congregations good, preaching sound and spirited; peace prevails, and love abounds. One has made the good confession, and we hope for more. News from the East burdens our hearts with sorrow for the foolish perishing ones, but yet gladdens our hearts and quickens us in devotion and labor. The Lord will come quickly. 'Even so, come, Lord Jesus.' Amen."

Obituaries.

Barrett. In Chester, Vt., May 20th, 1876, of quick consumption, Bro. Daniel K. Barrett, aged twenty-four years, and three months.

Bro. Barrett, formerly a member of the Congregational church, embraced the Advent doctrine and was baptized by Bro. H. F. Carpenter in North Springfield. He was a man of retiring disposition naturally, but an honest-hearted christian man, and his growth in Christ was visible to all. His daily walk and conversation told that he had been with Christ and learned of him. He had believed for some time that it was his duty to preach the gospel, and with this end in view he prayerfully studied the word of God until he believed that full consecration and sanctification became a child of God and alone fitted him to do his Master's bidding. This he claimed as his blessed privilege, and was not ashamed to declare what God had done for him. His walk and talk was such as became a child of God and a teacher of the word. He desired to live that he might work for God, yet the language of his heart was, "Not my will, but thine be done." But the last great enemy marked him as his victim, and we have laid him in the cold grave; and whilst kindred hearts are bleeding, he is sleeping, awaiting the resurrection morning, when the graves will be opened and the dead arise; when the sons of God will sing with the morning, and with the apostle exclaim, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" "The night is far spent, the day is at hand." Already the morning light is breaking, and the loved ones in Christ will soon meet to part no more forever. May the sorrowing ones be comforted by the promises of God. "For he doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men."

Eldridge. May 6th, 1876, Marietta, eldest daughter of Bro. and Sr. J. S. Eldridge of West Gloucester, R I., in the 15th year of her age.

Also, May 15th, 1876, Erminie D., daughter of the same, in the 8th year of her age.

Sweetly she is resting in hope.

The former, Etta as she was familiarly called, gave her heart to God at the R. I. campmeeting last September. It is really heart-cheering to note among the too many superficial conversions professed among the youthful at our large religious gatherings, the unmistakable genuineness of hers, which was shown in the untiring earnestness with which she sought to persuade others to receive and enjoy the same sweet peace that filled her own heart. On the night of her death, and but a short time before it occurred, she looked with a serene smile in the face of her attendant and said, "If you see anything of Jesus, tell him it is all right with me!" May God sanctify this double bereavement to the good of all.

A. Durfee.

Spurr. At Smith's Cove, Digby Co., Nova Scotia, Aug. 28th, 1875, Jessie H., second daughter of Abraham and Annabelle Spurr, aged eight years.

Jessie was a lovely child. She often talked about Jesus, and sang praises to his dear name. Her funeral sermon was preached by Bro. J. M. Tozier, from Jer. 31: 15, 16, to a large concourse of people, who gathered to attend the funeral.

FOREIGN NEWS.

THE SERVIAN WAR.

Constantinople, July 5. The following despatch, dated July 3, has been sent to the Turkish representatives abroad:

The Servians attacked the camp at Urkurt, a town southwest of Nissa. After five hours' hard fighting, the Servians retreated, leaving five hundred dead on the field. Near Belina the Turks were victorious in several encounters, killing two hundred and wounding four hundred of the enemy.

Cologne, July 5. A despatch to the Gazette says the insurrection has broken out between Nitsch and Sofoa, in the Turkish army.

Paris, July 5. A correspondent of the Universelle states that the Khedive has furnished the Porte 12,000 men.

London, July 5. The Times' dispatch, dated Ragusa July 6, says that the Montenegrin army is marching in several columns, unopposed, toward Mostar, and has already reached Nerengue.

The Christian Albanians have refused an offer from the Turks at Scutari of 15,000 muskets with which to fight the Montenegrins.

Gen Olympics is still before Belina. He surrounded and cut to pieces two thousand Turkish regulars, a few only escaping by night. All the attempts of the Turkish army to cross the frontier have been victoriously repulsed.

A Berlin dispatch to the Times announces that the Prince of Montenegro has issued a proclamation to the Herzegovinians offering to liberate the Christians and protect the Mohammedans if they surrender peacefully.

July 8. The Standard's dispatch from Belgrade dated July 6 says 130 wounded Servians of the Army of Drina arrived there, and report that during the fighting at Belina the garrison of the Turkish guard-house and inhabitants defended themselves to the utmost against the Servians. In the streets of the town a terrible massacre ensued, in which almost all the inhabitants perished.

An American general and three Prussian officers have entered the Servian army. Five thousand militiamen left Belgrade for Alexinatz.

The Bosnian Catholics intend to appeal to Austria to protect their interests against the Servians.

A letter from the Constantinople correspondent of the News repeats, and quotes evidence in support of his previous assertions in regard to the atrocities in Bulgaria. He gives as an instance one case in which forty women of the village of Tonoselo were burned alive, and cites a consular report, placing the number of murders committed by the Turks at 12,000, while some estimates run as high as 25,000.

Belgrade, July 7. The insurrection in Bulgaria is reported to have become general.

Servian troops have captured Saguera on the Drina. Other Turkish reverses are reported.

Constantinople, July 7. The Porte has sent its representatives abroad the following: "Mouktar Pasha telegraphs the details of the last engagement at Belina. The enemy's losses exceed the first estimate. Two hundred of their killed were left in the village of Belina, and seven hundred in the neighborhood. Among the dead are their commander and several officers. A large Turkish force is now concentrated at Belina."

London, July 9. Mehemet Ali Pasha has won a big victory over the Servian Gen. Zach, near Novi-Bazar, in Bosnia, the Servians losing 1500 killed and as many more wounded, and being driven from the field.

July 10. A dispatch from Belgrade, summing up the operations of the last eight days, says the Servians fought ten actions and lost five thousand men. During the attack of Gen. Olympics on Belina the Turks massacred all the Christian inhabitants.

The Bulgarian insurrection is reported to be spreading widely.

Four thousand men left Belgrade for the frontier on Saturday, and all the heavy guns at the disposal of the Government have been transported to the frontier. Several batteries of torpedoes are to be placed in the Danube, as the Turkish fleet has already passed the iron gates.

The Servian wounded report terrible details about the fighting at Belina. The Turkish women fired from the windows with revolvers on the Servian troops.

A decisive battle is expected in the neighborhood of Nissa between Tchernayeff, who commands the main Servian army, and Osman Pacha, who is at the head of the principal Turkish force. This will probably decide the nature of the future conflict. If defeated the Servians will probably naugurate a guerrilla warfare.

Amsterdam, July 5. Advices have been received here of the loss of the Dutch steamer Gen. Kroesen in the Straits of Sunda in the Indian Ocean. Two hundred and thirty persons were drowned.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Fight with the Indians.

GEN. CUSTER'S ENTIRE COMMAND SLAUGHTERED.

Bosman, Montana, July 3. Mr. Taylor, bearer of despatches from Little Horn to Fort Ellis, arrived this evening, and reports the following: The battle was fought on the 25th ult., thirty or forty miles below the Little Horn. Gen. Custer attacked the Indian village of from 2500 to 4000 warriors on one side, and Col. Reno was to attack on the other side. Three companies were placed on a hill as a reserve. Gen. Custer and fifteen officers, and every man belonging to the five companies, were killed. Col. Reno retreated under protection of the reserve. The whole number killed was 315. When Gen. Gibbon joined Reno the Indians left. The battle-ground looked like a slaughter pen, as it really was, being in a narrow ravine. The dead were much mutilated. The situation now looks serious. Gen. Terry arrived at Gibbon's camp on a steamboat and crossed the command over and accompanied it to join Gen. Custer, who knew it was coming before the fight occurred. Lieut. Crittenden, son of Gen. Crittenden, was among the killed.

New York, July 8. A Chicago special states that dispatches via Fort Ellis are expected from Gen. Terry and also from Gen. Crooke. Four companies at Detroit and on the lakes were last night ordered to the front immediately. Orders were also sent to the Fifth Cavalry to concentrate at Red Cloud and Spotted Tail Agencies.

Dispatches from the frontier and the plains show a desperate feeling of indignation against the Indians.

Considerable anxiety is manifested at General Sheridan's headquarters concerning Crook's command. Nothing whatever has been heard from him since the engagement on Rosebud, and it is not known whether he has encountered the savages again or not. It is thought that he again met the savages, or he would have co-operated with Terry before this.

TERRIBLE TORNADO.

Davenport, Iowa, July 5. A terrific storm prevailed over the northern portion of this State last night, on the line of the Illinois Central and Davenport and the St. Paul and Midland railroads. Bridges and embankments on the Illinois Central were washed out, and there are no trains on either to-day. The village of Rockdale was washed out last night and forty two persons were drowned. Rockdale is six miles west of Dubuque. The track between Julif and Dubuque is washed out. It will take two weeks to repair.

Burlington, Iowa, July 5. Last night a terrible tornado passed through South Burlington. Mr. and Mrs. Stockwell were killed instantly while lying in their bed. Mr. Dyke, whose home was in Minnesota, was visiting Mr. R. T. Root on Summer street, was instantly killed, and his body was found in the wreck of the dwelling, which was levelled to the ground. Numerous others were more or less injured, but none seriously. Twenty-nine buildings were riddled to pieces.

Des Moines, July 7. Late advices show that some twenty-five persons were killed by Tuesday's storm in Warren county alone, and that six or eight were killed in Madison county. There were probably one hundred and fifty houses destroyed and as many more badly injured. The destruction of crops, fences and animals was immense. The names of persons killed and wounded cannot be obtained. They were mostly wives and children of farmers. Some reports place the number of killed in Warren county alone as high as 40. A train on the Des Moines and Indianola Railroad, which left here last night, is water bound between North and Middle rivers.

Tremont Campmeeting.

The annual campmeeting at Tremont, Mass., will commence Monday, July 31st, and continue to Aug. 8th. Arrangements will be made as formerly for board and lodging. All who can bring tents are requested to do so. Dear brethren, as we may be permitted to have one more gathering on this consecrated ground before the Lord comes, let us avail ourselves of this opportunity to do all we can to arouse the church, and save the lost. We intend to secure good laborers to help in this blessed work to give the last notes of warning to a lost world; for the omens which are now looming up in Europe strongly indicate that our work will soon be closed up for this world.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE Second Advent Christian Association.

The annual meeting of this Association will be held in Chelsea, Mass., on Wednesday, Aug. 23rd, commencing at two o'clock P. M. Besides the regular business usually transacted at the annual meeting, action will be taken looking toward the still further amending of the Constitution.

It is hoped that there may be a full attendance of delegates, and it is suggested, if any conferences entitled to representation in this Association have as yet failed to appoint their delegates, that they will appoint them in due season for this meeting, which will be one of great importance.

By order of the Board of Directors,

TENT MEETING.

The Mass. Mission Tent will be pitched in Plymouth, Mass., on Tuesday, July 11th, to remain two weeks or longer as the Lord may direct.

We pitch the Tent in this ancient town in the name of Israel's God, trusting that he will give victory, and that souls may be saved as the result of this meeting. We most earnestly invite our dear brethren and sisters in the adjoining towns to unite with the church in Plymouth and us in this effort to save the perishing. The time is short in which to work with Christ here. What we do for each other and the world must be done soon. If we are to double our diligence before the Lord comes, that our calling and election may be sure, must we not begin soon? yea, should we not begin at once, laboring more earnestly for the lost among us and on every hand?

Any wishing to come and remain during the meeting will find good accommodations under the Tent. Bring food and bed clothing, and all the rest will be furnished free. Come to the feast and to work for Christ.

For the Com., I. I. Leslie.

IMMORTALITY.—1 COR. 15 : 50.

G. W. STETSON.

When tropic fruits in frigid climes shall grow,
And hyacinths with lillies bloom 'mid ice and snow;
When grapes and figs the thorn and thistle bear,
And health with bloom shall come from noxious air;
When love and peace from envious hate shall spring,
And devils damned in hell angelic praise shall sing;
Then souls immortal can God, the holy, wise and just,
Create, to bring in evil endless from the dust.

When calm and sunshine are on the tempest borne,
And sin with shame true virtue can adorn;
When light and darkness do together dwell,
And Satan's vilest lie the truth shall tell;
When endless death eternal life shall be,
And mortal life no woe nor death shall see;
Then souls immortal from mortal seed shall grow,
And fruit, in endless life, the trees of death shall show.

But Jesus said, "that only flesh can flesh beget,"
That "for the Spirit birth, the Spirit must be set";
But human souls of flesh and blood are born,
And of incorruption this corruptible is shorn.
How then, of fleshly birth are spirit natures given,
And how forever live these fleshly souls in heaven?
O how can souls immortal in mortal mold be cast,
Or mortal souls forever burn, and still forever last?

O, shame! shame the man who thus our Lord belies;
O shame! shame the tongue that thus our God defies;
O, shame! shame the creed that thus the word denies;
O, shame! shame the faith that bulids on Satan's lies,
And says that sinful man shall ne'er expire,
But live in misery forever, 'mid flaming fire;
When God hath said, "the sinning soul shall die,"
"Both soul and body he'll destroy." HE CANNOT LIE!

Edinboro, Pa.

GIFT OF THE SPIRIT.

(Concluded.)

The following interesting experience of Bro. J. F. Joy, will be read with pleasure by those who love Jesus. After having a common christian experience some eight years, he decided to make a full consecration to Christ, and writes as follows:— M. G.

Faith is the "substance" and "evidence"; "Jesus the author and finisher of faith." The exercise of faith is not like grasping some proposition, which only giant intellects are capable of, but the trust the helpless child enjoys. Eternal life is not native to us, nor grown in us, but the gift of God. "And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life; and this life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life." . . .

Sin and sinning are two things. "If we say we have no sin," means sinful nature or native depravity. Sinning is an act or intent of heart. E. g., calling "tare seed" sins in a garden, then sinning would be those seeds springing up into weeds. If every sprout could be nipped, the garden would be free from weeds, though as capable of bearing weeds as ever. So we need the cleansing blood every moment, or Adam in some form would crop out. "Whosoever abideth in him sinneth not." But is not sanctification a state of sinless perfection freed from the possibility of sinning? No, only as a mother cannot kill her child, she so hates the thought. Dead to the world don't imply the death of the world; nor dead to self the extinction of depravity, no more than one saved from sinking by a life-belt is freed from gravitation. When dead to sin, we live no longer therein; "sin shall not have dominion over you." Evil is overcome just as gravitation is overcome, and loses its power so long as the life-belt is trusted. But separated from the life-belt and we are again overcome, so if separated from Christ.

SIGHT AND LIGHT. Man by nature is blind. More light is not needed, but eyes to see what glories shine in Christ. Some see dimly, others more. Elisha saw chariots and horses of fire. Stephen saw heaven open. By-and-by the saints will see the glory of Christ with the Father. All existed and now exists. We need to come to the light—need eye-salve to heal us; then we can behold heavenly glories enveloping us. I see not my assurance in feelings, or prayers, or labors, or experiences; but I see, I do see it in Christ the Anointed, in the blood of the new covenant. Amid tempests, above and beneath every billow, I see the immutability of God's counsel—his word of promise, and his oath to give me "strong consolation." He keeps us as the apple of his eye. The divine presence envelops us, so that no disease, pestilence, accident or slander, naught in air, earth or society reaches us but by Father's permit, and when arrived to us is Father's will toward us. Christ was God's representative Son on earth. And in his flight to Egypt, stay in Nazareth, subject to parents, temptation in the wilderness, each reviling, the betrayal, the thorns, the cross, all was no less his Father's will, nor was his love and care less than when on the mount of transfiguration, in preaching, in the resurrection or ascension, and we know Father's care and love is the same to each child for Christ's sake, because Christ said in prayer "and hast loved them as thou hast loved me." If we cannot believe what God says on the authority of his word alone, neither could we be persuaded though one arose from the dead. Oh, that men did tremble at God's word. . . . Power from on high is the secret of the men of God. At the Red Sea, Jordan, Jericho, with Luther and all evangelists to-day the power was and is from above. The Holy Ghost is the promised power. Theory alone is as powerless as a cold engine. But "He the Holy Ghost" is power that can be felt, so one realizes another influence possesses, controls and speaks; "for it is not ye that speak, but the Holy Ghost." Human eloquence, or Bible truth, uttered in glowing rhetoric, is but sounding brass if destitute of the Spirit. The lack of the ministry, churches and papers is in practically dishonoring the Holy Ghost. Rhetoric, nor schools, nor cities give divine power, but the Holy Ghost does. Nor is it sufficient that our spirit be subdued and meek; we want not another as near like Christ's as possible, but the same Spirit, the identical Spirit, the Spirit of God. It was without measure to Christ, but in measure to us; and there are diversities of operation but the same Spirit; and prevailing prayer is the Spirit in us crying back to God for those things which please him, "because he maketh intercession for the saints according to the will of God." Prayer, offered by the Spirit, in the name of Christ, through faith, bears all the authority of Christ and is backed by Jehovah. Faith is the only limitation. How plain, then, "According to your faith be it unto you." God will give all that faith can bear or conduct to us. "Lord, increase our faith." God will not bestow power for aught but his glory.

Does not every christian have the spirit of Christ? Yes, but the enduement of power, the baptism of the Holy Ghost, as far surpasses the common experience as wind surpasses air when calm. When Zion travails she will bring forth, but the Spirit is the travail pain or power, and we but the instruments submitting to God who worketh in us mightily. The holy men of to-day speak and pray as they are moved by the Holy Ghost. Christ said, "No man can come unto me except the Father who sent me draw him." Then, believing this, petition in the name of Christ for the Father to save a child and roll, or transfer, the matter all over on God, and the covenant-keeping God will perform it. And so of all things according to his will. The enduement of power is his will, for it is the promise of the Father. As "no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost." Intellect may repeat chapters, but the heart can utter it only by the Spirit, for "the things of the Spirit of God" are "spiritually discerned." There is a vast difference between head and heart religion. We need theology in the heart. Sanctified in heart. Holiness of heart. Meekness and purity of heart, and the law written on the table of our hearts by the Spirit of God. It is wicked to think to love Christ just a little better than we do the world. "Love not the world, neither the things in the world; if any man loveth the world, the love of the Father is not in him." "Their righteousness is of me, saith the Lord." "I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich; and white raiment that thou mayest be clothed." God so loved the world he gave his Son, for aught else could not have manifested his love. So the love of Christ constrains us and works manifest the degree of constraint, and where no works are there is no constraint, no love, and hence no Christ. "Now unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us, unto him be glory in the church by Christ Jesus throughout all ages, world without end. Amen."

THE COMING KINGDOM.

I must also tell the prophetic vision. As a "steward of the mysteries of God" I speak, accountable to him alone as steward over that committed unto me, to give meat in due season, bringing out of the treasure things new and old. The week I was born of the Spirit, when the power of the Highest was upon me mightily, all in one night, there flashed across the soul a vision of the coming kingdom of Christ, filling my heart with wonder and satisfaction. The great and glorious truths concerning the millennium, and Christ's second advent, which had been a deep study and perplexity for years, was all adjusted harmoniously in that one night. The Holy Ghost can teach the heart in one hour what human wisdom never can. It was this. There shall be a millennial reign on this earth, when the glory of God shall cover the earth as the waters do the deep. The Jews shall be converted and restored to their own land. But this millennial day is also the last day, the great day, the harvest day, the day of judgment, ushered in by Christ's coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. And when he comes the righteous dead, and only those shall be raised; and the righteous living, and only those sealed of God and sanctified through the Spirit, shall be quickened in a moment. And the twelve apostles shall sit upon thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel, and all these shall live and reign with Christ a thousand years. But the wicked shall not be raised till the close of the thousand years. Also this earth shall be renewed, and be the home of the saints. All created new; a new heaven and a new earth.

When this was clearly shown and written on my heart, I wondered, and said, Can it be true? Then the voice in the soul was, To the law and the prophets, O man, for the Spirit and the word agree. I arose by night and turned to the Scriptures of divine truth, and clearly read the same. John, the revelator, Rev. 20, said he saw "the souls of them that were beheaded . . . and [them] which had not worshiped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark . . . and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. This is the first resurrection. But the rest of the dead lived not again till the thousand years were finished." The phrase, "the rest of the dead," necessitates a like kind of dead or death. And we only need read the kind of resurrection at the close of the thousand years, to know what kind the first was. And when we read, "the sea gave up the dead which were in it," we know the first to be a bodily resurrection. With this agrees Paul to the Corinthians, 1 Cor. 15. "Christ the first fruits; afterward they [and only they] that are Christ's at his coming. Then cometh the end [when?] when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; [when?] when he shall have put down all rule, and all authority and power. [At the end of the millennium]. For he must reign, till he hath put all enemies under his feet." Christ said, "in the end [last day, harvest day] of this world; the Son of man shall send forth his angels, and shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity; . . . [when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father, at the end of the millennial reign] shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. Who hath ears to hear, let him hear." And 1 Thess. 4 : 16, "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first." Why designate the dead in Christ, if all the dead are raised at Christ's appearing? And why did Paul say, "if by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead;" unless he had in view the first resurrection on whom the second death hath no power?"

THE TWO SYSTEMS.

Reader, there are two distinct and separate systems of Christianity at the present day. It is useless to deny it. Their existence is a great fact, and one that cannot be too clearly known.

According to one system, religion is a mere corporate business. You are to belong to a certain body of people. By virtue of your membership of this body, vast privileges, both for time and eternity, are conferred upon you. It matters little what you are, and what you feel. You are not to try yourself by your feelings. You are a member of a great ecclesiastical corporation. Then all its privileges and immunities are your own. Do you belong to the one true visible ecclesiastical corporation? That is the grand question.

According to the other system, religion is eminently a personal business between yourself and Christ. It will not save your soul to be a member of any ecclesiastical body whatever, however sound that body may be. Such membership will not wash away one sin, or give you confidence in the day of judgment. There must be personal faith in Christ, personal dealings between yourself and God, personal felt communion between your own heart and the Holy Ghost. Have you this personal faith? Have you this felt work of the Spirit in your soul? If not, you will be lost.—Ex.

ANCIENT AND MODERN MORMONISM.

WM. SHELDON.

The hero of the Book of Mormon was Nephi, the son of Lehi, who was warned out of Jerusalem, and journeyed into the wilderness with his family. The hero of this narrative—Nephi—is sent back to obtain records, or brass plates, from Laban in Jerusalem. Laban refuses to deliver them to Nephi. Finally, Nephi murders the old gentleman, steals his golden-hilted sword, steals a suit of clothes from his dead body, steals the brass plates, and kidnaps his servant Zoram; and after this murderous, thieving and kidnapping exploit, he triumphantly returns to his father Lehi in the wilderness. Here were now five wifeless young men in an uninhabited wilderness—Nephi, the hero, his three brothers, Laman, Lemuel, and Lam, besides the kidnapped Zoram. The next heroic deed is to secretly return to Jerusalem, and entice old Mr. Ishmael, who had a family of five unmarried daughters, to come down to Lehi's tent in the wilderness with his family; and thus these young gentlemen were furnished with wives, Nephi having the first choice.

Nephi next builds a ship. Mr. Ishmael dies in the wilderness. Eight years elapse after leaving Jerusalem before the ship is commenced. After Nephi furnishes the ship, they embark for the promised land—father Lehi and his wife, Nephi and his wife, Laman and his wife, Lemuel and his wife, Lam and his wife, Zoram and his wife, together with two sons of Mr. Ishmael and their wives, making eight families in all, with a few little children born after leaving Jerusalem. The voyage is finally made, and America is reached; but after a while father Lehi dies, and Nephi is opposed by his brethren. Finally Nephi with his family, Zoram and his family, and Lam with his family, conclude to leave the rest of the company; so Nephi takes these, together with his boy brothers, Jacob and Joseph, and sisters, who were born after leaving Jerusalem, and strikes out on a many days' journey into the wilderness, calling themselves Nephites, in contradistinction to those they had left, who were called Lamanites.

Here were only three families and a few young children with which to start a new colony, none of whom were married till after leaving Jerusalem; hence, could have raised no children till after that date; yet within "thirty years" after their departure from Jerusalem it is affirmed—"I, Nephi, did build a temple; and I did construct it after the manner of the temple of Solomon, save it was not built of so many precious things; for they were not to be found upon the land; wherefore, it could not be built like unto Solomon's temple. But the manner of the construction was like unto the temple of Solomon; and the workmanship thereof was exceeding fine. . . . And it came to pass that I, Nephi, did consecrate Jacob and Joseph, that they should be priests and teachers over the land of my people. And it came to pass that we lived after the manner of happiness. And thirty years had passed away from the time we left Jerusalem." 2 Nephi 4 : 3, 5.

As none of this small colony were married till after leaving Jerusalem, and only three couple married previous to coming to America, and they did not begin to build the ship to come in till they had been eight years in the wilderness, journeying from Jerusalem (1 Nephi 5 : 18), and the temple was completed in thirty years from the time they left Jerusalem, or in about eighteen or twenty years from arriving in America, what a small force it must have been built by. Just look at it; Nephi, Zoram and Lam were not married till after leaving Jerusalem, while Jacob, Joseph, and their sisters, were born after the departure from Jerusalem, and not marriageable till years after coming to America. Allowing that Nephi, Zoram and Lam raised a family of ten children each, half sons and half daughters, this would give us a male force of eighteen workmen, including fathers; but as their birth would be about two years apart, a part of this number would be boys only of ten years old at the time the temple was finished. And allowing that their oldest children got married at the age of twenty, as well as Joseph and Jacob, and their sisters, their oldest children could not have been over eight or nine years old at the time the temple was finished,—too young to help. Allow one year after leaving Jerusalem before the birth of the first children, then twenty years more before their marriage, then one year more before the birth of their first children, and the oldest of these grand-children could not have been over eight years of age at the end of the thirty years, when the temple was completed; so that huge edifice must have been constructed by eighteen workmen, and a part of them must have been mere boys, ranging from ten to sixteen years old in the last year of the work, and younger at an earlier stage of the work.

Besides building this huge temple, they are said to have erected other "buildings," in addition to supporting their families, and learning "to work in all manner of wood, and of brass, and of steel, and of gold, and of precious ores." This little handful of men and boys, only eighteen in number at the end of the thirty years after leaving Jerusalem, or about twenty years after reaching America (for eight years were spent before beginning to build the ships), had time to open all their mines of iron, copper, brass, gold, silver, to make steel, furnaces and foundries, build houses, and erect this gigantic temple, like Solomon's; nor did they build it in a shammy style, for "the manner of the construction of it was like unto the temple of Solomon; and the workmanship was exceeding fine." They were ten thousand times smarter than the men employed by Solomon, for on that temple "about one hundred and eighty-four thousand and six hundred men were employed seven years,"—nearly ten thousand more than Nephi could muster; besides, Solomon's men did not have to stop to build other houses.

The fact stares Mormons in the face, that Nephi's temple was built too soon after coming to America, before there were men enough born to build it, or to use it after being built. Joseph should have postponed the building of this temple till the people were born to do the work, if he wished to have us credit the story. There is no excuse for the fabrication. After this temple worship was introduced, baptism was also connected with Nephite worship, but the baptism of children was sternly discountenanced. Mormon is represented as writing an epistle to his son Moroni, in which he says: "For I have learned the truth, that there have been disputations among you concerning the baptism of your little children. And now, my son, I desire that you should labor diligently that this gross error should be removed from among you. . . . I know that it is solemn mockery before God, that ye should baptize little children." Moroni 8 : 2. Yet in a little over a year after Joseph Smith published the Book of Mormon, he professed to receive by inspiration the following law for the Mormon church: "And their children shall be baptized for the remission of their sins when eight years old."—Book of Covenants, page 200. Here is a compulsive law, to be enforced regardless of the will of the child; for if not attended to, it is said, "the sin be upon the head of the parents."

Here is ancient and modern Mormonism in conflict. In which instance is inspiration at fault—in Mormon, or in Joseph Smith? If children can be baptized on the responsibility of parents at the age of "eight years," why not as well be baptized in infancy? This is a sample of vacillating Mormonism.

SOURCE OF TRUE COMFORT.

E. T. HOBBS.

"One, one of the sweet old chapters,
After a day like this;
The day brought care and trouble,
The evening brings no kiss.
No rest in the arms I long for,
Rest and refuge and home—
Sad, and lonely, and weary,
To the dear old book I come."

These words fitly express the wants of many human hearts. All do not find relief in reading one of the "sweet old chapters." In one of them are these blessed words—Thy word is "sweeter than . . . the honeycomb." To none but those who have found Christ the shadow of a great rock in the weary land, can these words be appreciated.

I used to wonder at the delight people found in poring over the Scriptures. After a while it came my turn to go through the deep waters. Then to my bewildered senses came the echoing voice of my Lord—"Fear not, for I have redeemed thee; . . . when thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee." "Behold, I have graven them upon the palms of my hands"; and to the suffering, waiting church of to-day come these words, with the accumulated force of all preceding time. He who commissioned Moses to lead his people on to victory, leads us on to-day by his own chosen instrumentalities. The cross now; the crown by and by. Through flood and flame, if Jesus lead; we must follow where he goes. Only by that course can we gain the promised land.

There are indications of a rising tide of opposition against the Bible; and when it comes, there will be the chance to test its precious, long-ago uttered truths, by a faithful adherence to our Master. From the "sweet old chapters" we have been so long reading we have gathered strength anew for the stormy conflict of life. "Let not your heart be troubled," is the beginning of one of them. No field of flowers ever sent out sweeter perfume than those heavenly words of Jesus.

We read of an alabaster box of ointment in the story of her who, regardless of cost, broke it ungrudgingly for Jesus' sake; for him too during his humiliation, when he was despised and rejected of men. Down over the hills of time, on the sweet scented air, comes its perfume. It will never, never waste. In anointing her Lord for burial, Mary unconsciously anointed all his believing people: "Wheresoever this gospel shall be preached in the whole world, there shall also this . . . be told for a memorial of her." Many an humble follower of Christ has been stimulated to action by the benediction pronounced on Mary.

In another of the sweet old chapters, we have these words—"I am the root and the offspring of David, and the bright and morning star." Rev. 22 : 16. In another, "I am the good Shepherd." Time would not suffice to enumerate the instances on record of the faithfulness of God as testified to in his word. Enough to know "He is faithful who hath promised." Let us take up anew the song—

"We wont give up the Bible,
We'll shout it far and wide,
Until its echoes shall be heard
Beyond the rolling tide."

Let us peruse its precious pages, find therein the ingots of gold it is said to contain, and, amid the mad strife for mastery, hold fast our profession, and thereby come off more than conqueror.

Cambridgeport, Mass.

BISHOP GEORGE.

Late one evening, when most of the journeying was done on horseback, a weary traveler sought rest for himself and horse at a house of entertainment for the night, which was granted. Quite a number of persons were present, among whom were several young ministers. The house being full, the old gentleman was obliged to occupy a bed in company with one of them, who, on retiring, did so with little ceremony, and much haste, jumping into the middle of the bed very coolly, and not deigning to exchange social greetings with his companion.

The old gentleman took a Bible from his pocket, and read a chapter very impressively. The young sprig for the ministry raised his head, peering curiously at the other, and moved a little over towards the backside of the bed. Having finished reading, he offered a fervent and appropriate prayer, during which the young man had worked himself away to the backside of the bed. At its close, he arose in bed, and asked, "Who are you?"

"A poor old way-worn pilgrim and traveler," was the answer.

"What is your name?"

"George," was the reply.

"What! not Bishop George?"

"That is what they call me," quietly answered he.

Out of bed sprang the young man, and hastily dressing ran down stairs to the hostess, informing her whom she had for a guest that night. She speedily returned with the young man, and with many apologies for her seeming neglect, begged him to partake of a sumptuous meal.

"No," said he; "if a poor old traveler is not worthy of the best you can provide, Bishop George is not."

Early in the morning he was astir, and the hostess begged him to remain until she could provide a bountiful repast for him.

"No," he replied; "if a poor way-worn traveler is not worthy of it, Bishop George is not"; and after partaking of a plain breakfast, he went on his way, leaving them to profit by the lesson they had learned—never to slight a man because of his humble appearance. J. N. BERRY.

DO NOT HALT.

It is the first step that costs. When the Israelites came up to the Red Sea, the command of God was, "Speak to the children of Israel, that they go forward." But how? The Jewish leader might well cry out, We have no fleet to bear us over. Go forward! But, Lord, we cannot ford the gulf before us. Go forward! Wouldst thou have us, Lord, to perish in the billows? Still the answer comes, "Speak to the children of Israel, that they go forward." The command is peremptory. It admits of no delay. And just as soon as Israel goes forth in obedience to Jehovah's voice, lo! the waves part asunder, and the mighty cavalcade marches through, dry shod! Unhesitating obedience to our God always insures a blessing.

Here is a lesson for halting inquirers. To you comes the command of God, "Go forward!" Death is behind you. There is no salvation in retreat. Heaven lies before you, not behind. No man ever saved his soul by relapsing into indifference. If you give up you are lost.

1. Perhaps you say, "I have prayed many times already, and no blessing has yet come." Will you cease to pray, then? Will that bring an answer? As well might a voyager to Liverpool, when one hundred miles from port, put about his helm, and steer back to New York; he is almost there; why does the foolish man retreat? How many a soul has quit praying when the door of mercy was just about opening. Go forward.

2. Another is kept back by fear of ridicule. He cannot stand a laugh. There is a sneer waiting for him at his father's table, or a cutting sarcasm in his counting-room. He wavers before it. He winces under the slightest word, and imagines terrible things in store for himself. Go forward; the sea will open unto you, and so will many a heart to cheer you on. You will inspire respect in the very quarters from which you now expect opposition. He is a weakling who is pushed back with a straw.

3. A person complains, "I am in the dark; I cannot see my way." Then go forward, and get out of the dark. The determination to do your duty will be attended by a luminous discernment of the path of duty. God will show you the way; only go forward, looking for the cross.

4. Unbelief draws back a fourth. There is only one way to conquer doubt. It is to believe. Then, instead of halting and shivering in an ague fit of indecision, take a bold, decisive step. End the torturing uncertainty by going forward, "looking unto Jesus."

The only way to do a thing is to do it. God gives strength to the obedient. He has no promise for cowards, or double-minded, vacillating doubters. He bestows grace on those who try to do their duty. His grace is all-sufficient for you. The deepest sea of difficulties will divide its waters for your advancing footsteps just so soon as you determine to obey that voice which says to you, Go forward. The moment of ruin to Lot's wife was the moment in which she halted. A steady pushing on toward Zoar would have saved her life.

As soon as an awakened soul stops to parley with temptation, or to cavil at some Bible doctrine, or for any other reason, the Spirit of God is grieved. The great majority of unconverted persons in our congregations have—at some time in their lives—been under serious convictions, and halted. Death will not halt. Time halts not one instant. Dear friend, if you halt one step this side of Jesus, you must perish outside of heaven's gate. Don't halt! or else the same bell which now rings for you a glad invitation will toll the knell of your lost soul.—Theodore L. Cuyler.

DARWINISM EXAMINED.

F. R. RUSSELL.

The evolution or development theory of accounting for the wonders of the animal and vegetable kingdoms was projected by some of the old Greek philosophers, but it has been reserved for Prof. Charles Darwin, of England, to elaborate the theory, put it in popular dress, and surround it with a scientific nomenclature.

This philosophy attempts to account for the existence and varied forms of the animal and vegetable kingdoms without the interposing hand of an intelligent and designing Creator, by spontaneous creation, and then perpetual evolution. Mr. Darwin asserts—for it is nothing but assertion—that animal life began its career on earth spontaneously in the organization of an aquatic, as a sponge, a star fish, muscle, or oyster, and that both sexes blended in one, in this fatherless, motherless, godless nondescript—this forefather and foremother of all flesh—and that all forms of animal life which have since peopled our globe are descendents of this one aquatic monstrosity, developed upwardly and onwardly from age to age until we have at last all the types, genera, species and varieties of living forms; that man is but a developed star fish or oyster; that the evolutions have gone on from age to age to age upward, through serpents, crocodiles, quadrupeds, monkeys, apes, and then into humanity.

This pantheistical nonsense is the last and most plausible attempt of infidelity to vote the throne of the adorable Creator vacant, and to laugh the word of God out of countenance. The most formidable thing about it is, that so many learned men, claiming to be scientists accept it, and attempt to give it currency among the young as sound philosophy.

Prof. Darwin is a gentleman of liberal culture, and rare tastes, and opportunities in scientific research, and if the evolution theory of the origin of species and of man is correct, we may expect to find in this work a scientific and logical defense; but the careful reader will find throughout assumption just where proof was most needed. Mr. D. does not attack, directly, the personality of God or divine revelation; but he moves round in the dark, ignoring God, and sapping and mining at the foundations.

There occur to my mind many, very many fatal objections to this whole theory, aside from the Scripture record and the testimony of natural history. Let me suggest some of the insuparable objections.

1. There is in Darwinism a want of good common sense. I admit that reason alone, a priori, is not a divine umpire, whose suggestions are final and authoritative. But then truth, when discovered, always utters good common sense, and her testimonies are harmonious. But is it good sense to suppose, without testimony, that nature has one marvelous freak by which she, without a Creator's designing hand, or purpose, without thought, or law, or plan, marshaled dead, inert matter, into an exquisite organism, and kindled the spark of life and set the little heart, a kind of force pump, throbbing, and then throbbing on through the ages in a progeny of countless millions?

Such a wonder must have been a miracle, a most germatic, stupendous miracle, equivalent to all the miracles of successive creations. Mr. Darwin feels this difficulty, and calls it an inexplicable mystery.' It is an inexplicable mystery, and he should have stopped and solved this problem before he attempted to promulgate and defended the rest of his enigma.

2. There is another difficulty in Darwinism. It is not an inductive philosophy, based on the facts of experience and observation, but an hypothetical philosophy, invented to solve a problem. It is spun out of his teeming brain, as a spider spins her web. It is hatched by a brooding, scheming, restless, pantheistical mind, contriving to get rid of God. Mr. Darwin does not, in his elaborate works, go on to collate facts, and then deduce from them the testimony they utter; but he assumes all along, the fundamental points of his whole theory, and then builds on them his anomalous superstructure. He assumes that nature produced one, and but one, monstrous organism, containing both sexes in itself, and then began to propagate living forms unlike itself. This is the foundation stone of the whole system, and yet it is an assumption. So he goes on assuming, that nature has an undesigned, unordained tendency upward, toward humanity—that selection, and the "survival of the fittest" will sweep away all barriers, and produce all the present varieties and forms of life. This kind of philosophy is vain, misguiding, and delusive.—Ex. (To be concluded.)

ADVENT CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE OF NOVA SCOTIA.

This Conference met at Bear River, according to appointment, June 15th. A goodly number of brethren and sisters from different parts of the province came together to our yearly passover, to renew our vows and faith, and hear the scattered ones give in telling testimonies of their hopes of the soon coming Deliverer, when they will be no more separated from the dear ones that are looking for this glorious consummation of their hopes and earnest expectations. We still have in our Conference some of the old brethren that came out in the year 1843, still holding on through opposition strong to the glorious message, "Behold I come quickly."

Meetings were held three times per day; social preaching and business meetings were all profitable seasons. Many of the brethren from isolated parts of the province were greatly strengthened, and went home rejoicing. There have been by the reports of the churches considerable additions; likewise the enemy has been at work, some have fallen away, and the great enemy death has robbed us. Elder Swanesburg, a faithful pioneer, has fallen asleep, and we want more watchmen.

The preaching brethren present were—Elders J. J. Woodworth, J. M. Tozier, J. Fitch, Wm. Halliday, Stephen Woodworth, Bro. Snow from New Brunswick, and Bro George Sederquest from Lynn, Mass., who preached to us with great acceptance, holding forth with promptness the doctrine of perfect trust; and may we, as a body of people who have such a glorious hope, live more in it and by it.

Bro. James Albert Wordsworth was set apart to the gospel work. Ordaining prayer by Bro. Snow, charge by Bro. Sederquest, right hand of fellowship by Bro. Halliday.

May our heavenly Father move on the hearts of many of our young men to come forward to the front, and throw their christian lives into this great work. The tide of opposition in this country is very strong, still the glorious truths which we love are permeating and spreading, and many who formerly used to be great rejectors are now like the blind man that Jesus healed,—they see as trees walking. O that many might have their eyes opened to this great truth.

The events that are transpiring in the East are watched by many,—the drying up of the Euphrates down to the last blast of the sixth vial to prepare the way of that mighty Eastern power. May we all be ready for the great event.

JAMES MORRISON, Sec. and Treas.

TRUTH for a time may be obscured, but not in the end. It is like a piece of sound timber hurled into the water. By force it may be driven out of sight, but as soon as the violence is removed, the timber will again appear, and swim at the top.

HOME AND HEALTH.

A MYSTERY EXPLAINED.

Several members of a family in this city recently found themselves troubled with red spots and blotches on their bodies, the disease appearing somewhat like ivy poison. Not understanding the cause the family physician was consulted, and he suggested that it might be the result of the careless use of copper utensils in cooking food, and was clearly of opinion that it was due to poison in some form. Further investigation developed the fact that the servant girl, in her ignorance, had been using water from the hot water faucet for making tea and coffee, boiling potatoes, and, in short, for all cooking purposes. This at once furnished a solution of the problem. The hot water in this, as in nearly all cases where hot water comes from the pipes, is drawn from a large copper boiler, which, by its situation in respect to the pipe, can never be thoroughly cleaned out, and in course of time collects sufficient impurities from the water and particles of the copper to render it poisonous for all use in drinking or in cooking. It is further rendered noxious by its passage through lead pipes, and by its never being fresh, as in the cold water, which usually comes direct from the street main. It would not be surprising if many cases of sickness in this or any other city could be traced directly to the cause we have indicated above, and housekeepers should watch their domestics vigilantly to see that only the water from the cold water pipes is used in any part of cooking for the family.—Worcester Spy.

CONSUMPTION IN CITIES.

A tenth of the people of the cities die of consumption. For its prevention, hygienic treatment is the most successful. By drainage the mortality is greatly reduced. An elastic, dry atmosphere is best. Few of the large cities have a mild and equable climate, favorable to the respiratory organs, the want of which develops pulmonary complaints. Of the rich, sixty in a thousand are afflicted with the disease, and two hundred and twenty-three to the thousand of the poor. Among the children of the aged and diseased it is more frequently found. When darkness and dampness prevent growth and health, consumption is produced.

The quantity of oxygen is always diminished in cities, even in the streets. Persons predisposed to consumption ought not to be allowed to live in cities. The absence of sunlight is a fruitful cause of the prevalence of the disease. It is not permitted in our houses, and when it does pretend to intrude, our housewives exclude it with heavy curtains. The streets are so narrow and the houses so high that sunlight seldom reaches the sitting-rooms. The school houses are so situated that children can scarcely ever see the sun.

The sun is the source of all light, life and beauty, and is as necessary to give color and health and life to animals as to plants. It corrects musty smells, so prolific of disease. There is no surer way of promoting consumption than by the exclusion of sunlight. Sedentary life and inactivity, impure air, and the absence of sunlight in cities produce a fearful mortality from consumption. No exciting cause is so general as in-door occupations.

Excessive dryness, especially in the houses of the rich, is bad for health. Many other influences of city life contribute to its prevalence. Proper food is next in importance to pure air in preventing a development of the disease. To the neglect of supplying to all an abundance of milk and butter is largely attributable the increase and prevalence of the disease. The poor, especially, get but little hydro-carbonaceous food, and with the rich it is not the favorite it ought to be. Close confinement to business, overwork, and whatever contributes to impair the vigor of the body, tends to develop consumption. The hygienic treatment of all diseases is the great medical fact of the times.—Prof. Frank Donaldson.

THE FIREMAN'S DAUGHTER.

"It was a large school, the pupils were assembled and busily engaged in their work, when there was a sudden alarm of fire. As usual, a terrible panic immediately ensued. In wild confusion and with shrieks and cries every one darted to the doors of the school-room, forming there a mass so dense as to render escape absolutely impossible to many. In the struggle to get out, several of the children were seriously injured, and one young lady, a teacher, rushed to an open window, and jumped out of it.

Throughout this scene of confusion one little girl—one of the best conducted in the school, maintained her self-composure and remained seated on the bench, where she had been when the alarm commenced, without once moving. The color had indeed forsaken her face; her lips quivered, and some tears rolled slowly down her cheeks; but not one cry, not one word escaped, and there she sat silent and motionless as a white marble statue, till all danger was declared to be over.

After order had been restored, and her companions had been brought back to their places, except those who were too much hurt or too much frightened to resume their duties for that day, the question was asked her, how it happened, that she had been so composed as to sit still when everybody else was in such a fearful state of fright? Her reply was, 'My father is a fireman, and he has told me, that if ever there was an alarm of fire in the school I must just sit still. I thought of his words, and did as he desired me, and this was what made me stay quiet.'"—Tract Magazine.

WAITING.

O Jesus! thou knowest I'm waiting,
And longing and watching for thee;
And moments I reckon as hours,
Until I thy coming shall see.

I ask for the time of thy coming,
And when will this watching be o'er;
I'm listening, Lord, for thy knocking,
And ready to open the door.

I thought yesternight thou wert coming,
On hearing a knock at the gate;
'Twas only a message to tell me
A little while longer to wait.

To wait in the spirit of patience,
And watch in the spirit of prayer,
And gird up my loins and be ready
To meet thee, my Lord, in the air.

O may I be found at thy coming
Prepared for the gracious reward,
To share with the saints in thy glory,
And dwell evermore with the Lord.

REPORT OF THE "Conditional Immortality" Conference.

The Chairman:—While I have been listening to this paper, I have felt a great honor in being in this position, to command, as a general officer, a branch in that army which has been alluded to, and which directs so heavy a battery against the old stronghold of tradition (cheers); and I am convinced that, if the soldiers of the Lord will only sound their trumpets as faithfully as you have heard this morning, this old fortress must soon crumble into ruins. I have now to invite any of our friends who have something interesting to advance upon the subjects under our consideration to do so; only, I must take this opportunity of again reminding them of what I said in reference to enforcing the rules of the meeting.

Mr. H. Constable, who was most warmly greeted, was the next to address the meeting. He said:—As I find, Mr. Chairman, that I am expected to say a few words on this auspicious occasion, I very willingly rise to do so. It is now fully eight years since, in a work of pamphlet size, I brought out my views upon the great question of life in Christ. My little work has since grown to a fair-sized octavo volume in its fifth edition. Around me are men who with zeal and ability wrought before me in this great field of labor, and who are still enriching its literature with new and valuable works. Hitherto our efforts have been chiefly confined to writing. For myself and for my fellow laborers, I say, that not one of us is ashamed or sorry for the part which we have taken. We say, that we have presented to the public a grand truth—a truth too long almost forgotten—a truth which will be found the key to the interpretation of a large and most important part of the word of God (hear, hear). For myself I say, that I have never seen the preciousness, the value, the beauty of that word, as I have done since my eyes were opened to see that truth which we advocate to-day (hear, hear). But we are not satisfied with merely writing, nor with the few lectures and meetings which have been held from time to time within the last few years in some of the principal towns of England. We we want something more; and we think the time is come for getting it. We are growing a little ambitious in our aim (laughter), with our maturity of years (laughter); and therefore, this day—in this metropolis of the Christian world—in this month of May, when the representatives of so many Christian churches are urging their clams and their objects,—we, too, will hold our representative meeting, in which we bring forward an aim and an object that we do not believe to be inferior in importance to any that is advocated this month in London. And when I look around me, sir, upon the numbers and the intelligence that are assembled here, I am not ashamed, I am proud of our first meeting. And I am happy to find woman's rights to form a free and independent judgment on a great question of theology so well represented here (laughter). What is our principal aim to-day? Our aim, as seems to me, is this: to show that we have a great object at heart; that we are not ashamed or afraid to avow it, but are determined to push it forward; and so to call upon the Christian world and the sceptical world—both one and other—to examine calmly and honestly our views.

We are not mere derniers of views hitherto commonly held without presenting something definite in place of that which we seek to set aside. Infidelity does this. It destroys this faith and that; overturning true and false alike. But what has it done when it has done its work? The prophetic woe of Ezekiel 21: 17:—"Overturn, overturn, overturn," is true of its work of destruction; but without the "until He come whose right it is," of the great maker and builder, God. If infidelity could secure a universal triumph it would only look out upon a universal wreck and solitude, where the heart wearied, and sickened, and died. We have something definite, fixed, substantial, solid (a voice; Yes), and we have it for all (cheers). We have something for the great Christian word, to soothe and to gladden it (hear, hear). We vindicate the character of God. It has been slandered through the craft of the devil (hear, hear). Evil is not to be for ever in his world. He has not created innumerable beings to be handed over, even through fault of theirs, to endless misery. The eternal future of his world is bright with hope,—brighter for the cloud which has for a moment obscured its sun (hear, hear). We have something too, we think, for that great and, we fear, increasing world of scepticism, which is only, with the increase of scientific knowledge, growing darker and more hopeless in its look out into the future. The scepticism of an earlier century, such as that of the amiable Lord Herbert of Cherbury, while it denied the great Christian doctrine of Jesus and the resurrection," still held out some hope of a future life in the shadow-land of Virgil, and Plato, and Homer. But modern science has come to a more gloomy, while a a truer view of human nature. Modern science has brought us to death, and to death only.

The philosophical speculations about matter and mind, about the immortality of the soul and kindred questions, are viewed with a sad incredulity by the school in which Huxley and Darwin walk and teach. They have examined into man and do not find him immortal. They have come to the same hopeless view of death and its results that was felt in the bosom of the great heathen world of Paul's time, who, when they came to an open grave, and in it with reverent love laid their dead, sorrowed without hope. Domus Æternalis, "The eternal dwelling," was their designation for the tomb. Now here we meet this modern science. We do not deny the correctness of very much of of their psychology,—I certainly do not,—but we present them with a view which is is its remedy and its cure (hear, hear). We bring before them the God of the Bible, who, if he brings down to the grave, also brings up again (hear, hear); and who, in the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, has presented to their miuds and conceptions a prize that may make the sad heart glad indeed. We would say to them,—You have brought us to a grave which is closed and full; we bring you to one that is open and empty! We say to you, In that grave burst open is your hope. He is not there, but is risen, who offers you a share in his own everlasting life. (Loud and repeated cheers). (To be continued.)

END OF THE WORLD.

When does it come? Does it come in connection with, or at Christ's coming? or does it not? Is there probation for anybody after the end of this age, or dispensation? It seems to me that Jesus and the Bible answer these questions so plainly, that none need be in the dark relative to them. "Strive to enter in at the strait gate; for many, I say unto you, shall seek to enter in, and shall not be able, when once the Master of the house is risen up, and hath shut to the door." Luke 13: 24. Here they seek with strong desire and say, "Lord, Lord." They knock and say, "Open unto us"; but he says, it is too late; "depart from me, all ye workers of iniquity." This harmonizes with the winding up of the parable in Matt. 25, after the midnight cry, and the wise had directed the foolish to those that sold oil: "And while they went to buy, the bridegroom came; and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage, and the door was shut. Afterward came also the other virgins, saying, Lord, Lord, open to us." They sought, they entreated, but no avail. The harvest was past, the summer ended, and they were not saved. Why not saved? Because they would not enter while there was an open door. It was too late; mercy was gone.

Now we will come to Matt. 13, and receive the instruction of our Master, in connection with the parable. The question is, Does this parable teach the winding up of "the age," and that both crops will be disposed of at the end, and that that will bring in the eternal age of glory? After a rehearsal of the parable by the great Teacher, the disciples interested in hearing came to him privately, and said, "Declare unto us the parable of the tares of the field"; that is, give us your exposition of it. His explanation should be the end of all controversy. He commenced by saying, "The field is the world [the kosmos—the habitable world]; the good seed are the children of the kingdom; but the tares are the children of the wicked one." Thus far he has made all plain. How long are they to grow in the field? "Until the harvest." That is all natural. But may we not go and root up the tares? No, you will destroy the wheat. What then? "Let both grow together" in the field. How long? "Until the harvest." Right, Master; but when is the harvest? "The harvest is the end of the world"—age.

What is to be done in the harvest, or the end of this age? Both crops gathered; and they comprise all that has ever grown in the field, from the fact that there is but one harvest. There is but one reaping time; that is when the harvest of the earth is ripe; "and the reapers are the angels." "As therefore the tares ["children of the wicked one" all of them] are gathered, and burned in the fire, so shall it be in the end of this world," or age. Here in this world (age) the tares are gathered out of his kingdom, and cast "into a furnace of fire; there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth."

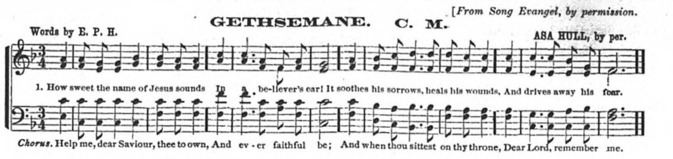
GETHSEMANE. C. M.

Words by E. P. H. ASA HULL, by per.



2. It makes the wounded spirit whole,
And calms the troubled breast;
'Tis manna to the hungry soul,
And for the weary, rest.
Chorus.

3. By thee my prayers acceptance gain,
Although with sin defiled;
Satan accuses me in vain,
And I am owned a child.
Chorus.

4. Jesus! my Shepherd! Guardian, Friend!
My Prophet, Priest, and King!
My Lord, my Life, my Way, my End!
Accept the praise I bring.
Chorus.

Here is the winding up scene of the ungodly: "tares," "goats," "chaff," burned up with "unquenchable fire." Here is the revelation of Jesus Christ "in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ [the same tares]; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction." This fiery ordeal is Peter's perdition of ungodly men. Then what? "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. Who hath ears to hear, let him hear." And I say, let him hear and believe.

As soon as we get through Peter's burning day, which is the perdition of ungodly men, the second death, which destroys all whose names are not written in the Lamb's book of life, we find the "new heavens and new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness,"—or where the righteous dwell. So, when we pass Christ's furnace of fire (and it is in this age, or dispensation, by Christ's own explanation), "then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom," and this kingdom is "under the whole heaven." This is not the typical Canaan, nor can it be Palestine. It is the kingdom of God, which must be had at Christ's "coming and kingdom."

So Dan. 12: 2 brings us down to the time of the resurrection of the many multitudes that sleep in the dust, some of both classes. For he says—"some to everlasting life; and some to shame and everlasting contempt." Here is the end of the 1335 days (years), when Daniel finds his lot of inheritance. "And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever." This must bring us to the time where David exultingly said, the righteous shall be exalted to "inherit the land, and dwell therein forever"; "the meek shall inherit the earth." The kingdom, dominion, and greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven is theirs forever. It shall "be given to the saints of the Most High." The stone shall smite the clay, iron, brass, silver and gold together, and they shall be driven away "like the chaff of the summer threshing floors," and no place found for them. Then Eden will be restored. Death, and him that had the power of death, will be done away for ever, and the saints at home, for ever with the Lord. "Home, sweet home." Amen.

"When we've been there ten thousand years,
Bright shining as the sun,
We've no less days to sing God's praise
Than when we first begun."

HAS THE DRAGON BEEN BOUND?

J. S. WHITE.

It is claimed that the dragon of Revelation twelfth chapter is the same as the dragon of Revelation twentieth chapter. Suppose this to be so, what does the dragon represent? "And behold a great red dragon, having seven heads and ten horns, and seven crowns upon his heads." Chap. 12. That the dragon represents the Roman empire is evident, and to this all agree. It represents the same kingdom as the fourth beast in Daniel seventh chapter; i. e., the fourth great kingdom that was to be on the earth, before God sets up his kingdom. Both beasts had ten horns, showing that the kingdom would be divided, and still be parts of the whole. Both beasts cover the whole period of the existence of the fourth kingdom, including its division as represented by the ten horns, which were not to cleave one to the other. The dragon of Rev. 20 has ten horns. If this is the same as the one in Rev. 12, then this covers the same time, and will continue till Christ comes to set up his kingdom.

The dragon in both places is called "the devil and Satan," because, being moved and controlled by the devil, it would do the devil's work. The dragon represents Rome from beginning to the end; in its consolidated form, and in its divided state. It no more represented Rome while it was pagan than when it was papal, or protestant. Paganism could do nothing by way of persecution, only as it was supported by the civil power; and papacy could do nothing only as it had the civil power to support it. This it first had from the emperors of Rome, and then from the kings, represented by the ten horns. The dragon no more represents paganism, than it does papacy. The papacy has had a much longer life in the Roman empire than paganism. How, then, can any one say that the dragon represents paganism only?

The dragon, as in Rev. 20, was to be bound a thousand years, and then loosed. We will suppose that the dragon represents Rome only so far as the pagan religion is concerned. Has the dragon been bound? and if so, when? The religion of Rome was pagan, and Rome was governed by pagan rulers down to the conversion of Constantine, A. D. 325. He then gave up the pagan faith, and became a believer in Christ. From that time to his death in 337, he used the whole civil power of the empire against paganism, and in favor of the Christian religion. If we were to say that paganism has been bound in the Roman empire, we should say it was done between the above dates. Paganism has never raised its head since that time, as having any civil rule in the empire. True, the northern barbarians who did not belong to the empire, and who broke up the empire, were pagans; but they did not come to put down the religion of the empire, but to break it up, and divide it among themselves. This they did, and so brought out the ten horns on the dragon. They very soon found the religion of the Romans better than theirs, and embraced it.—Marsh's History. The horns on the dragon remain to this day, not pagan in any sense.

Did not Constantine bind paganism? If we begin the one thousand years at the death of Constantine, they would end A. D. 1337. Theodosius lived to see paganism suppressed and Christianity established throughout the Roman empire; and he died 395.—Goodrich's History. If we commenced the one thousand years at this date, they would end 1395. Under an edict by the emperor, "paganism declined apace; so rapid, and yet so quiet, was the fall of it, that only twenty-eight years after the death of Theodosius, the faint and minute vestiges were no longer visible to the eye of the legislator."—Gibbon.

If this would not be the binding of paganism, what would? It is out of the empire; but the dragon is there; he is not bound in any way. He still lives at large in his imperial form; has not yet reached his horns. We see that the suppression of paganism has nothing to do with the binding of the dragon. If we commence the one thousand years at the date of Gibbon, they would end A. D. 1423.

We come down to the time of Justinian. About A. D. 532 he issued an edict to unite all in one faith, whether Jews, Gentiles, or Christians. This is the time that paganism was bound, and that Justinian by enforcing this did this work, as some suppose. But this had nothing to do with paganism. I have no evidence that there was any pagan power in the empire that opposed the church in the time of Justinian. There was a large body of believers in Christ, mostly Arians, who were opposed to the orthodox church, so called. It was Justinian's purpose to unite them in the Catholic faith under the Bishop of Rome. Suppose we date the one thousand years at the time of this edict; they would end in A. D. 1532.

But all these dates are too early for those who would have the one thousand years in the past. So another and later date must be found, so as to have them end about A. D. 1800. To do this, the reign of Charlemagne is referred to for the date—about A. D. 800. Charlemagne was king of France by succession, and emperor of the west by conquest in A. D. 800. But he did not suppress paganism, for there was none in the empire in his day to suppress. He aimed to consolidate the kingdoms represented by the horns of the dragon. He failed, for he could not make them cleave one to the other. The dragon's kingdom had been divided, and it must remain so to fulfill the prophecy.

The last date for the one thousand years that I have seen is A. D. 792. France, it is said, was the last of the ten kingdoms to be subdued, or the pagans of that nation; which was accomplished about A. D. 792. Suppose this to be true; it would follow that France had been a pagan government up to that time, or that there was a pagan power in France at that time. In the absence of any history, that I know of, to show this, I think there is no truth in the statement. France was a Roman Catholic nation at and before that time.

In A. D. 713 the Saracens, who were Arabians, and had been converted to Mohammedanism, entered Spain, and reduced to slavery those Christians who had a name to live and were dead. In A. D. 734, they entered France to take possession of the government (not to suppress paganism), and to bring it under Mohammedan rule; but they were met by an opposing power, and defeated with the loss of three hundred and seventy thousand killed in one day. (See Marsh's History.) This comes the nearest of anything I have found to show that pagan France, or paganism in France, was suppressed about A. D. 792. France had been a Roman Catholic nation for three hundred years before the French Revolution.

If paganism is what is meant by the dragon, then the subduing of paganism in the Roman empire would be the binding of the dragon in that empire. That which was bound was to be loosed. Paganism bound at the beginning of the one thousand years, would be paganism loosed at the end of this time. If this time was A. D. 1792, or about that period, then paganism comes up out of the pit, not metamorphosed into something else,—into infidelity, or Spiritualism. The dragon that is bound is to be loosed, and go out to deceive the whole world; to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth; and they are to be deceived and go up a multitude, like the sand of the sea, and compass the camp of the saints about. Paganism has never been loosed in the Roman empire since the days of Constantine.

What took place in A. D. 1792, at which time it is said the dragon, or paganism, was loosed? The French Revolution. About that time the infidels of France made war on the Roman church. They were not pagans in any sense. They did not hold one thing in common with paganism. Is this the dragon that was bound, and when he is let loose is altogether something else, wholly another creature? They did not continue the war long, became frightened, and gave it up. How does this agree with what is said of the work of the dragon in Rev. 20, after he is loosed?

Coming down from 1792 to about 1848, Spiritualism comes up, and this is hitched on to make out the work of paganism. But Spiritualism is not paganism. This does not hold one thing in common with infidelity, except that some of them deny the existence of the God of the Bible. Suppose it be admitted that Spiritualists are like the infidels; they are not pagan in any way. Is this the way that God's word is fulfilled?

It is claimed that the binding of the dragon is in a figurative book, and therefore it must be so understood. There are other things in this book, such as the judgment, the resurrection, the new Jerusalem, the tree of life, the river of life, the lake of fire, the new heavens and new earth, and the one thousand years and Christ's coming. Shall we say that these are figures because they are in a book of figures? As the one thousand years are connected with the dragon, why not say that this time is to be taken figuratively, as a day for a year, and so have three hundred and sixty-five thousand years? It is prophetic time. The answer is, if we call them this time, we cannot put them in the past, so we will say the one thousand years are literal, and by some means, either with or without evidence, we will put them in the past; for if we do not do this, we must admit that the doctrine of "the age-to-come" is true. This is what Joseph Turner used to say to me; and he claimed that he was the author of this theory. The only way, he said, that we could oppose "the age-to-come" was to put the one thousand years in the past. The argument is this: if the one thousand years are in the future, "the age-to-come" is true; but "the age-to-come" is not true; therefore those years are in the past.

How any person can see "the age-to-come" (or what is commonly meant by that) must be true, if the one thousand years are in the future, is beyond my comprehension. Our "age-to-come" friends have scores of texts by which they prove, as they believe, "the age-to-come," though these years are in the past, or though they are taken out of the Bible, as some have tried to do, to get them out of the way. Bro. Miller believed this time is to be in the future, while he did not believe in "the age-to-come." The Advent Herald has always advocated the same views. There are thousands of our Advent brethren who hold to the same views with Bro. Miller. They cannot see that, if the one thousand years are in the future, it must be true that there will be probation in that time. And they think that those who try to put this time in the past, so as to get rid of "the age-to-come," are very hard pushed for argument.

I believe that the dragon called "the devil" was to represent Roman power; first, when it was pagan; not because it was pagan, but because it was opposed to God and his people. He is called "the devil" because he would do the work of the devil. All power, whether pagan or christian, that opposed God and the truth, may be called the devil and Satan, and in this chapter is called the dragon. This character existed in Rome after the suppression of paganism as much as before. When pagans could not do the work of the devil in persecuting the church, then one part of the church persecuted the other part. Constantine commenced this work, and threw the whole weight of his power against paganism, and against one part of the believers in Christ. He persecuted the Arian church even unto death. He took sides with the devil as really, though not to the same extent, as any pagan ruler had done. The dragon was not dead, nor bound, because men believing in paganism could not persecute. The war between one part of the church and the other part, commencing with Constantine, has continued in a greater or less degree to this time. This is the dragon, which term applies not to profession, but to character. The little horn would make war with the saints, until the Ancient of days should come, and the time should come for the saints to possess the kingdom. Then will the dragon be bound, and not before.

When Christ comes, he will bind the strong man of the house—the devil—and all his agents through which he has carried on opposition to Christ and his cause. See Luke 11: 19–23. Opposing influences have been and will continue to be until he comes, who will put down all power, and all rule, and all dominion, to which the terms "devil," "Satan," "serpent," and "dragon" are applied, as agents through which the god of this world has operated against Christ and his reign on the earth. The devil, through his agents, has reigned; but the time is coming when Christ will take to himself his great power, the power which he now has, and which he will use when he comes. Then he will show who is the only Potentate, the Lord of lords, and King of kings. Other kings have had their times to reign, and Christ will have his time. When he shall reign, his saints that have been put to death will live and reign with him. "For if we be dead with him, we shall also live with him; if we suffer [with him], we shall also reign with him." 2 Tim. 2: 11, 12. Christ did not reign when he was suffering and dying; neither do his people reign while they are suffering. When the saints reign, they will be with Christ in his kingdom, and not in the devil's kingdom.

(To be concluded.)

FAITH POWER.

Power or force is that which causes action. There is muscular power called physical force; mechanical power, caused by combining and arranging the forces of nature; mental power which evolves the truths of science, philosophy, and religion; and the Scriptures teach us also of faith power, a power which produces results similar to all these others, both separate and combined.

We read of the power of faith in producing astonishing results, far superior to those of any other known force. Its mighty workings have been seen in heaven above and in earth beneath. By its power both creation and destruction have been manifest in a peculiar degree. By it the walls of cities have fallen, seas have been divided, rivers have stayed their course, nations have been destroyed, lions have become lamb-like, fire been prevented from consuming, food has been provided in the desert, water brought from a rock, the sun stayed in its course, the clouds have withheld rain, and sudden death has come and as suddenly fled away. Its power has caused life from the dead, children have been born contrary to nature, and men have been taken from the earth alive; yea, by it "we understand the worlds were framed," and thus "things which are seen were not made of things which do appear."

These are but a few of the mighty achievements of faith-power. Who has seen the like results from any other source? What physical, mental, or mechanical force can show such fruits? If faith power can produce such results, men may well question whence it originated, where it can be found, and what are its limits? And the answer to all these questions is, eternity.

Faith power is not an earthly force; its origin is in heaven, and although its outward forms take on the earthy and produce visible results, yet the force is of God alone. It is neither a physical, mechanical, or mental quality, although it causes all these to have life and energy when its presence is manifest in them. It is a spiritual endowment, and its presence and power are obtained by hearing the word of God (Rom. 10: 17), seeing the works of God (John 20: 29), and by the administration of the Spirit of God (1 Cor. 12: 9). By it God is joinod to man and man to God, so that whatsoever the man does God endorses, and so far also as the measure of its power goes, man does what God does.

Faith power, then, is nothing else than the power of God in man—the Christ power, as a manifestation of the Sonship of heaven. Its workings began to be seen at an early date of the world's career. Abel suffered martyrdom, Enoch was translated, Noah rode triumphant amid the deluge, Sarah gave birth to Isaac, and many such similar events are recorded as the effects of faith power. It gave to the human race the foreshadowings of Christ for centuries, until the morn the angels sang to the shepherds of Bethlehem the glorious refrain of the new-begotten Christ, "glory to God in the highest! Peace on earth, and good will to men!" And when that Christ was slain, and the sacrifice for sin lay sleeping in the tomb, faith power came again from the eternal throne, and by the presence of angels was made manifest in the resurrection of our Lord, who is "alive forevermore."

The idea that faith power is the working of the human intellect alone, is vain. The mind of man is recognized by the Almighty in the production of truth to the senses, so that the man may be without excuse for disobedience, but the power of faith is not that of human intellect. It is the faith of God (Mark 11: 22, marg.)

It is the power that results from an unreserved spiritual, mental, and physical giving of one's self over to God, to receive from him that which will produce such results spiritually, physically, and mentally as are pleasing to God. It "works by love," and thus faith power is the outworking of God in the soul of man.

It is the beginning of the new creation. We do not wonder that Abel's blood was shed, for the old must die to give place to the new. By faith he was a martyr, not to principle, but to a life power, that the old Abel might make way for a new one at the resurrection. Thus it is that "he being dead yet speaketh." We do not wonder that Enoch was translated, for this faith power made him a companion with God. We do not wonder that Moses chose the "reproach of Christ" rather than the "riches of Egypt," for the power of a living faith was in his being.

We read of results of faith power in past ages, but the present should be more prolific of its results than any former time. As Christ lives triumphant over death, so his people should triumph in him. The development of new men and women in Christ Jesus by the operation of faith power should be manifest largely in the church of the living God, that the world may take knowledge of the disciples that they have been with Jesus. But, alas! there is a woful lack of the power of the gospel. Men and women profess conversion to the living God; they join their names to the church-roll, but beyond the form and outward confession of belief there is no change in them. There is but a very little if any of the Enoch-like communion among church-members to-day.

There is a lack of faith upon the earth. Not a lack of mental knowledge concerning God, but the great mass of the church reject the truth of God, both as an outward revelation and an inward life. There is neither the witness of martyrdom like that of Abel, nor the testimony of communion like that of Enoch, to any extent. Men do not pray for the manifestation of physical good from the Lord to heal the sick, nor do they expect the gifts of the Spirit among them wherewith they may glorify God, because they lack faith power. This is a sure indication of the end.

The lack of faith power is an evidence that the grace of God is being rejected of this generation. They honor God with their lips, but their hearts are far from him. Jesus will come to judgment upon a professed church, who, like Israel of old, have departed from God. He will spue them out of his mouth. Let us not be of that number, but rather among those that are Christ's.

THE TONGUE FOR JESUS.

Our conversation should show the influence of religion. Those who have no interest in Christ look for pleasure in foolish jesting and idle nonsense; but let the christian show by his conversation that he is under the influence of better things. All through the Scriptures foolish nonsense and vain babblings are plainly and strictly forbidden. If any one is not satisfied upon this subject let him examine the writings of the apostles from beginning to end. Yet, if we are to judge from the conversation we frequently hear around us, little heed is given to the teaching of the divine word. Very often the general course of conversation is simply disgusting to persons of refined tastes and christian feelings. Hear the following words of Jesus: "But I say unto you, that every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment." Let us weigh our words by this text.

Sometimes, as I notice the conversation of persons, I wonder how their words would weigh in the balance of eternal justice, if called to the judgment seat. The christian has better things to engage his thought than idle nonsense. We should be cheerful; but there is a great difference between cheerfulness and idle frivolity. The influence of jesting and frivolous conversation is especially evil when carried on in the presence of awakened sinners and persons deeply interested in the welfare of their souls. Good feelings may be driven from the heart by the influence of light and trifling conversation. "Only let your conversation be as becometh the gospel of Christ."

PROPHETIC UTTERANCES AND THEIR ACCOMPLISHMENT.

A prophetic declaration is a statement that certain events will transpire. Isaiah's prophetic utterance was—"A virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and thou shalt call his name Immanuel." Isa. 7: 14. Another voice applied the sentence, expressing its fulfillment thus: "Then Joseph being raised from sleep did as the angel of the Lord had bidden him, and took unto him his wife; and knew her not till she had brought forth her first-born son; and he called his name Jesus. Matt. 1: 24, 25. The repeating utterance presents the same facts as the prophetic voice.

God has been pleased in his infinite wisdom and love to present in prophetic communications all the great, important events of this world, affecting the interests of his people and the welfare of humanity. To this the prophet gives testimony and says: "Surely the Lord God will do nothing but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets" (Amos 3: 7); that is, he will not manifest his Godship in producing momentous and characteristic events of the ages without first revealing his purpose to do so unto his people.

A general outline history of the worid in its different departments as experienced by all the generations in the past has been thus given. When prophetic events take place an excitement is always produced by them, calling the public eye to witness them, and the true church has aways stood ready to give testimony to them, as did Peter: "This is that spoken by the prophet."

Reader, run the eye back over the period of Bible and church history, and see if God has ever failed to make such declarations, relating to all times, and if the church has ever failed to recognize their fulfillment and proclaim it.

Are there any events of the present period which must be reckoned in the class of extraordinary occurrences, especially affecting this generation, or shall we say with the scoffers that "All things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation"? All except scoffers will acknowledge that the present events are not a stereotype edition of the past, but many of them are strangely new, and threaten a general revolution of all earthly things. If so, then, according to the word of God and his dealings with men in all the past, a prophetic history of the great events which characterize these days must be found somewhere in the sacred Book. If so, it follows that it is the duty of the servants of God to find those divine utterances and echo their voice to the people.

God's commandment requires this. The prophet said, "Blow ye the trumpet in Zion, sound an alarm in my holy mountain; let all the inhabitants of the land tremble; for the day of the Lord cometh, for it is nigh at hand." Joel 2: 1. Zephaniah said, "The great day of the Lord is near, it is near, and hasteth greatly, even the voice of the day of the Lord; the mighty men shall cry there bitterly." Chap. 1: 14. The Psalmist expressed the same truth in a most impressive manner thus: "He uttered his voice, the earth melted." Ps. 46: 6. The voice is a message from God, a warning of coming judgment, of the approaching dissolution of all earthly things. It is the Revelator's angel message to all nations, saying, "The hour of his judgment is come." Rev. 14: 6. It was also distinctly stated by the Savior. He said: "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached [the voices of the prophets echoed] in all the world for a witness [proof] unto all nations [that the end approacheth], and then shall the end come." Matt. 24: 14.

That this voice or message is an echo from the prophets appears plain from Paul's testimony of its typical application to the Jews. He said, "For they that dwell at Jerusalem, and their rulers, because they knew not, nor yet the voices of the prophets which are read every Sabbath day, they have fulfilled them in condemning him." Acts 13: 27. Why did the Jews condemn Jesus? Because they knew not the voices of the prophets which proclaimed just such an one as Mary's son, who was then before them, as the Messiah. They could not understand the real echo of a voice, which voice had been changed, as they had been wont to hear it, from its proper sound. In other words, a prediction of an event cannot be understood in its fulfillment by those who misinterpret it, for they will apply it to a different event from the one foretold and before them.

A literal interpretation of a prophetic statement is always correct, for God has never fulfilled any only literally. Such a statement can be made impressive and embellished by symbols and figures, but the statement itself, in every case in the past has been accomplished according to the legitimate meaning of the words used. O reader, we pray that God may impress this infinitely important truth upon your heart, that the rule of mystical interpretation of God's word has been the fatal rock upon which humanity has stranded from the beginning.

What public speaker would allow himself to address an audience, knowing that each auditor assumed the right to interpret his sentences mystically, according to the individual fancy of each, all having a right to report his positions and sentiments according to their deductions? No man of intelligence would put himself in such a position for a moment, especially among his enemies. An inveterate foe of a speaker might labor to cause his audience to treat his sayings thus, so as to misrepresent and defame him before the public, but a friend could never do so.

Satan has ever manifested his enmity against God by laboring to cause the human family to accept of his license to interpret God's revelations according to their fancies, produced by a satanic inspiration, designed to misrepresent and defame the great Author of inspired truth.

Is there an echoing voice now sounding upon the ear of this generation, presenting prophetic declarations and their duplicates in the historic sentences now being written? What is the great alpha subject of the present time, now being recorded by the historian? All intelligent people will answer, The increasing antagonism between the great religious bodies and the civil powers of the world. The first class, as to numbers, wealth and power, is the Roman Church. This church found herself waning as to political power and influence over the States, and made a gigantic effort to reinstate herself as the only divinely appointed head of all earthly governments, ecclesiastical and political. To accomplish this it was thought necessary to declare the Pope invested with the power of infallibility, politically and ecclesiastically, thus rendering his decisions the best for the interests of our race that can possibly be made by humanity. The principle involved the idea that from henceforth all political rulers should submit all questions for arbitration to the Pope, whose decisions should be final, because infallible, and thus end all war, and introduce the reign of Christ through his vicegerent—the Pope. To this proposition all the kings have dissented.

This great question has for the last few years called forth mighty efforts by hundreds of millions, to produce a final settlement of the question, Who shall rule the world, the kings or the Pope? Is this subject prophetic? and if so where are the predictions of it found, and who will echo the voice of the prophets upon the subject? The prophet said, "I beheld then because of the voice of the great words which the horn spake; I beheld even till the beast was slain, and his body destroyed, and given to the burning flame." Dan. 7: 11. This passage is a clear statement of the final destruction of the Roman power, and the particular cause producing it, even the great words (decrees) spoken (promulgated as law) by the mouth (church) of the Roman horn.

In 1869 the church of Rome did assemble in an ecuminical council, which spake greater words of blasphemy than were ever before spoken by men, declaring the Pope possessed of infallibility, an attribute of Deity. It is a fact that that "Vatican Decree" was interpreted by the kings and rulers of the Roman nations as intended to take the real sovereignty of the States away from them, and give it to the Roman Church. This has produced a settled antagonism between the States and Church, each preparing to defend its position by the sword. All of this corresponds exactly with the prophet, only lacking the destruction foretold.

The Revelator saw the same things and described them thus: "The ten horns which thou sawest upon the beast [civil governments], these shall hate the whore [the church], and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh and burn her with fire." Rev. 17: 16. Both of the prophets were describing the Roman power in its final overthrow, in these passages; and each represented its destruction as complete as if burned by "fire."

We look upon the above circumstances as being as complete a fulfillment of those predictions, excepting the burning, as was ever witnessed of any divine predictions in the past, and that it is as much the duty of the servants of God to echo the voices of the prophets in this case as it was in those of earlier times.

There is another question and subject running parallel with the above, which is producing, if possible, more terrific national spasms, and is more threatening to the peace of Europe at the present time. We refer to the "Eastern Question" and situation of Turkey.

We purpose in this article to refer to but two or three prominent facts connected with that subject, which is now producing worldwide excitement. (1) The situation of Turkey now threatens a general war among the Roman powers, just such as the prophecies represent will take place at the end of the gospel.

(2) The rulers of the nations are now making great efforts to prevent a general war, as foretold, illustrated by the four angels holding the four winds (Rev. 7), and the kings refusing to drink the cup of God's wrath (Jer. 25: 28), and as described by Paul—"When they shall say, Peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them."

(3) The king of the north, or Turkey, is now plunged into a threatening war, and for the first time when in war for nearly a hundred years is left to her own resources; all the great nations uniting in declaring that they will not render assistance to either of the combatants.

The prophet says—"He shall come to his end and none shall help him." If the Sultan should be overpowered by the Christian insurgents and driven out of Europe, while the other nations remain neutral, as they now declare they will do, it would be a most striking literal fulfillment of the prediction.

(4) The prophet says—"He [Turkey] shall go forth with great fury to destroy and utterly to make away many." Dan. 11: 44. Mr. Newton informs us that the original of the expression "great fury to destroy" gives the idea of religious intolerance; one class of worshipers infuriated to destroy another class of worshipers.

It is a well known fact that the present war in Turkey is really the Mohammedans against the Christians, and that a spirit of terrible revenge and desire to exterminate the Christian population is rapidly increasing among the Mohammedans, and hard to be restrained. Speaking of the spirit that characterizes the Turks in this struggle, the London Times says: "The whole system [Turkish government] is rotten to its core, and if the Turks are permitted to continue the struggle against the Herzgovinians, we shall be horrified by deeds of atrocity that will make civilized Europe ashamed. . . . . The feelings of the Mohammedans and Christians in the disturbed districts are so embittered, that no one could make them into a happy family." Again the writer says—"To burn villages, murder infants, outrage wives, and carry off daughters, are not means of pacification, and these appear to be the daily practices of the Sultan's soldiers when they are successful in their operations.

It is difficult for us to conceive how facts could be more perfectly in harmony with predictions than are these with the descriptions given by the prophets. The prophet Daniel proceeds to describe the scenes which shall follow the destruction of this king, when none shall help him, and says, "There shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation, even to that same time." ch. 12: 1. We will not attempt to predict what the present European troubles may result in, only as the Lord appears to describe it to us; but it is remarkable to read what God has said about these events, and see how they agree with what political writers anticipate will follow the present national perplexities.

A writer in the New York Herald, referring to what will probably grow out of the present Turkish troubles, says:

"The death of Abdul-Aziz takes place when Europe is seething from end to end with excitement; when the wildest rumors of coalitions obtain belief; when Austria is timidly hesitating whether to join England or Russia; when Russia is holding Servia and Montenegro in leash and looking even to Greece and Egypt for allies; and when Germany with her enormous war power stands as an arbiter waiting to cast her sword in one or other of the scales, and stay or precipitate a fight of Titans that will shake Europe till the fabled war upon Jove Olympus, with its crash of hurled mountains, will no longer be a figure to invoke when one would picture in a phrase the terrors of a mighty fray. The ghost of Abdul-Aziz may look down from the bosom of the Prophet upon a blazing pyre, in which the throne of Islam shall be burned before the eyes of all Europe in arms, and to the thunderous music of its guns."

This is truly an age full of prophetic wonders; a time when the car of Providence seems to be thundering through the world, freighted with divine authority, wheeling into line the kingdoms and peoples for the last "clash of arms," beyond which the notes of peace will eternally happify the inhabitants of a deathless world.

CONFERENCE REPORTS.—We wish to make a suggestion to the Secretaries of Conferences. Write a full report to be kept for the use of the Conference, but send to the Crisis, for publication, only that which will be interesting to the general reader. Please remember this.

CORRECTION.—In the last Crisis it is stated that "one million persons" are out of work in New York City. It should read one hundred thousand.

THE SPRINGFIELD CAMPMEETING.—We are expecting that our next National Campmeeting at Springfield, Mass., commencing Aug. 12th, will be the best we have ever had on that ground. Let all interested make it a subject of special prayer, that the Lord will pour out his Holy Spirit on that meeting in a wonderful manner.

TURKISH WAR.—The Turkish war continues to grow wider and more bloody, though probably but just begun. It is expected, by those best qualified to judge, that terrible results are yet to be witnessed.

THIEF ON THE CROSS.—The Cottage Bible reads, "And he said unto Jesus, Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom. And Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto you to day, when I come into my kingdom thou shalt be with me in paradise."

We believe this punctuation gives the true idea intended to be conveyed by the Savior.

In the remains of the ancient four gospels in Syriac, translated by Wm. Cureton, D. D. F. R. S., written as supposed about the fifth century, the passage reads as follows: "Verily I say to thee to-day, that with me thou shalt be in the Eden's garden." This corresponds with the reading in the Cottage Bible, and harmonizes with all other scriptures relating to the subject. Why not accept it with gladness and confidence?

PENALTY OF THE LAW.

We have been much interested in reading an article on the penalty for sin, which was published in the Methodist Quarterly Review, April 1867. The article is from the pen of Bro. S. M. Merrill, D. D., who was the editor of the Western Christian Advocate, but is now one of the Methodist Episcopal Bishops. In another column may be found a part of the article. A Methodist minister of the New England Conference, when expressing his understanding of the article, says: "I have read very carefully Dr. Merrill's article in the Quarterly of April, 1867, and if the final extinction of those who have not improved their probation is not logically taught, I am unable to comprehend Dr. Merrill's reasoning." Such is also our conclusion. He does not hint that he believes the Bible teaches that the penalty for sin is eternal misery. May the Lord help those who see the light to let it shine.

PLAINVILLE TENT-MEETING.

July 4th, we commenced a tent-meeting in Plainville, Ct., and continued it over the 9th. The audiences were large, intelligent, and attentive. The order was perfect. All the ministers in the place attended, and manifested a very kind, brotherly feeling. At the close of the meetings, one came up to express his thanks for the light and benefit he had received from the meetings. Several church meetings were adjourned or postponed during the week, so that all could attend the meetings in the tent. We gave six discourses from "the great chart," showing that Jesus is about to return the second time. The evidence was joyfully received by a large number. Some eleven or twelve different preachers were present during the progress of the meeting. Among these were Brn. R. K. Starks, O. D. Woodruff, Seth Woodruff, A. Elliott, G. L. White, B. Hitchcock, and Sr. Crumb. The Brn. and Srs. came in from Bristol, Forestville, Southington, Collinsville, New Britain, and Hartford.

The meetings were excellent. We had the sacrament of the Lord's Supper Sabbath evening, when some sixty or seventy gathered about the table to commemorate the sufferings of Jesus. The Spirit of the Lord was very graciously present, and many were quickened in divine life, having decided to consecrate all to Christ. Union meetings have been held in the place for some time, which have produced good results. This is a movement that the Lord owns and blesses, wherever the union is in the Spirit of Christ. The time has come when all the true disciples of Jesus should lay aside their sectarian prejudices, and unite to wait for the coming of the Son of man.

MRS. WHITE'S VISIONS.

The following concerning Mrs. E. G. White's visions, is from the editor of the Sabbath Advocate. The writer is most thoroughly prepared to speak on the subject. He is still a Seventh-day Sabbath keeper, but facts have compelled him, as an honest man, to lose all confidence in Mrs. White's visions. Many others have been obliged to come to the same conclusion, and to separate from the church, whose headquarters are at Battle Creek, where Mrs. White's visions are accepted as of divine origin. The Sabbath Advocate is published and supported by those who reject Mrs. White's visions. The letter from the Editor is as follows:

DEAR BROTHER: I believe you are standing in relation to Mrs. White's visions very much as I was, and therefore I would say a few words on that subject, though I was a firm believer in those visions for about six years, and it was a great trial to me to renounce them; but when there was evidence presented to me, the genuineness of which is without doubt, some of her earlier visions which are contradictory to later ones, this showed me that they were not from God, though there were some features of her visions I could not explain. So with Modern Spiritism, there are unexplainable features of it, so its followers claim that it is really communications from the departed spirits of the dead. To me it is very plain that Mrs. White's visions have no higher source than her own mind, except as she is influenced by others, and by surrounding circumstances. It is very strange to me how her friends can treat them as they do with the high claim they make for them; for in republishing them they leave out a great deal more than personal matters, and some of the early visions can not be had at all through them.

A careful survey of their history shows that they have developed nothing beyond human foresight; the theories or points of faith are all brought out first by others, and after she understands them, then, in her trance states, these things pass through her mind. As to "personal matters," we know that in several cases she had knowledge of the facts before she saw or gave the vision. If we were better acquainted with her and her history, much that now seems so mysterious to many could be accounted for. Although they have such a great oracle or gift (?) among them, which gave reproofs and testimony of personal matters, often of very trivial and slight affairs, yet that oracle did not point out a most notable disgrace their cause suffered for several years, by the wicked course of one who was a prominent minister among them, simply because Mrs. White, nor the leaders of their work, knew nothing about it.

The people who set so high a value on those visions would be better off without them (except in a financial consideration), for then they would depend more on the teaching of the Bible and Bible godliness, than so much on what "Sister White says or does." The course of those visions and those who rule with them, has been to distract and divide churches, entirely ruining the faith of some, and engendering strife and unchristian feeling between others; for facts show for themselves.

The reason why Mrs. White's visions are contradictory to the Bible on the sanctuary question, the desolation of the earth during the thousand year period, and some other subjects, is because that her visions are always according to what she believed at the time she saw those visions; consequently when she holds erroneous ideas the visions she sees must correspond. Were she a believer in Modern Spiritism she would see that kind of visions. Thus, when she and those associated with her, after the disappointment in 1844, believed there was no more salvation for sinners, the visions taught the same shut-door doctrine.

The same thing accounts for the good teachings so many refer to, as the fruit or character of her work. As she is a professing christian, endeavoring to live a godly life, of course, then, her teachings would be of the same kind. So was the teaching of Ann Lee, the Shaker prophetess; and her followers live such devoted lives that many have been induced to join them, believing them to be the true people of the Lord, on account of their moral and devoted lives. Among them are persons who see visions while in trance states, and of course the visions correspond with the Shaker faith.

As to "miracles," her healing the sick, with others, is in accordance with the testimony of James 5: 14, 15, and was not confined to her and her associates. Other people have done the same. But do you read of any late cases of the kind with her?

We feel sorrow and pity for those under the vision delusion, and those who have been similarly situated know best how to sympathize with them. They are almost unapproachable on the subject, and but few will listen to anything against them. They feel and often say that is is sin to doubt them. We will treat the subject with respect, though to believe those visions divinely inspired is the height of fanaticism.

JACOB BRINKERHOFF."

The writer also says: "Those visions are one of the greatest deceptions of the last days, because practiced upon an honest people, who are seeking after godliness."

UNAVOIDABLE DELAY.—There has been a delay, unavoidable, in getting out "Mormonism Examined," so it may not be sent out till into the first or second week in August. Meanwhile ministers may order it (of the author) at 25 cts., and others at 40 cts. It may afterwards be 50 cts. This delay has also postponed the issue of other works ready for press—one of about 60 pp., another of about 40 pp., and others smaller—as we wished to get funds from the sale of this to publish those.

OUR BELIEF AND FAITH.

THOS. FITZSIMONS.

We do not believe that the Lord will suffer the host of his servants, who have testified to his name and coming, to become a laughing-stock among his enemies, but will verify their witness. He has always fulfilled the mouths of his servants. He fulfilled those of Noah, and Moses, and Ezekiel, and Isaiah, and Daniel, and John, and which ever of all the prophets, at the time appointed, has he not fulfilled? With these we are brethren in the same bond, Christ. Therefore, let no deception fill the minds of men on this point; viz., that the same bond, Christ, and the same Spirit, the Holy Ghost, is not the same almighty and inscrutable power, operating to-day as then; i. e., moving his servants to testify to his name and coming.

We think the numbers, learning and piety of the vast body of christians, who within the past century as with one accord, and great harmony over the world, have proclaimed our Lord's near coming, cannot be mistaken; or this light, or witness of themselves, but must, in view of all the facts, and Scripture, have a higher and surer foundation. Believest thou this, reader?

Philadelphia, Pa.

AN ARMY OF TRAMPS.—In Iowa the fraternity of tramps has assumed the dimensions of an army, and they move in large bodies from one place to another, not hesitating to take possession of railroad trains to facilitate their movements. They create a general alarm wherever they appear, since their great number makes it useless for individuals to attempt to resist their demands. In some places the town authorities organize a force to protect the citizens. The Davenport Democrat says that on the 7th inst. dispatches were received that five hundred men were coming that morning, and that the Mayor of Rock Island had issued a proclamation calling upon the citizens to take measures to organize to protect themselves and their interests. On receipt of this, measures were at once taken to organize a force to keep the tramps in order. The conductors of the St. Louis trains meet with great trouble from the tramps. On the 6th several hundred of them boarded a freight train at Beardstown, and could not be induced to get off. The conductor telegraphed to Monmouth for the agent to have some assistance on hand to remove them. A number of citizens turned out, and the train was rid of about two hundred. But after the train had started others were observed hidden in box cars, and considerable persuasion had to be used to get them off. They claim to be harvest hands, and want to get to Iowa. Another freight train was boarded by three hundred tramps, who rode as far as they pleased and then got off. The Democrat says that over five hundred of these pests had arrived at Davenport during the previous twenty-four hours, and were roaming over the city demanding work and food. At a meeting of the City Council it was decided to throw open the Market House as a place of rendezvous for these tramps, where all found on the streets after dark will be compelled to go, and then a guard will be placed around, preventing any of them from leaving before morning.—Boston Journal.

NOTES BY THE WAY IN ALABAMA, GEORGIA, AND TENNESSEE.

TO THE A. A. M. SOCIETY.

Dear Brethren:—My last left me, June 6th, at Bro. Payne's, in Dekalb Co., Ala. From there Bro. Livingston and myself went to Bro. Long's, and learned that the M. E. Church house was free for us. We held one meeting, and as the people were very busy harvesting wheat, we thought best to pass on. That night we spent very pleasantly with Bro. and Sr. Castlebury. Next day, by invitation, we visited the family of Mr. George Cureton, and in the afternoon we walked to Bro. Benj. Wilkinson's, where we spent the time till next morning. I visited near here the family of Sr. Thompson, who really loves Jesus; and her children, who are all grown, are all religious. They are a happy family, and I enjoyed the fulness of the Spirit while spending the time with them. We then visited the family of Bro. Stevens, where Bro. Livingston suffered much with flux. Here I left him, and went at night to Trenton, the county seat of Dade Co., Ga., and tried to speak to a full house, who gave good attention. I then stayed over with Bro. Zachary Oneal's family, and returned next morning to Bro. Stevens'. Found Bro. L. so much better that he spoke that evening with good effect, and after meeting went with a wicked man, who professed conversion before day. On Saturday A. M., we left Dade Co., Ga., and ascended Sand Mountain to Shilo church, in Dekalb Co., Ala., where Bro. L. spoke to the dear brethren and sisters, who seemed to be glad to see me after my long absence.

Sunday A. M., we had one of the best social meetings I ever enjoyed; after which Bro. L. and myself spoke to a large and attentive audience. We then reached my home on Monday, and found my dear family in the hands of the Lord, and I do praise him for his goodness. We spent the week, preaching evenings in my own community; and on Friday, before the third Sunday, while Bro. L. went to Oak Grove church for me, I visited the church near Bro. J. J. Smith's, and held meetings over Sunday P. M. The people seemed interested, and we had a good time. Spent the week again around home, and the fourth Saturday and Sunday, while Bro. L. went to meet Bro. Smith at Bethesda, I was to go to Peter's Pond; but being so nearly worn out from preaching so much, I was unable to go. Saturday morning I fainted, and was unconscious for a short time, after which I was very sick all day. My friends seem to think me very imprudent to wear myself out so, and often tell me to stop and rest. How can I stand still when I believe Jesus is at the door, and when I feel burdened with the judgment message to a wicked and perverse generation?

The first Sunday in July we visited Bethel church, near Ooltewah, Tenn., and held four meetings, which were indeed heavenly sittings. We had a social meeting, preaching, communion, etc.; then went with Bro. and Sr. Taylor, whose daughter is in poor health. Monday, we visited Bro. and Sr. Mitchell, who loves the same blessed hope. Found Sr. Mitchell prostrated from a long spell of the fever. Pray for these two sisters, as well as Sr. Melinda Smith. We also visited Bro. Caleb Smith twice; he is the father of Bro. J. J. Smith. He was eighty-six years old June 30th, and seems all aglow with the love of Jesus, and the hope of seeing him soon. It is a privilege to visit him and hear the old pilgrim talk about his buoyant hope. He says that infidels may ridicule Christianity, but he can tell them that he has tested the matter fully, and knows whereof he speaks; that at all times when needed most, the Lord has been present with more than a brother's love. Praise God for such brilliant lights as father Smith.

Notwithstanding all the besetments and trials, Bethel church clings to the cross, and I believe is the salt of the earth in that community. This week I have spent partly in resting, and searching the good books so kindly given me at campmeeting by Brn. Hastings, Davis, Lombard and King. These dear brethren cannot realize the good those books are to me. To-morrow I start with my family in an ox wagon twenty miles to camp, and hold a week's meeting with other brethren. I hope and pray that Jesus will come soon and relieve us of such labor. But if I fall before his coming, I mean to die at my post, and by his grace get the kingdom. Will see you at campmeeting, if I can get the funds to pay my fare. Pray for the work here.

Correspondence.

From Bro. Geo. Thomson.

Dear Brethren:—I am somewhat behindhand in writing this time, in consequence of being so poorly. Since my last letter I have had the most severe attack I have experienced since my affliction. What I suffered, none but my dear Lord knows. I thought my work was done, and my sufferings about to end in death. And oh, in my agony I prayed it might end in any way. But the good Lord sent relief, and I am still on the waiting list. Oh, how I long for deliverance; for this dark night of suffering to close; for the day-dawn; for the day-star to appear; for a sudden translation through the gates of immortality into the land where the inhabitants shall never say "I am sick." Well, dear fellow-sufferers, "a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry." And what will he do? He will take away "the rebuke of his people"; "he will swallow up death in victory"; he will dry your eyes, suffering and mourning weeper. Can it be a reality that there is to be a state of existence where sin, with all its dark, damning train of evil will be known no more? Yes, God has declared it, and I believe it with all my heart. O let us be good, and we shall see it.

I cannot close this letter without making special reference to some of the letters I have received. While all have been very welcome, some have been so full of good cheer, such kind words of encouragement, that my poor heart has been much comforted, and I have been led to exclaim, Thank God for kind christian friends. I should like to answer such personally, were I able to do so; but this must suffice. May the Lord abundantly bless you all.

A word also for the letters in the paper. They do me good; and while I enjoy the profounder articles and editorials, the letters seem more home-like, more social; possessing a kind of love-feast quality, which make me feel sometimes as though I was conversing with dear ones, many of whom I have never seen. I must close. Remember me.

Prairie du Sac, Wis., July 9th, 1876.

BRO. C. MENDENHALL, Norwalk, Ohio, July 5th, writes:—"Sunday, June 25th, I preached my farewell sermon here. My stay here has been pleasant, and profitable (spiritually). All is and has been harmonious between the church and myself. Other reasons have caused our relationship to change. Last Sunday, July 2nd, I preached in Liberty Centre, of this State, and baptized five persons. Monday evening, we met at the residence of Bro. Wilson Brown, and had a glorious prayer-meeting; after which the Lord's Supper was administered. We then organized in church fellowship upon the following covenant:

'We do hereby covenant and agree to walk together as a "church of Christ," exercising mutual watch-care over each other, taking the Bible for our creed, making christian character the only test of fellowship.'

Eleven persons united with us. Bro. Andrew Smith was chosen deacon; Bro. D. K. Bowker, Treasurer; Dr. L. Brown, Clerk; C. Mendenhall, Pastor. Pray for the 'little flock.'

I am again in the mission field, and am ready to go where the Lord directs. I am trusting fully in Jesus. Pray for me. Had a good time in Lexington, Mich. Expect, the Lord willing, to return to Wilmington, Del., August 1st, to remain two or three months. Shall labor as the way opens.

I have made a reform in my eating since April 1st. I use no salt, pepper, pickles, or condiments of any kind. Use Graham gems, oatmeal; no soda, yeast, or butter. At first it seemed a little difficult, but the Lord has blessed me, and I have found a cure for the headache, which used to cause me so much suffering. I use at times, perhaps average twice a week, a little fresh lean beef; no salt meat, nor pork, which I never did consider fit to eat."

ROMANIZING THE COLORED MEN.—The Christian at Work, observing that the consecration in Washington of a Roman Catholic church built by colored people is probably only the first occurrence of the kind which will soon become common, concludes: "No one is puzzled with fewer doubts or questionings than the simple-minded, uncultured negro, who, unlike the Brahmin, has no skepticism born of culture, but is disposed rather to accept without doubt whatever is imparted by a superior mind. There can be no doubt that the Catholic Church sees her opportunity and will not be slow to improve it. The question becomes, then, an important one: What will the Protestant Church do? She has this advantage, that to a considerble extent she already occupies the ground, and whatever educational facilities the negro has are administered through her hands. But it will not do for the Protestant Church to rest here, not merely because the Catholic Church is moving in the matter, but for the better reason that the welfare of the negro demands it, and because it is the most solemn duty of the church of Christ to preach his gospel to these poor creatures. The call is an urgent one; it is an important one, demanding the putting forth of earnest work at once. And this work cannot be neglected without harm to the negro, evil to the country, and injury to the cause of Christ.—New York Daily Witness.

Twenty-five thousand Russian volunteers, it is reported, are ready to march to the assistance of Servia, and have asked the Roumanian Government for permission to pass through its territory, which application is a source of embarrassment to the Roumanian Government.

MORRILL. In South Deerfield, N. H., May 29th, 1876, of paralysis, Angeline M., wife of Eld. Enoch Morrill, aged forty-one years and sixteen days.

Sister Morrill gave herself to the Lord, was baptized, and united with the Freewill Baptist Church at sixteen years of age; where she remained a worthy and much esteemed member until 1867, when she embraced the Advent faith, which filled her soul with new glory, and she gave herself anew to the Lord, and also gave her husband up to the gospel ministry, and was in perfect sympathy with all his labors. In her domestic affairs she was very economical and self-sacrificing, to enable him to be out in the mission field, where she followed him by her prayers, sympathy, and cheering epistles. Bro. Morrill will miss her comforting and encouraging words when he returns from his labors. His faithful son, who has tried to fill father's place when gone, in caring for mother, will miss her counsel and prayers. The four young children left behind will miss mother's tender care; but God, we trust, will soon bring all of the family together, never to part again. Funeral service at Bro. M.'s residence. REED. In Jacksonville, Fla., July 3d, 1876, Mrs. Mary E. Reed, wife of Frank Reed, in the forty-first year of her age.

For years she has been a great sufferer with rheumatism, and came to this land of flowers and sunshine in hopes of finding relief; but it was all in vain. Disease had too fast hold upon her, and death has laid her low with its millions. But her's was the blessed hope, and she awaits the resurrection of the just. She loved the Crisis, and the glad tidings that the kingdom is near.

Rest, suffering one, from all thy pain,
No care can reach thee now;
When Christ returns to earth again,
A crown shall deck thy brow.

FOREIGN NEWS.

THE EASTERN WAR.

LONDON, July 11. The Paris correspondent of the Times, reviewing the Eastern situation, says it is the opinion of competent men that nothing decisive has occurred.

All that is now transpiring must be considered as a mere series of attempts by the Servians to join the Montenegrins, and such junction when effected will be the real beginning of the war.

A Ragusa special to the Times says the Montenegrin operations were delayed in order to give the insurgents time to reorganize and arm. This being completed, the Montenegrins resumed the pursuit of the Turkish army in Herzegovina.

According to the latest reports Dervesh Pasha was preparing to attack their southern frontier. The Montenegrins hold good defensive positions.

The Times' Vienna dispatch says that according to concurrent accounts from Widden and Belgrade, Osmon Pasha has withdrawn from before Saitzchar, having failed to force the position and his flank being threatened.

A Paris special says Mehmet Ali has been driven back.

Sclavonic Journals repeat the statement that the Russian Prince Vladimir is at Alexinatz, incognito.

A dispatch from Constantinople, dated 10th, says: "A great battle was fought to-day near Pirot. The result is not yet known.

A special from Vienna announces that the German squadron left Salonica on Sunday, with sealed orders, to be opened at sea.

A Berlin telegram asserts that the Porte will soon finally notify the Powers that it cannot recognize the Servians or Montenegrins as belligerents.

July 13. The Times' Servian correspondent at Ragusa telegraphs that the Servians are bombarding Nisch, Novibazar, Widden and Bjelina. The frontier is entirely clear of Turks.

Accounts from manufacturing and mining centres continue to be burdened with complaints of business depression. Employers are everywhere reducing wages or extending working hours. The workmen are preparing to resist and it is feared that great strikes will be the result.

The Daily News Belgrade special says it is stated that the Bashi Bazouks in Tabarbazardick, district of Bulgaria, boastfully paraded a cart load of heads of murdered women and children. Zach becomes War Minister.

The News' Pesth special says the Servian Government intends to conscript all the inhabitants who cannot prove themselves foreigners.

July 13. The Pall Mall Gazette publishes a letter from its Belgrade correspondent, dated July 7. The writer says: "An order is published to-day directing that all persons not soldiers attached to the army as transport commissaries, ambulance superintendents and surgeons shall wear a medallion bearing the words, 'Milan I., King of Servia.'" This is the first indication of the ambition of Prince Milan. These words are received here as having great political meaning. We shall no longer hear of Prince Milan's loyalty to the Porte, and there can be no doubt that the war is for complete separation.

The Standard's Belgrade special says: "I am assured that 7000 Servians, wounded, are lying in the villages on the rivers Sare and Morara. Bedding, bandages, and medical requisites are sadly deficient. There are no surgeons or trained nurses.

I hear the Turks take no prisoners and systematically refuse to give quarter. The Servians are reported more humane. The line Timok and position of Saitscher is still the important point and where the tug of war will take place. Gen. Leschganin's forces have been raised to 30,000 men."

The Times' Berlin special says the closing of Klek will, it is believed, seriously damage the Turks, as thereafter it will be impossible to send reinforcements to Bosnia and Herzegovina except through a narrow strip of Bosnian territory between Montenegro and Servia, which, at present, is invaded by three Servian columns.

BELGRADE, July 13. Gen. Leschganin, who, according to the latest intelligence, had penetrated some distance into the Pachalik of Widden, yesterday attacked the Turkish positions and captured several stragetical points.

The fighting lasted the whole day. The Servian loss is small. The Servians pursued the Turks to Widden and captured a quantity of provisions. The gates of Widden are now closed.

An official despatch says Osman Pacha attacked the Servians under Gen. Leschjanins, near Satscha, on Wednesday. The Turks assaulted the Servian position five times, but were successively repulsed with heavy loss. The Turks finally retreated on Widden.

July 16. Letters from Alexinatz state that the Circassians burned two villages near Babinglava, murdering men and cutting children to pieces.

RAGUSA, July 15. The Turkish corps which is surrounded at Metochija proposed to capitulate Thursday. The Montenegrins have occupied the whole district of Gatchko, with the exception of the intrenchments commanding the town, in which 2000 Turks are surrounded. A considerable body of Montenegrins marched toward Nevesinje, where a battle will probably be fought.

July 16. The news from Sclavonic sources announce that the Servians, after a desperate engagement, were defeated at Limborg on the 14th inst.

The Turks captured a Servian cannon and large booty, as well as their boats on the Drina by which the Servians intended to invade the Turkish territory. The boats were destroyed. The Servians lost 500 men the Turks 300.

The Standard's Semlin correspondent has interviewed the Revolutionary Committee, who have removed to Semlin from Bucharest.

The members state positively that a rising of the Bulgarians is thoroughly arranged and will break out immediately after the first Servian victory.

BELGRADE, July 17.—The cruelties of the Turkish troops in Bulgaria and Bosnia, inflicted upon women and children, continue. Hundreds of helpless females have been massacred; children are thrown in the air and caught upon the bayonets of soldiers, and men taken as prisoners are mutilated. Many villages have been burned by the Turks.

All accounts except the Turkish official reports agree as to the successful and almost unresisted march of Montenegrins into Herzegovina.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Washington, July 11. The excessive heat of the last few days continues. For the first time in the history of Washington, building operations have been discontinued owing to the extreme heat. Since Saturday there have been twelve deaths, and numerous persons are in a dangerous condition from the effects of sunstrokes and various diseases superinduced by the high temperature. Some twenty horses, mostly belonging to the street railway companies, have died from the same cause.

SPIRITUALISM DECIDED TO BE JUGGLERY.—For a whole week there was an argument before Judge Donohue, in the Supreme Court Chambers, on an application by Mr. Robinson, counsel for the Society for the Reformation of juvenile delinquents (who are entitled under a special act to all theatrical license fees), to compel Mrs. Anna Eva Fay, who advertises seances as a spiritual medium to take out a juggler's license. Judge Donohue in his decision says:

"It seems to me, after a careful consideration of the facts of the case, that the defendant comes within the statute, and must be restrained."

Special Notice to Conn. Brethren.

For the general comfort of those attending our campmeeting, some improvements are needed on the camp-ground. It has been decided to make a sufficient number of new seats with backs, to accommodate five hundred persons. The lumber will be delivered on the ground cut up, and each part fitted ready to put together. There is some other work necessary to be done on the ground, and if our brethren generally will come or send a man, and give us one day's work, it will greatly lighten the burden and reduce the expense. To this end, we invite you to come to the camp ground in good season, Wednesday, August 23d (or if stormy the next fair day.) Joiners' tools are wanted to build the seats; and axes, hoes, rakes, and crowbars to do the other work. Let every man bring tools of some kind with him, and not be dependent on his neighbor. Brethren, please don't forget to respond to this invitation.

For the Committee, O. D. WOODRUFF.

Notice.

We would say to those brethren and sisters who pledged money to help put the new East Maine Mission Tent into the field, to tell the glad story of Jesus' soon coming, that a part or all is now very much needed, as the tent is wanted in several places. Shall it go into the harvest field at once? Please enclose a part, or all, on reading this, and direct to the Treasurer, Jer. Carr, South Albion, Me., or hand it to any one of the Committee, who will forward it. Work while the day lasts.

JER. CARR.

It is hoped that there may be a full attendance of delegates, and it is suggested, if any conferences entitled to representation in this Association have as yet failed to appoint their delegates, that they will appoint them in due season for this meeting, which will be one of great importance.

It is important that the Secretary of the N. H. Advent Christian Conference be informed without delay of the number of members of the churches in the State, that we may know how many delegates to send to the Advent Christian Association. TENT MEETING.

The Mass. Mission Tent will be pitched in Plymouth, Mass., on TUESDAY, JULY 11th, to remain two weeks or longer as the Lord may direct.

We pitch the Tent in this ancient town in the name of Israel's God, trusting that he will give victory, and that souls may be saved as the result of this meeting. We most earnestly invite our dear brethren and sisters in the adjoining towns to unite with the church in Plymouth and us in this effort to save the perishing. The time is short in which to work with Christ here. What we do for each other and the world must be done soon. If we are to double our diligence before the Lord comes, that our calling and election may be sure, must we not begin soon? yea, should we not begin at once, laboring more earnestly for the lost among us and on every hand?

Any wishing to come and remain during the meeting will find good accommodations under the Tent. Bring food and bed clothing, and all the rest will be furnished free. Come to the feast and to work for Christ.

For the Com., I. I. LESLIE.

Notice.

An extra session of the Second Advent Christian Conference is hereby called to meet on the Alton Bay camp-ground, Tuesday, Aug. 22d, at ten o'clock A. As business of importance is to be transacted, it is desired that all churches in the State be represented by their ministers and delegates.

Tremont Campmeeting.

The annual campmeeting at Tremont, Mass., will commence Monday, July 31st, and continue to Aug. 8th. Arrangements will be made as formerly for board and lodging. All who can bring tents are requested to do so. Dear brethren, as we may be permitted to have one more gathering on this consecrated ground before the Lord comes, let us avail ourselves of this opportunity to do all we can to arouse the church, and save the lost. We intend to secure good laborers to help in this blessed work to give the last notes of warning to a lost world; for the omens which are now looming up in Europe strongly indicate that our work will soon be closed up for this world.

I LEFT IT ALL WITH JESUS.

I left it all with Jesus long ago;
All my sin I brought him, and my woe;
When by faith I saw him on the tree,
Heard his still, small whisper, "'Tis for thee,"
From my heart the burden
Rolled away—
Happy day.

I leave it all with Jesus, for he knows
How to steal the bitter from life's woes;
How to gild the tear-drop with his smile,
Make the desert garden bloom awhile;
When my weakness leaneth
On his might,
All seems light.

I leave it all with Jesus, day by day;
Faith can firmly trust him, come what may.
Hope has dropped her anchor, found her rest
In the calm, sure haven of his breast.
Love esteems it heaven
To abide
At his side.

Oh! leave it all with Jesus, drooping soul,
Tell not half thy story, but the whole;
Worlds on worlds are hanging on his hand,
Life and death are waiting his command;
Yet his tender bosom
Makes the room—
Oh, come home.

THE ORIGINAL PENALTY OF THE LAW.

BY REV. S. M. MERRILL, D. D

Erroneous views of the physical and moral condition of man when first created, have ever been the fruitful source of fallacious conclusions respecting the scheme of redemption, and the destiny of the race. We cannot proceed understandingly in an investigation of the original penalty of the law, without first ascertaining, as nearly as possible, the real status of Adam, as a physical and moral being, at the time he was placed on trial in the "garden of delights," under the law of his Maker as the rule of his life.

Was Adam created intrinsically immortal? Was he then, as now, subject to mortality and death; or was he exempt from evil, and endowed with immortality? Extreme theories upon this question, such as belong to Pelagianism and Universalism on the one hand, or arise from high-toned Calvinism on the other, have given shape and tone to nearly all our discussions of this subject, and strongly tinged the theology of the churches since the Reformation. Evidently, an original examination of the doctrines involved in this inquiry is much needed; and he who will give us a searching analysis, . . . and point out the nature of the first probation, with its bearings on the doctrines of Sin, Redemption, and Retribution, bringing to his task the requisite penetration and independence of thought, with patience and skill to set forth the truths which have as yet been but partially developed, and arrange them logically into a system harmonizing with christian faith, will not only contribute toward the establishlishment of a greatly improved christian literature, but will subserve the interests of Christianity itself, by showing that whatever difficulty may not be entirely removed, can be located where a sound evangelism can afford to let it remain.

The effort of Mr. Watson, in his Theological Institutes, to maintain the idea that the original penalty included a threefold death—though somewhat plausible, and much followed in our pulpits, is by no means satisfactory. The genius of our ablest writer on systematic divinity was unable to overcome the difficulties with which that notion was incumbered. Nor will the careful student fail to detect, in that part of the Institutes which treats of the effects of the first transgression, a want of that clearness and consistency which usually characterize the distinguished author, and which are so conspicuous in his discussions of moral government, redemption, and other questions connected with the Unitarian and Calvanistic controversies. His great object was to prove the actual corruption of human nature by the sin of Adam, in opposition to the teaching of Dr. Taylor, and to correct the impression then prevalent, that Methodism was less distinct in its utterances on this point than Calvinism. He therefore aimed his arguments against Pelagian and Socinian representations of human nature from a Calvanistic standpoint, and quoted approvingly from Calvanistic authors. Hence we find him using the Calvanistic phraseology, and leaning strongly toward the doctrine of the imputation of Adam's sin to his posterity, to the extent of involving them in liability to eternal punishment for that sin, guarding only against the imputation of the act of disobedience. This leniency toward Calvinistic notions of the imputation of sin, led him to pass slightly over matters of vital importance, and to treat as incidental that which contained the very soul of the great issue before him.

2. Adam immortal only by the use of provided means—mortal by exclusion from them. Mr. Watson, however, distinctly repudiated and successfully controverted the Socinian notion, now a prominent feature of Universalism, that Adam was created mortal, and would have died had he not sinned; but we are left in doubt as to whether he regarded him as intrinsically immortal, and therefore incapable of death, in his first estate, or whether he considered his physical constitution as frail and naturally tending to dissolution, so that his continued exemption from death was to be by some special provision of his Maker, on the condition of his continued innocency. Upon this point he says: "Whether Adam, as to his body, became mortal by positive infliction, or by being excluded from the means of disease and mortality, which were provided in the tree of life, is a speculative point, which has no important theological bearing." There is, doubtless, something speculative in this, but it is not so clear that it is without important theological bearing. If Adam was, by his original situation, immortal as to his body, he was incapable of death without a miraculous change in his physical nature; and if his nature was changed by a miracle of divine power, so as to make death possible to him, he became mortal by "positive infliction;" and the penalty of the law, which is supposed to include bodily death, required a miracle in order to its actual enforcement. But if this "positive infliction" did not occur, then Adam, as to his body, was not by nature immortal; and if he was not, his bodily death was only the result of the change in his relation and condition, and as to his offspring, mortality need not be considered as part of the original penalty of the law, their only penalty consisting in their being excluded from the preventives of death. With all deference to the author of the Institutes, it is suggested that the nature of the penalty of the law, as affected by the nature of Adam's physical constitution, is a matter of some importance, especially as it will be conceded that what the penalty of the law originally was, it is now, and ever will remain. If it involved the dissolution of the body, as a necessary part of the requirement of divine justice, in its application to the first man and the first sin, it may, in its final infliction upon the impenitent, after the resurrection and the judgment, carry along with it the same result, as necessary to the completion of "the second death.

3. Pelagian view of original "natural mortality" false. But why do Pelagians, Socinians, and Universalists insist that Adam was created mortal, and, even before the fall, naturally dying, as we know his posterity to be? This is not without a reason—their systems demand it. Having denied the divinity of Christ, and vicarious atonement, it becomes important to them to diminish the magnitude of human guilt; to make out that sin is a very small matter, not deserving much attention as an element in the moral system of the universe, and that it neither required eternal punishment nor a divine Redeemer to save from its ultimate consequences. Assuming that sin originated in the physical constitution of man as God made it, they argue that the destruction of the body by death will afford exemption from sin, and that separation from the animal organism is all the expiation the soul needs. Against this easy method of setting aside the necessity of the atonement, both Calvinistic and Arminian writers have contended with eminent success; but in their eagerness to overthrow the heresy of the opposers of hereditary depravity and vicarious atonement, they have undervalued the importance of gaining strictly tenable ground in relation to the nature of Adam and the penalty of the law.

4. Man's unconditional "natural mortality" not proved by science. The advocates of the "natural mortality" of man appeal to science and natural history for the proof of their doctrine, and then labor to interpret the Scripture in harmony with their notions. Not intending in this paper to follow them in their arguments, it may, nevertheless, be well to notice some of the questions they propound, and to suggest the appropriate answers. A popular writer upon that side proceeds on this wise: "Was animal death produced by sin? We find that certain animals are carnivorous, with teeth and stomachs to consume flesh—animal food. What did they eat in Eden? If no life was destroyed, how did they subsist? Is it said they were herbivorous? Where is the proof? Besides, how absurd that man's sin changed the form of the teeth and stomachs of so large a portion of the creation. But even this bare assumption does not relieve the difficulty, for every leaf cropped by a rabbit or a deer, every spire of grass consumed by a cow or a bullock, every drop of water, sustains countless forms of animalculine life, all of which are destroyed when the grass, the leaves, and the water are consumed. So then, admitting that all creatures that were obliged to eat were gramnivorous or herbivorous, and we must admit that not only vegetable but animal lives were destroyed by millions every day." This relates to the theory that all kinds of death were caused by the sin of Adam; and to those who believe the death of beasts, birds, and insects was caused by man's disobedience, the difficulty may be left. We believe no such thing, and make no further answer.

This writer also appeals to geology to prove that countless millions of creatures lived and died in earth, and air, and sea, long ages before the stratum which we occupy was created; and then speaks of man as follows: "Man possessed teeth and stomach in Eden, and he used them on 'all the trees of the garden.' If he was not subject to decay, and not liable to death, why did he consume food? Why was he gifted with the same organs he now employs? They are used to put off the day of death awhile. They never had any other purpose." It may be conceded that the organization of animals, and certain facts developed in the science of geology, favor the supposition that death reigned in the animal and vegetable kingdoms prior to the sin of Adam; but this proves nothing in regard to man. No attempt is made to prove that any human being died before the first sin was committed, and any argument short of this falls short of the issue.

5. True doctrine—Adam's immortality not intrinsic but conditional. Nor need we assume, as some have done, and as the arguments of our opponents suppose we must, that Adam's body was positively immortal, in order to hold consistently that his death was privately caused by sin. There is a difference between a state of exemption from death by the special favor of heaven, and by special provisions, and one of positive inherent immortality. The latter would have been incompatible with the probationary character of the life in Eden. It would imply such immunity from ill, and such security against the mutations of time, as belong only to a state of confirmed holiness. This was not Adam's condition. He was not yet confirmed in holiness; neither was his immortality of body confirmed. . . . As he was free from sin, and on trial for a state of confirmed holiness, so was his body exempt from the reigning power of death, and on probation for confirmed immortality. He was not intrinsically incapable of death without a miraculous change of his nature; nor was dissolution a necessity of his being. Though physically capable of it, death had no claim upon him. All God's purposes respecting him could have been accomplished without it. Had he kept the law of his probation, and walked with God during the period of trial, he would have pleased God, as Enoch afterward did, and might have obtained as honorable a transfer from earth to heaven. And yet, as before said, he must have been capable of death. He was organized under the general laws of animal economy. He needed and received nourishment by the appropriation of suitable food. Death was not so far from him that he could not die without a miracle; nor was it so near to him that he could not escape it by obedience. Divine providence was his security against the destroyer, and ample provision was within his reach to counteract all tendency to weariness, weakness, or death.

Another asks, "If Adam was immortal in his entire nature, how could he die? If one immortal being could sin and die, why not another? Why may not the saints in heaven sin and die again?" It is doubtless true that a being who is immortal in his entire nature is not capable of dying; yet if God should threaten such a being with death, or even with annihilation, in case of disobedience, it is not to be doubted that he could accomplish the threatened punishment by miraculously changing the nature of the offender; for who shall limit the Holy One? But if Adam's immortality was not positive, but only possible, being not yet confirmed, no miracle was required in his case to enforce the penalty, and no miraculous intervention reduced him to mortality. He was a physical being, and as such was subject to specific laws of life and health, the perpetuity of his vigor depending on his conformity thereto as the continuance and confirmation of his holiness depended on his obedience to God. Had he continued to obey the laws of his being and probation, he might have increased in strength and advanced in virtue until he became invulnerable to the assaults of temptation. Then, confirmed in holiness and immortality, apostasy and death would have been impossible to him, and God would have taken him to heaven. Nor is there any absurdity in the idea that God furnished him food in Eden, with which to ward off all approach of decay, so long as he maintained his holiness. There is no Scripture that precludes it, and the supposition is neither unreasonable nor improbable. . . .

The first announcement to Adam that he should return to dust, shows that his dissolution was caused by sin. "And unto Adam God said, Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree of which I commanded thee, saying, Thou shalt not eat of it: cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life; thorns and thistles shall it bring forth to thee, and thou shalt eat the herb of the field; in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." Why was the ground cursed for man's sake? Why must Adam live in sorrow and eat by labor? Why must he return to the ground out of which he was taken? Because he ate of the forbidden fruit. No other reason is given. "Sin entered into the world, and death by sin." "By man came death."

The account of Adam's expulsion from Eden corroborates this view. It is clearly intimated that in the garden he had access to means for warding off decay, and of perpetuating his existence in the flesh. But now he was doomed to return to dust, and he must go out from Eden, lest he prevent that doom. "And the Lord God said, Behold, the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil, and now lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live forever; therefore the Lord God sent him forth from the garden of Eden, to till the ground from whence he was taken." Clearly he was removed from the tree to prevent his immortality.

Adam and Eve were now sinners, and subject to mortality. They were sentenced to dissolution, and went forth from the scenes of their former delight, that the dreaded doom might not be precluded. Already must the death-chill have shivered about their hearts, as they cast a last look upon the tree of life, now guarded by the flaming sword. Yet were they not without hope. Blending with the sterner tones of justice, they had heard the voice of mercy, saying, "The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head." This was the first note of redemption. Indirect as was the promise, it darted one ray of light athwart the gloom. Like one star in the firmament overspread with clouds, it lit up their pathway with faith and hope, and sanctified their labor, and sorrow, and death. (To be continued.)

WORK WHILE THE DAY LASTS.

The world has been redeemed through the death of Christ, but it is to realize the benefits of the redemption through human instrumentalities. The Jesus who is our pattern, exhibited great diligence in the work he came to do. His was a systematic life. We find the three years of his ministry preceded by the forty days of temptation in the wilderness, during which time he fasted and no doubt prayed constantly, and being delivered from the temptation of Satan, he returned in the power of the Spirit to Galilee. Then we find him teaching the people, calling the disciples, healing the diseased, and casting out devils, but we also learn that he spent whole nights in prayer.

The true child of God needs to properly consider and systematize his labor. In doing this he but patterns after the divine Master. Now and then we find some of his followers who seem to have imbibed his spirit. Bramwell was a man of great faithfulness. He arose early that he might have opportunity for prayer, and from his closet went forth strong for the work, eager to save souls, realizing that the time was short, and achieving through grace the highest success. He who would bear much fruit must commune often with the Son through the Holy Ghost, and if he would gather many sheaves into the spiritual garner must redeem the time. The late Dr. Redfield once said, "All I can see is the Savior of the world, staggering under the weight of its redemption, and a world in grand procession on their way to eternal night. Again he remarked, "I hardly dare stop to sleep lest men should be lost while I am at rest."

The one who only strives to keep saved himself, and does not exert his influence to rescue others from the jaws of the destroyer, will fail in the object for which he lives. Christian effort is like the streams of nature. If they become clogged and impeded by obstructions, they are rendered impure. Ceaseless motion is needful for their purification. A true christian life is not and cannot be complete in idleness. True, our purity is through the blood of Christ, but its reception is conditioned on faith in God and cheerful obedience to him, and the very nature of this salvation is laid in activity.

The common instincts of even the animal race, prompt them to rescue the suffering and help those ready to perish. How much more the soul redeemed by blood from the curse of sin. Like Paul, he consents to become all things to all men, that he may gain some.

The privilege of labor is accorded to all the children of God. The private member is not to be excused from a share of the toil. In all ages of the church, the grandest results have been realized when the greatest amount of lay effort has been utilized. One fault of the popular churches is, they leave nearly all the work to be done by the ministry. In every enterprise success must come by enlisting the masses. If God moves the hearts of the people to action something is accomplished.

The shortness of time is a weighty reason why diligence should be used. Whoever is saved must be saved in time. We have no purgatorial salvation. Men and women are passing off the stage of probation rapidly, and death suddenly terminates our labors for them.

Then the period in which we may labor is short at best. "What thou doest, do quickly." God has prepared a crown for each child of grace, but whether it be lost by our inactivity or decked with many sparkling jewels, depends upon the neglect or diligent use of the time, talents and grace accorded us. A deep baptism of the Holy Ghost cannot be long retained in idleness. May God awake us all to a realization of the importance of the work we are pledged to advance.—Christian Pilgrim.

TRUST.

I do not ask that God will always make
My pathway light;
I only pray that he will hold my hand
Throughout the night.
I do not hope to have the thorns removed
That pierce my feet;
I only ask to find his blessed arms
My safe retreat.

If he afflicts me, then, in my distress,
Withholds his hands;
If all his wisdom I cannot conceive
Or understand—
I do not think to always know his why
Or wherefore, here;
But sometime he will take my hand and make
His meaning clear.

If in his furnace he refines my heart,
To make it pure;
I only ask for grace to trust his love—
Strength to endure;
And if fierce storms beat round me,
And the heavens be overcast,
I know that he will give his weary one
Sweet peace at last.

DARWINISM EXAMINED.

P. R. RUSSELL.

(Concluded.)

3. There is another serious objection. The Scripture record places a crown of honor and dominion on the brow of our common humanity. God is presented to us as our Creator, and heavenly Father, and Friend; and the Liberals, who are so ready to adopt this degrading theory, have been telling us in many a learned essay of the paternal character of God, and of the angelic dignity of our common humanity; but Darwinism casts us all down from this elevated platform, and herds us all with four-footed beasts and creeping things. It tears the crown from our heads; it treats us as bastards and not sons, and reveals the degrading fact that man in his best estate—even Mr. Darwin—is but a civilized, dressed up, educated monkey, who has lost his tail. This may be true, but if so, it is a degrading, unpleasant truth, that we should be slow to proclaim.

4. There is another serious difficulty. Man is endowed with a moral, rational, and religious nature. He has a consciousness, in all ages and in all lands, of being a moral agent and accountable to some higher creating, governing power. He instinctively "feels after God," pants and cries after him, builds his altar and worships in some form. All history, all experience, testify that man has a moral, intellectual and religious nature. But beasts of no kind or type have this. Monkeys have no moral or religious nature. They have no apparent sense of moral right or wrong. Darwinism sweeps away all religion. It is not compatible with Pagan, Jewish, Mahommedan, or the Christian religion. It is not conceivable that learned and civilized monkeys are, or may be, saints, and destined to immortal life, while the rest are mere brutes that perish. If the theory is true, we are all at best brutes, one in our natures. The moment we regard man as but a developed brute, that moment all kinds of religion logically disappear, as incompatible and impossible. If man is only a developed monkey, he is a monkey still, and there is and can be no religion for him, which is not as good, true and admissible for all monkeys.

5. Then, again, if animal life began with aquatics, and there is, in the nature of things, a tendency to evolutionize upward into other types, forms and species, and to culminate in humanity, it follows, logically, that, give these lower forms of life time enough, and they will climb the ladder of progress and pass into men and leave their early forms—cradles of life, the aquatics—all vacant. The starting point is the aquatic, the goal is humanity. Unless new creations should supply the void, life would ascend the ladder, and we should have at last nothing but humanity. But if we look down after what Mr. Darwin calls millions of ages into the cradle, we find the aquatics still in the dirty water. So far as can be seen and known they are just as low and just as tenacious of their places, and just as numerous as in the primitive ages; and they do not even promise to ascend the ladder of evolution. Nor are their places kept good by new creations. This objection is fatal to the whole theory.

6. Then, again, if Darwinism is true, monkeys are naturally, gradually and surely passing into men—are in fact men of a lower grade.

Mr. Darwin tells us the time was when man was clothed in hair, went on all fours, and had a tail. Men and monkeys then blend and run into each other. But what are the facts? The brain capacity of the lowest types of men is more than treble that of the highest type of monkeys. One has an articulate language, a burning conscience, the instincts of propriety, and a sense of responsibility to God. The other can never speak, or write, or know, love and fear God, or comprehend anything of moral government. The chasm is deep and wide; but where are the intermediate links? If the theory is true, we should see them everywhere. The animal tribes would be found everywhere in a transition state. Cats would be found turning into dogs, and dogs into goats, and goats into bullocks.

We should find monkeys and men blending and shaking hands over the chasm,—men would be found in all stages of the transition—some in fur, and others just putting off their hairy dress, and making attempts at dressing up—some just getting up from "all fours," and learning to stand and walk erect, while others would be found hiding their tails, and still others just losing their tails.

Monkeys would be found just putting on their hats and putting on airs of humanity, and putting in their claims to be recognized as a part of the brotherhood. But when we look out for these connecting links, they cannot be found. This broad, deep chasm has no bridge. The connecting links in the chain are all gone, and Mr. Darwin has utterly failed to produce one of them, connecting men and monkeys, either in the living specimens or fossils of the geological ages. He acknowledges this as a weak and embarassing point in his philosophy, but hopes that the connecting links may be found in the researches of the future.

7. Then, again, the instincts, the constitutions and appetites of the animal tribes do and will hold them fast in their various types, genera, and species. The fish can never develop into a bird, nor the bird into a fish. Their natures, food and habits are radically different. Zoologists and geologists have divided the animal kingdom into four different types, as 1. Vertebrates, 2. Articulates, 3. Mollusca, 4. Radiates. Then there is another division, viz., genus, species and variety. Now the wise and benevolent Creator has thrown up barriers and placed chasms here that cannot be passed by what Mr. Darwin calls "selections" of any kind or any device. Vertebrates cannot be converted into articulates, and articulates cannot be converted into shell fish or sun fish. Varieties may be changed by climate, soil, culture and mating, but types, genera, and species, never. Hybrids and monstrocities may be produced, but they cannot be retained as a new species. They become barren, or relapse speedily into original forms.

The geologist, as he turns over the fossiliferous strata of the earth and examines the various and wonderful specimens of minerals that have come and gone during the long ages of the past, has found no articulates that have changed into vertebrates; no crocodiles or serpents that have crawled half way over into monkeys, and no monkeys that have half lapped over into men. All the types, genera, and species of animals are placed in certain niches and spheres of the animal economy to subserve a purpose, and there they are held, by the Creator's hand, by their natures, habits, appetites and instincts, and the heavens will fall before they can vacate. Transmutation can work among the varieties, but here its surging waves must be confined.

Vain, foolish, and wicked are all the attempts of man to vote the Creator from his throne by clothing nature with divine attributes, and retiring God. Nature! What is nature? It is simply God, the invisible, immutable and ever-blessed God in his works and ways. Nature, aside from God, has no laws, no plans, no purposes, and can have no adaptations. He is the lawgiver, the executive force of the universe. My heart says, "Lord, thou hast been our dwelling place in all generations. Before the mountains were brought forth or ever thou hadst formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting thou art God. Thou turnest man to destruction; and sayest, return, ye children of men; for a thousand years in thy sight are but as yesterday, when it is past, and as a watch of the night."—Ex.

"ANOTHER GOSPEL."

J. B. COOK.

A new tract has reached me from Rochester, N. Y., on "The Three Worlds, and Plan of Redemption." Several articles from various sources have also reached me, which teach "that man sleeps in death, but is to live a second time; that this re-generation, or re-producing, is as universal as the generation of the first Adam." Then it is claimed that "the ways of God are equal, and his denunciations and wrath refer only to this present forfeited, Adamic life."

Much scripture is quoted in general terms; and then with a bold flourish of imagination "the restitution" of all that is spoken is expanded and made to encircle also all that is NOT spoken. Acts 3: 21. Such is the sample of all. They say, "If—IF—IF"! This subjunctive particle is found at the grand and turning points of the argument. Yes, I reply, this IF is here truly significant; but it would not be used or needed at all if God had given you your doctrine of this indirect and evasive Universalism! No, no. This if may let out the secret doubt in your own minds, as it does to all enlightened readers.

Note. If Archimedes could have found a fulcrum for his lever, he could have moved the world! If all which have been mere wishes, hitherto, have now become horses, the beggars may ride! If the law of God, and its penal infliction, as visited on men throughout all time in "the wrath of God against all ungodliness," is now superseded by this presumptuous, unpreached gospel (as it was entitled in the first book sent to me on this theory), then there is no "damnation" from which any one needs "redemption." Which fact they seem not to see; but which lets down to them the whole system of moral government into the dust. "The law of God" and its penalty of death to them seems as supple as a putty toy to a child, which they may mould at will to conform to their new notion of "the gospel." If death is not to a sinful life "the end"; if "the wages of sin is [not] death" (Rom. 6: 21, 23), then there has been a fundamental mistake all through the Bible! Nay, more; in that case the devil did not lie when he asserted, "Ye shall not surely die." John 8: 44; Gen. 3: 3.

"Let us reason together." So far as I see the truth at all, this doctrine ignores and denies the whole present constitution of the world. The laws of nature, and "the law of life in Christ," alike contradict it.

"Be not deceived; GOD IS NOT MOCKED; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." Nature never developes wheat from the seed of tares. It never did reverse and repeat the process, to transform the tares, thistles, or chaff, and thus furnish "a fair chance" for them to turn to wheat. No history has recorded any such facts. And as to the voice from the throne above, is it of doubtful import? They who sow to the flesh shall reap CORRUPTION; "punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." Gal. 6: 8; 2 Thess. 1: 9; 2 Pet. 2; Jude 13. This assumed doctrine thus arrays itself against God in all nature, all history, and in all of Revelation, except the general terms that they misapply, and yet are consistent with all the above most emphatic assertions of truth on this point.

Please, dear brethren, observe that the "SECOND" coming is numbered but once in all the Bible. Heb. 9: 28. Yet this concurs with and confirms every other text that bears on that crowning truth. So, seeing that the Lord, our Lawgiver, Judge and King has said death, destruction, and the like, over a thousand times, it should stand as the throne of the Eternal. Read Isa. 46: 10—"My counsel shall stand." "Thou hast magnified THY WORD above all thy name." Ps. 138: 2. In contrast: "All flesh is as grass, . . . but the word of the Lord endureth FOREVER." Amen. The Lord's reproof to Peter should admonish us all not to reply against God,—not to make the tares as the wheat.

A PECULIAR PEOPLE.

Turn to Titus 2: 14. "Who gave himself for us that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works. These things speak, and exhort, and rebuke with all authority." A peculiar people. Now, I think, you know that we don't like to be considered peculiar. We are so afraid of it that we want to be like the world, and just mingle with the world so that people won't consider us peculiar. Very often we hear people say, "Yes, she is a very good woman, but she is very peculiar; yes, he is a very good man—oh, yes, but he's very peculiar." I tell you I'd be willing to make one journey around the world to find one church full of peculiar people. Why, that church would stir the world. The very thing we consider peculiar is the thing we want to-day. I believe Elijah was the most peculiar man in his day, but he was better than those thousands who followed Baal; he held the keys of heaven, and could stand fearlessly before Ahab because God was with him. Enoch was a peculiar man in his day, but of course he was different from other people; and undoubtedly Daniel was was the most peculiar man Babylon ever had. Why, if we had only just a few peculiar people in New York we should have a wonderful result. If God has got a great work to do he will take some peculiar man who separates himself from the world and sets his face like a flint toward heaven, and use him for himself.—D. L. Moody.

THE best churches give largely to benevolent objects. They are so taught. Their pastors preach on the subject, teaching them both publicly and from house to house. They are made to understand that giving of one's substance to the Lord is a part of true religion. And so it is. The very first offering laid at the feet of the infant Jesus was gold. After that came the less important offerings of frankincense and myrrh. Those who truly love Jesus, love to give him the best things.

DEW falls in calm nights, when the air is still and soft; even thus peace sweetly distils upon the still and resting heart, free from passion and distemper, with its enriching and refreshing influence.

HOME AND HEALTH.

THE VOICE.

Man is distinguished from the brutes by his power of speech. The great desideratum in speech is to have it agreeable. In order for this to be the case, enunciation should be perfectly easy. There should be no constrained effort of the vocal organs. To tax the expressive powers beyond ease of delivery, either by bawl, or rant, or scream, is to affect the voice for the worse.

Sometimes the voice is rendered harsh and unpleasant by a tickling in the throat, bringing on an asthmatic complaint, and causing a dryness in the parts used for speaking. The remedy for this is to gargle the throat with clear cold water. This will often prove more effectual than medicated lozenges or troches. Sometimes, however, it helps, to use a lozenge and cause expectoration; but when this is the case, it is our experience that any thing with a sharp taste is as good as a troche.

A general rule to keep the throat healthy is to keep the stomach clean. Dyspeptics, whose pipes are suffused, are generally great sufferers with their throats. We think more injury is done to the voice by eating indigestibles, than by any other means. It causes distress and heats in the part named, which are exceedingly inimical to the voice. Indeed, it often happens that the enunciation of a dyspeptic is cracked, uncertain,

If we had known some years ago as much as we do now about speaking, especially public speaking, we would have habituated ourselves to deep, sonorous expression. We give the advice to all who may be engaging in public exercises,—speak slowly and as deeply down in the throat as possible. The happiest results follow. The effect on the listener is one of profound gravity. That was Edward Irving's plan. We knew a young man whose words were so deeply spoken, that it was said, hyperbolically, of course, that "he spoke from his boots." He never said much in the way of matter, but what he did say was spoken with an emphasis worth copying. We wish we had spoken deeply in our start, when we were pastor of two or three churches, then we had not an abiding reminder, in our throat, as our folly in speaking too superficially.

Take care of your voice. Keep it mellow. Save it, and use it to utter the Master's praise, and words indicative of a wise head. —Bible Echo.

DRINK.

From the multitude of beverages in common use, most of which are commended by physicians and physiologists, "the natural dietetic character of man," so far as drink is concerned, might seem to be a very complicated problem. But if we study the book of nature instead of the books of men, the subject becomes very simple. Nature has provided no drink for man, animals, or plants, except water, and the purer it is the better. The "virtue" of all other beverages depends on the water they contain, while the foreign ingredients, of whatever name or nature, constitute their vices. The uses of water in living organism are to convey nutrient materials to, and waste matters from, all parts of the bodily structure, and to regulate temperature. These purposes cannot be better subserved by any admixtures of drugs or other impurities. All saline or earthy matters, and all foreign ingredients of every kind, render the water less solvent, and to that extent less capable of holding the nutrient or waste matters in solution and transporting them to or from the body.

Most of the thirst which calls for so much water-drinking, and all of the thirst which demands artificial beverages, is abnormal, and is occasioned by improper aliments and seasonings. Those who use a pure dietary and little or no seasonings, require comparatively very little water; while if their exercises are moderate and their other habits hygienic, they can do very well without drinking at all.

The amount of money which is expended for intoxicating and other beverages by the civilized nations, is enormous. It is within the bounds of certainty to say that the people of the United States annually waste in this manner more than a thousand millions of dollars. But if the waste of vitality could be reckoned in dollars and cents, the amount of loss would be more than doubled. —Science of Health.

BADLY VENTILATED CHURCHES do not speak well for our modern civilization. Vitiated air is a frightful demoralizer. The preacher sees that half the congregation cannot see; that they are asleep; and, not knowing it is all owing to bad air, he comes home discouraged. How poor ventilation has stayed the Lord's work! How it has transformed good, earnest preaching into theological hail-storms. Bad air in a church is hard on the preacher, and death to "the average prayer-meeting." It is too bad that architects so lamentably fail at times to furnish fresh air for churches, and that, too, when the supply continues abundant, and there is no tax on breathing. If every cubic foot of air only cost something, we should have only the pure article. Give us fresh air, O sexton, or we die.—Exchange.

We know from our own personal experience that the above is true. Bad air does immense damage to the interests of true worship. It disables our preachers, stupifies congregations, and diminishes the interest in spiritual worship. J. C.

GOING TO SEA.

Not long ago, a gentleman down on a wharf in one of our ports, crossed the plank which led to a trim looking little brig, and went on board. A boy stood near the bulwarks, looking into the water.

"Well, my boy," said the man, "who is your master?"

"The Lord Jesus Christ, sir," answered the boy, looking up brightly.

"Ah! I am glad of that; when did you enlist?"

"Two years, coming the fifth of December, I enlisted at the Bethel, at London; kept with him ever since, and always mean to. Here's my sailing orders, sir," taking a small sea-worn Testament from his pocket.

"You find that compass, chart, rudder and all I suppose," said the gentleman.

"It puts me on the right track, add no mistake," answered the boy quickly.

"And what does it point to?" asked the gentleman.

"Jesus Christ, the bright morning star. It shows me I must have a quick conscience and a right mind. Faith is my spy-glass; and I try to lay hold on the ropes of prayer."

"Do you know where the shoal water is, and the sunken rocks on which the sailors sometimes run aground before knowing it?"

"I try to keep a good look-out, sir," answered the boy. "I know where the shoals of bad company are, and they are about the most dangerous; we give 'em a wide berth, I can tell ye."

"Well, you find the Lord a good master?" said the gentleman.

"Good, very good, sir," answered the boy. "He is a merciful Savior; he was my mother's Savior."

At that instant a shrill distant whistle was heard. The boy jumped up; "That's for me, sir," and away he skipped like a squirrel. He joined an old sailor on the wharf, and soon they were lost in the busy crowd.

"There's a true young fellow," said the gentleman to himself. "May the salt never lose its savor." Man our merchant ships with such crews, and our shipping lists would not have so many lost and missing ships in it.—Ex.

NOT YET.

"My son, give me thine heart." "Not yet," said the little boy, as he was busy with his toy and ball; "when I grow older I'll think of it." The boy grew to be a young man.

"Not yet," said the young man; "I am now about to enter into trade; when I see my business prosper, then I shall have more time than now." Business did prosper.

"Not yet," said the man of business; "my children must now have my care; when they are settled in life, I shall be better able to attend to religion." He lived to be a gray-headed old man.

"Not yet," still he cried; "I shall soon retire from trade, and then I shall have nothing else to do but to read and pray."

And so he died. He had put off to another time what should have been done when a child. He lived without God, and died without hope.—Ex.

EVER BRIGHT SHORE.

GEO. THOMSON.

Let the storms of life beat around us,
By and by they will come nevermore;
With Christ as our Captain and Pilot,
We will land on the ever bright shore.
CHO.—Happy, happy, happy evermore,
Happy forever, on the ever bright shore.

We will fear not the howling tempest,
Neither wake when the wild winds do roar;
We know he will bring us through safely,
And we'll land on the ever bright shore.

With helm hard-aport and Zionward,
With compass and chart all secure;
We'll escape the rocks, shoals and breakers,
And anchor on the ever bright shore.

Homeward bound, how swiftly we're gliding,
In a little the storm will be o'er;
We'll enter the bright port of glory,
To go out nevermore, nevermore.

A sound from the outlook is ringing,
See a light shining bright, more and more;
And sweetly the angels are singing
Hosannas on the ever bright shore.

With shoutings we'll enter the harbor,
Where sickness and sorrow come no more;
Immortal, like Jesus, and with him,
We shall reign on the ever bright shore.

SIGNS OF THE NEARING ADVENT OF CHRIST.

BY REV. DR. H. BONAR.

The night cometh! Nor does it seem far off. It never appeared so nigh. The shadows are lengthening out, and falling with ominous gloom upon the valleys of earth. The dimness of twilight is beginning to make itself felt. It is settling down drearily upon our cities, and on our solitudes; upon the towers of our strength, and the palaces of our pomp; nor can the noisy rush of eager multitudes, hurrying to and fro for gain or pleasure, wholly stifle the utterance of fear and awe. Men cannot help foreboding evil, for who can tell them what may be in the womb of darkness? The night-birds are already on the wing, flitting around us, and reminding us of the descending night.

Yet it is written also, "The day is at hand!" The night, though dark, will be brief, and will be soon succeeded by a glorious day. But still of that day the night will be the forerunner. And this world's night is surely near.

The signs of Christ's second advent that have been given us both by the Lord and his apostles are both notable and numerous. And it is very evident that those have been selected which were the most expressive and least ambiguous. They are chosen as being the most prominent and explicit that could be given. It cannot be thought that the least striking have been announced and the most striking concealed. If so, then is it not very remarkable that the millennium of a thousand years (Rev. 20) is never mentioned as a sign at all? Had this been to take place before the second advent, how has it never been alluded to as one of the signs? It would have been by far the most distinct and visible. No one could overlook or mistake it. Yet nowhere, by prophets or apostles, or by the Lord himself, is it noted as a sign. How can this be accounted for, save upon the ground that it was to take place after, not before, the advent? If this be omitted, all is plain; if it be denied, then let those who deny it account for the fact that, among the many signs of the advent, the millennium is never mentioned as one. How the most palpable of them all could be omitted seems to me to require an explanation. On the post-millennial system, the omission seems to me inexplicable. For thus our Lord would be made to profess to tell us the signs of his appearing, and yet to conceal the most notable of them all.

But this is not all. The signs which are given are inconsistent with the idea of a millennium before the second advent. Who that reads the Lord's prophecy in Matt. 24, which begins with the destruction of Jerusalem and ends with his second appearing in the clouds of heaven, does not feel that the whole drift of it was to show the Church that they were to expect sorrow, not joy, tribulation, not triumph, up till the time when he should return? These signs were the successive crests of the billows on which she was to be tossed, till he, with his own voice and presence, should rebuke and calm the ocean. The simple omission, then, of the millennium as a sign is a fact on which we ought to lay much stress; but the omission of it in circumstances which preclude the possibility of its being a thing reserved or merely unspoken, furnishes a strong argument in proof of a pre-millennial advent.

Let me now note some of the signs which, in the present day, seem most remarkable as forerunners of the Lord's appearing. And though of some of these it might be said that they have been found in former days, yet others of them, as we shall see, are peculiar to our own.

1. Wars and rumors of wars, earthquakes, pestilences, and famines in divers places. (Matt. 24: 6, 7). I need not enter minutely into the proof of the existence of these. The public journals bear witness to it. For a while, it seemed almost as if the world were at rest, as if its storms had spent themselves. But now all seems changed. Every day brings new indications of disquietude and convulsion. Few nations seem willing to draw the sword, yet every nation has her hand upon the hilt; with some it is already gleaming in the air, and with others it is reddened with blood. Over the whole earth is heard "the long, low, distant murmur of dread sound." And is this not the prelude to the last universal war? (Ezek. 38; Zech. 14; Dan. 11: 40–45, 12: 1; Rev. 13: 7; 16: 12–16; 17: 8–14; 19: 11–14). Is it not a sign of the near approach of Him who, when earth's madness and ambition are at their height—when the summoned nations are gathered at Armageddon, girt for battle and slaughter—Himself appears for their discomfiture and ruin? Then, but not till then, wars shall cease, and the weapons of war perish. Then the true Solomon shall begin his reign, hushing the tumults of the nations, and introducing the long-expected Sabbath of this weary "workaday world." Rev. 19: 20.

2. The restlessness of the world. This sign is in part connected with the preceding, yet may be viewed separately. The state of the world is at present very ominous. "Distress of nations with perplexity—men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things that are coming on the earth," "and then shall they see the Son of Man coming in a cloud" (Luke 21: 25–27), is God's picture of the state of men as the final crisis draws on. This certainly seems our attitude at this moment. The earth, and the things that are coming on it, attract the attention of all serious thinkers. There is something in the state of the world so unsettled, so pregnant with uncertain evil, that every eye is moving to and fro in expectation of strange issues, and as if to catch the first sign of their approach. The form and color of the clouds forebode speedy change and threaten tempest to the nations. The time for listlessness and apathy is gone.

Some thirty years ago, when the skies were bright, and men could promise themselves days of sunshine, it was safe enough to fold the hands and take our ease. But all this is over. No doubt, after the excitement of recent wars and revolutions, men would prefer repose. But the onward swell of the waters stays not for an hour. There is among the nations a spirit of restlessness, anarchy, and insubordination, a passionate love of change, a headlong rush to overturn every established system, too furious and united to be ultimately withstood. Many call it but a passing tumult, the frenzy of an hour; but they who understand it know how deep is the spring out of which it flows. The storm, long gathering, but resisted and repressed by the barriers which ancient wisdom had erected for the stability of kingdoms, is concentrating and condensing its strength in these venerable recesses, which may for a while refuse to yield to the explosive force, but which, overstrained at length, give way to the accumulated pressure; then will the kingdoms of the earth be shivered; throne and temple overturned; wall and fortress laid in ruins. Such is the night which is to precede the long-looked-for day—when not only Israel but the whole earth shall arise and put on the garments of beauty, fit and meet for the personal presence of their glorious King.

3. Home and Foreign Missionary Exertions. No age since that of the apostles has witnessed such wide-spread exertions in behalf of the Jewish and Gentile nations as our own. This certainly is a sign peculiar to the present century. I do not speak of Missionary and Bible Societies as if they were to convert the world; but still I would point to the fact of hundreds of missionaries going forth to every region of our globe, millions of Bibles circulated—almost every nation having the Scriptures in their own language—and pointing to these simple and magnificent facts, I ask, Is there not in these a most palpable fulfillment of the words of the Lord, "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached to all nations as a witness, and then shall the end come"? (Matt. 24: 14). In our day we have the preaching of the gospel, and its witness-bearing most manifest.

The result is not the conversion of the world, but the gathering out of the election. (Acts 15: 14). And then the end comes. It is not said, And then the millennium comes; but the end—the end of this present age, and the coming of the Son of man. This sign seems also referred to in Rev. 14: 6, "I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel, to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come." This sign will, I doubt not, become more and more visible—but still there it is already before us—a sign which foretells a coming Lord, and most distinctly intimates the impossibility of a millennium before his advent.

4. The position of Israel. This long-forgotten nation is now coming into remembrance. The nations of the earth are beginning to observe this strange people, "terrible from the beginning hitherto." The eyes both of the world and of the church are far more intently directed towards them than they have been since the day that their city perished, and they were led captive into the land of the stranger. It is curious to observe how both travellers and missionaries are continually making new discoveries with regard to Israel, stumbling upon some new fragment of their lost ten tribes. God seems to be breaking up inaccessible territories in order to view the hiding-places of his ancient people, and to open their prison doors.

A goodly number of Jews are also turning their eyes to the cross of Christ. The "remnant according to the election of grace" is visibly coming in. The interest taken in the Jews everywhere is very striking. God is once more placing them before the eyes of the world, as those through whom he has blessed the world in times past, and through whom he means to bless it again. But when is this? Not till "the Redeemer shall come to Zion, and turn away ungodliness from Jacob." Not till "they shall look on him whom they have pierced, and mourn." The full salvation of Israel is reserved for the coming of their Messiah. Then, but not till then, shall "Israel blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit." Rom. 5: 26; Zech. 12: 10.

5. Disbelief of the approaching advent of Christ, even in the church. It is no marvel that the world should either deride or deny that event. And it is of this world's mocking that Peter speaks when he says, "There shall come in the last days scoffers, saying, Where is the promise of his coming?" But the church also loses sight of that day; nay, refuses to credit the news of its approach. She says, "My Lord delayeth his coming." She slumbers and sleeps. And it is just when she is speaking thus, and thus slumbering, it is an hour when she thinks not, that he arrives. It is often said, Surely, if the time were just at hand, more of God's people would believe it. But it is when many of them are not believing it, and counting on delay, that the Bridegroom comes. While then we mourn that so many of the saints should disbelieve the nearness of that day, let us also lift up our heads, for by this sign we know that our redemption draweth nigh. (2 Peter 3: 3, 4; Matt. 24: 8)).—Christian Herald, London.

HAS THE DRAGON BEEN BOUND?

J. S. WHITE.

(Concluded.)

The beast in Revelation seventeenth chapter was scarlet color, red like the dragon, and it had seven heads and ten horns, the same as the dragon. This beast represented the Roman kingdom, the same as the dragon. When Rome changed its profession from Paganism to the Christian religion, it was represented by the beast on which the woman was seated, which was the same as the dragon in character and government, except its profession. So of the beast of the thirteenth chapter, which had seven heads and ten horns. "And the dragon gave him his power, and seat, and great authority." The dragon was still alive, and not bound. "And they worshipped the dragon . . . and they worshipped the beast" at the same time. The dragon is not in the pit, but at large yet, and will be till the great battle.

In the sixteenth chapter of Revelation, John says: "I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet." Here are the three great powers of earth that are united to do the devil's work, by opposing Christ, and fighting against him. Here is the dragon, not bound yet, and his two great confederates, the beast and the false prophet. The dragon takes the lead. Here John saw the preparation for the great battle. In the nineteenth chapter, he tells us that he saw the battle commence, and he saw its progress and termination, ending with the binding of the dragon and shutting him up.

John says he heard an angel, "saying to all the fowls" of heaven, "Gather yourselves together to the supper of the great God; that ye may eat the flesh of kings, and the flesh of captains," etc. Then he saw the battle, in which "the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet." "These both were cast alive into a lake of fire." He saw a "remnant," after the beast and prophet had been cast into the fire, and they "were slain with the sword of him that sat upon the horse, . . . and all the fowls were filled with their flesh." Now if this lake of fire is the melted earth, into which these two powers go, how is it that there is a remnant disposed of in another way, lying around on the earth, and the fowls are here filling themselves with their flesh?

As the dragon is at the head of this great war movement (as we see in the sixteenth chapter), and as John was directed to the battle from its commencement to the conclusion, he will tell what became of the dragon. He continues his narrative as it is in the twentieth chapter. The chapters in no sense divide the subject. The dragon does not go into the lake of fire to be destroyed with the beast and false prophet. He lives through the battle, and is disposed of in another way. John sees a power from heaven laying hold of the dragon, and binding him, and casting him into the pit for a thousand years. Then John sees those that had been put to death for the witness of Jesus, "and they lived and reigned with Christ."

These saints live and reign with Christ during the time the dragon is bound. "This is the first resurrection." The first implies another resurrection. Is this called the first with reference to the resurrection of the wicked, or to another resurrection which these saints are to have? If we have the thousand years in the past, we must have this resurrection in the past. And if this be true, and if it was in the time of the dreadful persecution, and if this resurrection called "the first" implies that there is to be a resurrection of the wicked, I think the wicked may congratulate themselves in thinking that if they are to be raised, it may fare as well with them as it did with these beheaded saints when they were being put to death, and yet living and reigning with Christ. And if this first resurrection implies another for these martyred saints, and as they are called "blessed" because they have a "part in the first resurrection," they may well dread another resurrection. John saw those that were beheaded, not those while they were being beheaded; and he saw them living, with their heads replaced, and reigning with Christ for a thousand years.

To put the first six verses of Rev. 20, which presents one of the most sublime descriptions of the greatest events we find in the word of God, in the past, is belittleing the prophecy. I do not wonder that some who have seen the manifest absurdity of the thousand years in the past, and who were unwilling to have them in the future, have tried hard to find evidence that this part of revelation does not belong to the Bible; and because they cannot make this out, conclude that they do not know what the prophecy means.

Those who put the one thousand years in the past make them cover the period in which the "little horn" made war on the saints, and overcame them by persecution in every conceivable way the devil could devise, even unto the most cruel death. This is the time in which it is said the saints "lived and reigned with Christ." In what sense did they reign? It is said that they reigned by their faith. They submitted to martyrdom by their faith in Christ. If we say this is what is meant by their reigning with Christ, I ask, Did not the prophets, apostles, and the saints under pagan Rome reign with Christ? Has not every true saint, from Abel down to our time, lived and reigned? Paul said to some of his brethren who thought they were reigning with Christ, "I would to God ye did reign, that we might with you." Paul did not believe that he was reigning. Shall we say that he did not think he was sufficiently persecuted to call it a reign? But if he had been living under the reign of the man of sin, he might then say he was living and reigning with Christ? When Paul reigns, all God's saints will reign with him.

The Bibfe uniformly shows that the reign of the saints is in the future, with Christ in his kingdom, which is to follow his coming. Thou "hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation, and hast made us unto our God kings and priests; and we shall reign on the earth."

To say that the dragon is a symbol of pagan Rome, and that the binding of the dragon was the suppression of Paganism in the Roman empire, is to make this work of binding cover a period of about four hundred and fifty years, in order to have the one thousand years end about 1792. If the reign of the saints for the one thousand years is in the past, and this time ended in 1792, then they did not begin to reign till A. D. 792. If they have ever reigned with Christ on the earth in any sense, did they not reign under the Pagan persecution? or, did they not reign after Paganism became extinct, and had no power to persecute? If so, then they reigned when Constantine suppressed Pagan persecution throughout the empire. If we take the latest date given by Gibbon, when he says Paganism was not known in the Roman empire, it brings us down to about A. D. 423. Now if the reign of the saints began when Paganism was suppressed or bound, so that it was not known, how is it that their one thousand years' reign did not begin until about four hundred years after?

Paganism could do nothing only as it had the power of the government to support it. That power was taken away by Constantine, between A. D. 325 and 337. But it is said that France was the last kingdom to be subdued, and this was done about A. D. 792. Subdued to what? France was one of the extreme parts into which western Rome was divided, and was represented by one of the horns on the dragon. In A. D. 792, France was a Roman Catholic kingdom, and Charlemagne was the king, and was a great supporter of the Pope. There was no Paganism there to be subdued.

If we say that Paganism is what is meant by the dragon, and that it was bound, and shut up in the pit A. D. 792 for a thousand years; and that it was loosed in A. D. 1792, in the French Revolution; it follows that it was not loosed by the power which bound it. It was loosed by its own power. Besides, it went into the pit a Pagan, and came out an infidel. It had undergone a transformation. It went into the pit Paganism, but came out infidelity. We are to notice that it is the dragon that was to be bound and shut up, not one of his horns; and it was the dragon that was to be loosed, and not infidelity coming out of one of his horns. The revolution of the infidels in France was of short duration. When it closed, it left everything about as it was before. A Pope was placed on the throne at Rome, with the power of his predecessor; and papal France (not pagan) did not allow the Protestant Bible to be circulated till 1832.

We have been cited to Spiritualism as evidence that Paganism is loosed. About fifty years after the infidel move in France, Spiritualism came up near Rochester, N. Y. Paganism went down by imperial power in Europe, and it came up in one of the horns of the beast transformed into infidelity in France. Fifty years after, it came up in America, changed into Spiritualism. I do not wish to encourage infidelity by such expositions of God's word as this.

The fact is, the dragon no more represents Paganism than it does the Papacy, and the kingly power of the horn. It is a symbol of the Roman kingdom from the beginning to the end, including all its changes and character. He is called "the devil" because he does the work the devil moves him to do. The time is coming when all the agents of the devil, called by his name, or otherwise, will be suppressed, and then will he be shut up in the pit, so that he can deceive the nations no more for a thousand years. Then will the martyred saints be raised from the dead, and live and reign "with Christ." In this time there will be nothing to hurt nor harm in all God's holy mountain, which will be "the camp of the saints." Then will be fulfilled Rev. 5: 9, 10.

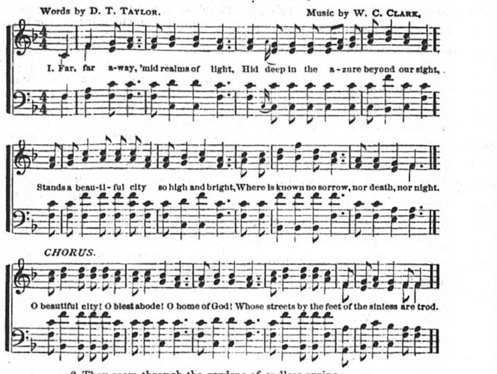
But if we say that Paganism, or any other ism, is now at work deceiving the nations, so that they are going up to compass "the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city," before fire comes down from God to devour them, we ask, Where is this "camp of the saints"—"the beloved city"? God has joined the binding of the dragon with the overthrow of the beast and false prophet, as the result of the great battle, in which these three powers will be engaged. "What God hath joined together, let not man put asunder."

"The age-to-come," as it is commonly understood, does not depend on any interpretation that has been put on the binding of the dragon. The persecuting power of the fourth kingdom, which kingdom the dragon represents, was never more loose than it was in the time in which it is said that the dragon was bound, and the saints who were being killed lived and reigned with Christ.

There is nothing gained by putting an absurd interpretation on God's word, except it is to encourage the infidel in making a burlesque of the whole Bible. The saints live and reign with Christ during the time the dragon is bound. This is called "the first resurrection," and all who have a part in it are called "blessed and holy." Thus it is, in point of importance, distinguished in comparison above all other resurrections. This is the resurrection out from among the dead, which Paul hoped to obtain. Jesus said to his disciples, "Ye shall be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." Are not those who have been beheaded for his sake his disciples? On those who have a part in the first resurrection the second death shall have "no power." This implies that on some who will be raised from the dead the second death will have power. Are not the saints who lived before the one thousand years (if these years are in the past), and those who have lived since, to have no part in this "blessed" resurrection called the first? or is the second death to have power over them? Those who have a part in "the first resurrection" are called "blessed and holy"; and because they will live and reign with Christ. If this is all in the past, and under the reign of the scarlet colored beast on which the woman sat, in which time some fifty millions of the believers in Christ were put to death, the disciples of Christ have not much to hope for in the future.

God's Beautiful City. 5

Words by D. T. TAYLOR. Music by W. C. CLARK.



2 They roam through the gardens of endless spring;
They crowd all thy portals on rushing wing;
While the echoing domes of the palace ring
With the hymns of the angels that shout and sing.
O beautiful city!
Hark! hark, again! the angelic strain,
As gleams through the crystal that burnished train.

3 There the life-fires brighten, and burn, and roll
O'er diamonds that sparkle, o'er sands of gold;
Where to breathe the sweet air yields a bliss untold,
And the dwellers immortal shall never grow old.
O beautiful city!
We pierce the skies with longing eyes,
And yearn to inherit the golden prize.

4 I have heard in that city they wait for me;
That its gates stand open wide and free;
That the ransomed the King in his beauty see,
And live in his presence eternally.
O beautiful city!
In royal state blest mansions wait,
And beckon us on through the pearly gate.

5 I shall go where the summers will always bloom;
I shall walk no more amid trial and gloom;
I shall bid farewell to the withering tomb;
I shall deck my brow with the conqueror's plume.
O beautiful city!
Let us enter in, a crown to win!
Our words but half tell of the glory within.

REPORT OF THE "Conditional Immortality" Conference.

Mr. J. B. Heard then rose amid loud cheers and said: Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen,—On occasions of this character, it has been usual for me to follow the Master's rule and take the lowest seat of the room, until some one has called me up higher. I hope no one will think me presumptious this morning, or accuse me of having departed from the Master's spirit, although in this instance I have reversed the letter of that precept, and have of my own accord, without invitation, come to take a chief seat here (No, no, and cheers). I have done so deliberately, and for a reason which I hope this meeting will approve. I have undertaken—under God I hope—the very solemn and responsible office of a public preacher of divine truth in the metropolis. I have accepted the pastorate of a congregational church at Stockwell (cheers). Feeling, therefore, that I hold a responsible office, and that I am bound here in public to magnify the Master's work—(hear, hear)—I think it is my duty on an occasion like this, to come forward and proclaim publicly the convictions which it is well known I have held and advocated in various ways for many years past, and which I feel it my duty to maintain as a public preacher of divine truth in this our metropolis (loud cheers). I think it was a remark of an eminent doctor of Cambridge, with regard to every scientific question in his day passed through these three stages: First, it was "ridiculous;" second, it was "contrary to the Bible;" and in the third place, "we always thought so" (laughter and cheers).

Well now, I may say, the question which has brought this meeting together this morning has passed through the first of these three stages (hear, hear). He would be indeed a very presumptuous person who pooh-poohed it as beneath notice. I cannot say that it has quite got through the second stage of the question, for there are many serious but narrow-minded persons (I must call them so), who still cling to the skirts of traditional theology, and imagine, though they have not fully investigated the question, that it is contrary to the Bible. Now this is not certainly the position of a single educated teacher that I have ever met with (hear, hear). There is probably no one in the room—I say it with all modesty and yet with no little confidence—so competent to speak of the minds of educated teachers throughout the country. For some ten or eleven years, I have constantly advocated in all parts of the United kingdom, the cause of the Church Missionary Society, in connection with the Church of England. For some seven years, I was in connection with the Religious Tract Society, being up and down the country, and meeting religious teachers of all denominations; and therefore, I venture to say, with some degree of confidence, I know the opinions of public preachers of religion throughout the country; and I challenge contradiction to this statement, that you will not meet an educated minister of truth who holds the old fashioned views in a traditional way. He has almost always, I may say, some learned distinguo by which he gets over the difficulty; and as an illustration of my meaning, let me tell a well-known anecdote of old Bishop Stanley, father of the present Dean of Westminster.

On one occasion, when some worthy country clergyman was accused, and presented to him for refusing to read the Athanasian creed, the bishop being required to execute judgment on this recalcitrant parson, he laid his hand upon a Bible, and referred to John 8, asking the accusers of this pastor, "Will you be good enough to explain the sense in which you understand the Athanasian creed?" Well, they began to go out one after another, and he was left alone with the clergyman, to whom he said, "Neither do I condemn you." Such was the remark of the bishop. Now I think that illustrates the opinion of educated men on the question (hear, hear). I knew for many years, very intimately,—and it is one of the the happiest memories of my life,—the old Archbishop Whately, whose opinions on this question are perfectly well known. I felt a little wonder why so eminently truthful and candid a man—and a more truthful man never lived—had not quite the moral courage to put his name to a volume of sermons on this very question, which went through eight editions,—Sermons by a Country Parson. They are sermons which educated men know perfectly well. He delivered them to his congregation, at Hadleigh, in Suffolk, and they advocated precisely the views of my friends on this platform. I cannot help saying, in passing, it is matter of regret that there has not been a little more courage on this question. It is this which has made me feel it my duty, as a public preacher in this metropolis, to stand up here this morning (cheers). I have no new truth to give you. I do not wish to throw out an iota of discussion on the matter. This is not so much the purpose of our meeting. We are here rather, I conceive, to encourage one another in the truths we acknowledge, to countenance one another; and having met together in the way we have done this morning, we shall retire, each to his centre of labor, to extend by our personal influence the weight and importance of those truths; and, beyond all, permit me to say, to remember we are God's witnesses. It is a very important thought, which many orthodox christians overlook: "Ye are my witnesses, saith the Lord."

Now men will judge of us by the way in which we sustain such a character; and nothing could be more weighty and to the point, than the words of my friend, Mr. White, in regard to this subject, in his most striking metaphor as to how we should feel and act if our next door neighbor and friend were reputed to treat his own children with cruel barbarity. Let me repeat and enforce that metaphor. It is one which the eminent Plutarch himself used on this very question. Perhaps some in this room may remember that Plutarch, pagan as he was, had to discuss this very question,—whether he would rather be an atheist, or a believer in the gods; and he balanced the question this way: "Would I rather that men said there was no such man as Plutarch at all, or that Plutarch was cruel, vindictive, malignant; that he dwelt in a palace, and had fierce dogs at his gates, and let them loose upon the poor petitioner who came to prefer a request to him? I would rather," he said, "that men said there was no such man as Plutarch, than that he was capable of such enormities as these" (prolonged cheers). Now we are the Lord's witnesses; but we had rather be atheists, or non-atheists, than believe in a God such as you have represented in your traditional theology (renewed cheers). We teachers of divine truth have felt that we, who can look a little before us, can see the age slipping away towards infidelity and unbelief. My friend, Mr. Edward White, in his last exhortation,—and perhaps he has rather understated the matter,—said that there is a strong current of infidelity in our land. I marked that; and applauded most emphatically his expression with regard to Oxford. I have reason to know it with great sorrow that the young men of Oxford are rapidly slipping into unbelief. And I say to you parents, that you ought to consider this fact in sending your sons to universities, particularly to Oxford. It is the hot-bed of reactionary theology, and for that reason a hot-bed of scepticism (cries of "oh, oh!"). I also say, what every wise man knows, that if the pendulum swings to the extreme in one direction, it will also swing to the extreme in an opposite.

There is a legend which will illustrate my meaning of this reaction very well. The tradition was, that a temple was to be built, and would continue to progress to completion so long as King Solomon lived; for Solomon was King of the Genii, and by his power over them the temple was to be erected. At last, death overtook Solomon, and they put up a figure of him leaning upon a staff; until finally, the structure gave way, and down dropped Solomon, King of the Genii, and was buried in the ruins of the edifice. Now when I look at the popular dogmatic theology on this question, it seems to me that it is put up something as this temple was—on an unstable foundation, and will fall into ruin in like manner. (The next remarks were lost amid the renewed applause). Hence, I say, let us above all things seek the truth,—let us encourage one another in it,—coming together on occasions like this. And if these few incidental remarks which have been thrown out by the way shall stimulate others to come forward and proclaim their convictions in the manner that I am doing this morning, I shall be happy that I have spoken in the way that I have done.

Before I sit down, I have one last consideration to give with regard to the press. My friend Mr. White has told us about the religious press. Now I happen to know a little about the secular press; and I cut out the following extract written by the correspondent of a country newspaper—Oh! those wonderful, omniscient, and ubiquitous correspondents, they seem to have more eyes than Argus, and more hands than Briareus (laughter): "There is, it seems, a society in London, whose special feature is belief in the doctrine of 'couditional immortality.' The adherents of this doctrine belong mainly to the Evangelical party in the Church, and they appear to be numerous enough to require a society and conference to themselves. The special opinion which they hold has often been expressed by philosophic dreamers, but it has never been upheld as a theological doctrine by a section of the Church." (Laughter). I am very glad indeed that we are noticed by the secular press. It is a good sign, and long may it continue (loud cheers). (To be concluded.)

CHRIST'S first coming was the expectation of nations, this next is the expectation of christians. "Look up, and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh." (Luke 21: 28). Our eyes are still dropping in this valley of tears; but we look for the precious beams of the Sun of mercy, that shall dry them up. No Jew did ever more earnestly wish for the jubilee; no servant so desireth the end of his years; no stranger so longs to be at home; no overladen soul so groaneth for ease; no soldier so heartily contendeth to have his wars determined with conquest, as the saints expect the promise of the coming of Jesus Christ. It is the strength of their hopes, the sweet object of their faith, in the midst of all sorrows. "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly."—Ex.

IMPORTANCE OF THE PRESENT HOUR.

All time is important to those who occupy it, but the relative importance of a period is graded by the circumstances surrounding it. The importance of the most efficacious remedies and the most skillful nursing is greatest when disease is most threatening.

When an army holding the sword of an empire is brought into action, as was the French army at Waterloo, and the last reserved veterans rush into the awful vortex of death, and the national fate of millions hangs upon the results of victory or defeat, crowded into a brief hour, the importance of that hour becomes vastly magnified, and its history ever after read with intense interest.

So it is in all human experiences. There are times when we personally and collectively stand upon a pivot, and are forced to turn to the right or left, which decides an important destiny.

This principle was sadly exhibited in the experience of our federal Head in the garden of Eden. They stood upon a dizzy height, where they must decide their own destiny, and the destiny of a world for coming ages. The decisive hour came in which they must turn to the right, by believing God, or to the left, by yielding to Satan in disbelieving him. It doubtless seemed to them a small matter to eat or refuse to eat a little fruit, but the sovereignty of God's government of the universe was involved in the act, and therefore became so wonderfully important in its results. The interests of a world, for ages, were crowded into and decided by the acts of an hour. Wonderful indeed! Who can express its importance? It caused all the groans of creation, all the anguish of men and beasts, and the woes and death struggles of cursed humanity.

There was a tragic hour when the controversy between Cain and Abel, resulting from the antagonism between faith and unbelief, culminated in the martyrdom of the saint and the sealing of God's perpetual indignation upon the persecutor. Noah experienced one of those periods of vast importance to our race and world, when all were placed upon the pivot and turned and quivered in vacillation and uncertainty, until the mighty clock of destiny struck the end of the period of doubt. The faith which was victorious over the unbelief of the hour secured the salvation of the sainted family, while doubt, relating to the impending scenes overwhelmed its possessors in admonitory ruin.

A wonderful typical period of destiny came upon the cities of the plain, in the days of Lot, when the voice of God summoned the armies of truth and error into the field of contest, and ordered a decisive engagement in which all are driven to rally under their respective standards, and press the battle to the gate, where victory or defeat must be experienced by each. How grand and awful the moment, and how wonderful the decision! The few triumphed over the multitude. Worldly policy was entirely abortive, while the heavenly prevailed gloriously.

The final and awful hour which ended the golden period of Babylon's triumphs came at last, clothed with the fiat of Jehovah, which secretly and silently opened the pit of fate and ingloriously ended the victories of Babylon and the oppressions of Nebuchadnezzar's dynasty.

The Jews, as a nation, came to a period of wonderful importance to them, when God had purposed to test their professed loyalty to him, and their boasted confidence in his word. It was a period to which the prophecies definitely pointed, as the time for the first advent of their Messiah, and during which many predicted events and incidents should transpire as proof of the presence of the Christ, and that the transition period of the Christian dispensation to another had come. Their national destiny was then hinged upon the decisions of the hour. If they would accept the foretold events, then present, as proof presented by God that Mary's Son was their looked-for King, and accept his teaching and leading as such, then Jesus would have gathered them into national unity, and protected them as a hen gathers her brood under her wings for protection; but if they would not accept the Messiah, then, instead of their being the people to receive special blessings from God's hand, they were to suffer special judgments from him, and be scattered among all nations as the people of his curse. Their national destiny was then fixed for weal or woe, during that period; for it was appointed of God for that purpose, and could not be transferred to another.

Jesus expressed this truth connected with their final overthrow when he said, "And they shall lay thee even with the ground, and thy children within thee; and they shall not leave in thee one stone upon another, because thou knewest not the time of thy visitation." Luke 19: 44. The special judgments of God came upon them as they have upon all men since the world began, because they neglected or refused to obtain the required knowledge of revealed things.

Let all the people of this generation hear this thundering truth; for there is no truth more clearly stated and more prominently presented in the Book of God than this; viz., that men are "destroyed for lack of knowledge."

When we look at this grand subject, and see the long line of sublimely eventful periods in man's history in the past, and the immutable principle by which God has decided the fate of the tested millions in each case, the question comes home with overwhelming force, Are we occupying such a period? and must the people of this generation be acquitted or condemned by the same rule as all of those who had preceded it? We are most profoundly convicted and overwhelmingly convinced that the last and most grandly important hour in the experience and destiny of our race and world has come. We look upon this generation as poised upon the last pivot of destiny, and must immediately fall either into the arms of a coming Deliverer or into the yawning gulf of perdition.

But the world will scoff at this faith; yes, and if they did not scoff, it could not be true, for the special truths which have characterized these great religious movements have in every case been ridiculed by unbelievers, and the advocates of such truth persecuted and despised. If time has nearly run its tardy course, and the long series of mighty earth-scenes written in the Book of God are now closing their awful revolutions, then the opening future will reveal the fact that the present hour is the most grand and important, throwing upon men the most fearful responsibilities ever witnessed by our race.

All men are deeply impressed by an invisible spirit that this is a transition period; that the immediate future will present scenes and associations widely different from those of the past. Such an impression is evidently a silent warning from the Ruler of this world, notifying his creatures of his changeless purpose to bring the present order of earthly associations to an end.

The great ruling dynasties have had their day, and feel the premonitions of their approaching death. The prophetic cities have all reared their defiant walls, and swarmed with their blasphemous millions, and no more are found upon the sacred page to be anticipated, except the Eternal City of the saints.

The church of God has suffered the sultry march of her measured journey under the burning rays of persecution, and endured the biting frosts of rejection and reproachful slander from all the generations of her six millenaries. She now stands in prayerful mood, rejoicing that the night of her weeping is nearly passed, and the heavenly rays of a cloudless and eternal day are now gloriously presaging the immediate ending of sin and the curse, the resurrection of the vast multitudes of the dead, the re-robing of the earth in its bridal Edenic garments, and the long-prayed for rising of the Sun of the eternal age.

The present hour is the connecting link between a dark and stormy night and the heavenly effulgence of eternal day. It closes the battle-scenes of the ages and introduces the promised peace of a warless world. It unfolds and proclaims the last message of inspired truth to the nations of the last days. It is occupied by the heavenly Intercessor's last pleadings for a rebellious race.

O wonderful hour! who among the fallen tribes shall be able to spend thy moments according to the magnitude of their importance? We exceedingly fear that many will not comprehend the vast importance crowded into this hour, and will not therefore rise to the high position appointed by God for his servants when the end shall come. May the God of infinite mercy help his people to stand at their post in this fearful hour.

"DISTRESS OF NATIONS."

Before the Savior went away, his disciples asked him what there would be to show when he was about to return? In answer, he gave a long series of events, extending through the "great tribulation" under the Papal power, and then informed them that immediately after that closed, the signs of his coming would begin to appear. These signs would be seen both in the heavens, and on earth. First, there would be peculiar manifestations in the sun, moon, and stars; and then the closing signs would be seen on the earth; and among these, he specifies "distress of nations."

We believe the signs in the heavens are already fulfilled, and that the time is at hand to witness those which are to be seen on the earth. The great chains of consecutive prophecy, which reach to the end of this dispensation, indicate very clearly that we are near their termination. If so, we must be in the neighborhood of the "distress of nations." We think no one will claim that there is anything figurative in this expression. When Jesus said, "Upon the earth distress of nations," we believe every word in the expression is used in its most literal sense; hence the sign will be apparent to all; but only the disciples of Christ will receive it as a sign of his coming. These signs will not convince the world of the coming of Christ, any more than Noah's preaching and the building of the ark convinced the antediluvians of the approaching flood.

The distress cannot come without a cause; neither can it be expected very suddenly; but like a drouth, or famine, it will continue to increase till it will be intense. It is not to be confined to one country, for it is called the "distress of nations." We see no evidence that this event is in the past. As the Savior does not tell us what will produce the distress, we cannot yet tell with certainty, but it may be proper to consider things that would be sufficient to cause such a result.

1. A general famine would produce suffering and distress.

2. Pestilence would cause it, should it sweep over the world as it has done in some eastern countries.

3. A great, and general war would produce considerable distress where the battles were fought, and among the friends of the killed and wounded.

4. These three causes may be combined, or operating in different countries at the same time, and thus bring about distress of nations.

5. It may be produced when there is neither famine, pestilence or war, and be intense and general. We refer to financial distress, caused by a stagnation in all kinds of business; when the laboring classes can get no work, and manufacturers find no sale for their goods; when confidence in men is destroyed, and covetousness is the ruling law of nations.

It is expressly foretold by the prophet, that in the "last days" men will be noted for their pride and covetousness. There is probably no class of people more keenly distressed in hard times than the rich. When speaking of the time of the end, the apostle James says:

"Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl, for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten. Your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days." James 5: 1-3."

This shows that in "the last days," even the rich men will have miseries, or distress. When worldly men lose their property, it produces a very keen distress, and often leads them to commit suicide. When the poor man can get no work, with which to earn means to support his family, he is distressed. Let such a state of things be general, and it would be proper to call it "distress of nations."

It is well to inquire, What could produce such a state of things, when there was neither famine, pestilence or war? Extravagance. Whenever an individual, or nation, becomes proud, and lives beyond its means, ruin must follow, accompanied with keen distress. The pride and extravagance manifested during the past few years has probably had no parallel in the history of the world. The great covetousness has led men to resort to all sorts of means to obtain money, which has become the god of the nations, especially of the American.

The time seems to have fully come for the reaction, or results, to be felt. For some time a large class of business men have been spending beyond their income. This is true, not only of men in moderate circumstances, but of the great manufacturing establishments, including many railroad companies. Each has been trying to excel the others in extravagant elegance in living, in buildings, furniture, and pleasure entertainments, till general bankruptcy now stares them in the face. This produces distress. As it is said, "the great fish eat up the little ones," so, when the great and rich men begin to "weep and howl" over the hard times, their burden is soon felt by the laboring classes, as at the present time. This state of things is becoming world-wide, affecting all civilized nations. Business men say it is "without a parallel. The cry of "hard times" is heard from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from Europe and Asia. The cords are continually tightening, with the financial strain; and careful, far-seeing men, believe that distressing times are sure to come.

Says the Boston Journal:—

"The query, 'When will business revive?' is responded to by so many prophets and by such varied predictions that one is at a loss to fix the exact date when this business revival, so much needed, will take place. It is very doubtful whether we shall ever see that rushing activity which has marked certain periods of our commercial history—certainly not unless some violent disturbance not now anticipated shall create a demand, by employing the surplus labor of the world, for all the products that can be furnished."

On the arrival of the Hon. Edwards Pierrepont, the American Minister to England, July 3d, 1876, he is reported to have said:

"I know that you who are engaged in commercial affairs with America are at this present time much depressed, because trade in my own country is in the most depressed condition in which it has ever been since my memory. . . . If you will look at it you will discover that my country was never so rich in its productions, never with such general public health as now, never such materials for wealth and prosperity. (Hear, hear). The reason of its present depression comes solely alone from that lack of confidence that is owing altogether to too great expansion and too great excitement, which are necessarily succeeded by reaction and depression. Now, men of capital are unwilling to embark in any lengthened enterprise; no one feeling quite certain of the future is willing to awaken and revive our drooping energies and our drooping business."

Mr. Pierrpont is looking for better times soon, but he may be mistaken.

The distress has also reached India. A correspondent of the Times, July 16th, says:

"The Times' special from Calcutta says: 'The exchange question occupies public attention to the almost entire exclusion of other topics. Whether the lowest point has been reached, whether the depression will be permanent or temporary, and whether any, and what, remedy is possible are the main subjects of conversation among all classes. . . .

Except the mutiny, this is the worst crisis in the Anglo-Indian history, and there are few instances anywhere of a calamity so crushing and so general. If the depression continues, it will probably paralyze the import trade. The problem before the Indian Government calls for the most anxious consideration, and if the depression is to be permanent it will resolve itself into the question of how to stave off national bankruptcy."

When speaking of the present state of things in Germany, the Boston Journal of July 22nd says:

"To the recital which we lately made of certain discouraging facts and symptoms in the trade of Great Britain, extending to all branches of business and occasioning much distress among the middle and lower classes, may be added a statement hardly more hopeful concerning business affairs in Germany. As we have before intimated, the existing business depression in this country, while it has special local causes and symptoms, is a part of a general reflex movement which has swept over most of the leading commercial nations, and whose influence may be traced in nearly all the great trade centres of the world. Germany, in common with other countries, is feeling . . . a severe financial stringency, which has demoralized her industries and inflicted much suffering upon her people. On a superficial view, this position of affairs appears specially surprising, because the payment of the immense war indemnity by France would have been thought sufficient to enrich the nation and develop increased activity in its industries.

The New York Bulletin reports that the depressing influence of this condition of things extends, in a greater or less degree, through the whole of Germany. The iron, the coal, and the cotton trades, and indeed all branches of productive industry, are in a state of stagnation."

May not all this be the beginning of the "distress of nations," foretold by Jesus, as one of the last signs to be witnessed before his second coming? To complete the distress, war, famine and pestilence, may be added. All things show that we are very near the grandest of all events—the coming of Christ. Is the reader ready and waiting? Is the heart pure? Does it cry out, "Come, Lord Jesus," "come quickly?" Remember, there is a crown for all "who love his appearing."

M. G.

GOOD FRUIT.—We hear of much good fruit produced by sending the Crisis to persons for three months. Between seventeen and eighteen hundred have been sent out, carrying the good tidings of Jesus' coming. The Brn. and Srs. have done nobly. Do not get "weary in well doing, for in due time we shall reap if we faint not." Many are setting out "centennial trees" this year; let your centennial tree be the planting of the truth in some new heart by sending the Crisis three months to some honest soul. We lack but two hundred and thirty-five to make the number two thousand. When this is read, sit down at once, and plant one or more of these centennial trees of truth in the families of your neighbors. It may result in their eternal salvation. Now is the golden moment. Let all do what they can immediately. Do it for Jesus.

M. G.

NEW BEDFORD.—We spent the Sabbath of July 16th with the church on Kempton street, New Bedford, and had a refreshing season from the Lord. The church appears to be in a healthy condition. The morning love-feast, and evening conference were seasons of lively interest. Quite a number decided to make a full consecration to Christ, in order to be "filled with the Holy Spirit."

We called on Bro. M. Batchelor, and found him in a healthy state of mind, sweetly resting in Jesus. He has been very sick, but now appears to be free from disease. He hopes the Lord will allow him to go forth again to preach the good news that Jesus is soon coming to set up the kingdom of heaven. Pray for him.

The following is a note from him: M. G.

[July 16th.] "I am seventy-one years old to-day. Thirty years have been spent in the ups and downs of life. Over forty years ago the church set me to preaching. I have never been without an appointment since. I have been thirty-three years in the Advent cause. I have not preached for mere effect, but felt that woe is me if I did not preach. I have no regrets. My first vacation is twenty-one weeks of sickness to fit me for another vigorous, and, I hope, a long campaign. I hope to be up again and labor in his cause. I thank the brethren for all their kindness, and hope they will continue to pray for me."

THE HOOSAC TUNNEL.—The first express passenger train passed through the Hoosac Tunnel Monday, July 17th. The tunnel is four and one-half miles in length. It was commenced in 1855, and cost about eleven and a half million of dollars, besides nearly four million dollars of interest money, making a total of $15,123,963.66. There are now some six thousand freight cars, belonging to different R. R. companies, composing what is known as the "Hoosac Tunnel Line."

The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

CENTENNIAL, AND THE CITY OF BROTHERLY LOVE.

During the centennial year of our nation's existence, unparalleled attractions are spread out before the people of this and other countries in the far-famed "Quaker City"; and thousands are flocking there to behold the wonderful exposition of all nations, in the various departments in which human genius has manifested itself. Persons cannot conceive the magnitude and grandeur of this exhibition now in progress in Philadelphia, unless they have been there and carefully examined it. Those who have made a visit to the centennial grounds, and are competent judges, affirm that this magnificent display in the different departments of scientific operation, exceeds anything of the kind that the world has ever witnessed, including those held at Paris and Vienna.

By divine providence, we were permitted in June, previous to the hot weather, to make a flying trip to the city of "Brotherly Love." We spent four days thus very pleasantly, and we trust very profitably. After being on the grounds one day, and taking a general survey of the centennial exposition, we could only say of it, in writing home to our friends, that it was indescribably wonderful.

In all the things there on exhibition, indicating the highest type of genius, scientific culture and attainment, there were to be seen evidences of change and decay, which the lapse of time would bring about; unlike that city for which Abraham looked, "whose builder and maker is God"; for that, when once located on the new earth, forming the metropolis of the same, will endure throughout the countless ages of the eternal world, without indicating any signs of decomposition in any department. O, city of God, quickly come and gladden the hearts of thousands that are looking for thee.

THE ROUTE.

We went from Boston to New York City over what is popularly known as the "Stonington Line"; which is by rail from Boston to Stonington over the Boston and Providence and Stonington R. R.; from thence by steamer Stonington, or Rhode Island, to New York City. All the comforts and conveniences which are afforded by nice cars and gentlemanly superintendents, conductors, and captains on boats, are experienced by passengers who patronize this popular line to the great city of the Empire State. Those who are fond of beautiful scenery can be gratified to any required extent in the sail up Long Island Sound.

While in Philadelphia, we were permitted to meet Bro. Geo. A. Brown, who has the pastoral charge of the church there. Bro. B. has labored zealously to spread the truth in this large city, not without success. We met with the church in Camden, N. J., one evening, and listened to a sermon from the old veteran of the cross, Bro. Boutell, who always has something to say about "good living religion," and who makes exceedingly practical the faith of our Lord's return. It was a profitable season.

After spending four days in this far-famed city of P., we stepped on board Nahum's chariots, and like the lightning sped away through valley and dale, until we reached New York, after which we soon found ourselves in the city of Providence, R. I., our home for the present. We thank the Lord for his protection and mercy to us.

Fraternally yours, A. W. SIBLEY.

— A society has been formed in London for the colonization of Syria and Palestine with Christian settlers from England. At a recent meeting one of the speakers was Rev. Dr. Bliss, of the American Presbyterian College at Beirut.

DOTTINGS BY THE WAY.

June 8th, by the Fall River route, I started with my wife to visit friends in Camden, N. J., and if the way opened, to do what I could for Christ and his blessed cause. After a quick and pleasant passage from Boston to Philadelphia, we soon found our friends and stopping place in Camden. We also found the weather much warmer than when we left home, but by the goodness of God we were kept in working order.

Sunday morning I went to Philadelphia, in search of the Advent meeting. I found Bro. Brown had just returned from Mass. In compliance with his request, I consented to preach the word of life to the lovers of Jesus and his appearing. They have a very nice place of worship, good congregations, and it looked as though there was a chance of doing great good in this city by a faithful proclamation of the vital, soul-saving gospel, which is the power of God to save all who believe it. I could but hope that the church might stand so free and high in spiritual affinity with Christ, by the power of the Holy Ghost, that their light might be seen and felt in "the city of brotherly love."

In the afternoon I also consented to speak in Camden, in the Advent Chapel, where I met a few of like precious faith. I had a good season in urging upon them the necessity of keeping before them the Lord's soon coming, and the necessary preparation for the impending event; thus doing what I could to strengthen the things that remain.

The next Saturday, June 17th, I made a flying visit to Vineland, N. J., the Eden of the State. The chariots that "run like the lightnings," and sometimes jostle fearfully, soon took me over the track. It is a level country, dotted with small houses, surrounded with gardens, fruit and flowers, mostly without fences; so those that keep a cow have her tied by the horns with a long rope by the wayside. There are no hills nor valleys to be seen here. After a pleasant ride, seeing all I could, I heard the cry, "Vineland." Unlike all the little stops on the way, there was a large crowd awaiting the arrival of the train, many leaving; and surely it looked business like. Soon the Editor of the Bible Banner was in sight, to welcome me to his home and family. It was my first visit, so I was interested to see its charms and beauties in the little time allotted me. Its wide streets, beautiful gardens, pleasant cottages, splendid mansions, public buildings, school-houses, and meeting-houses not a few; added to this, every variety of the most delicious fruit trees and bushes, burdened and ripening for the market, make it a desirable place for residence. And with all these blessings and attractions, they forget the Giver, and but few comparatively are in the faith looking for a better country, that is the heavenly. As far as our faith is concerned, the whole State is a mission field, and the message should be sounded, and the signs given of the speedy realization of the christian hope of coming glory.

They have an Advent meeting at Floral Hall, a pleasant place for all it will hold. I attended meeting with Bro. Phelps, and preached twice to attentive congregations. We had a communion service and Bible class, beside Sunday school. I left them feeling a strong desire for the interest of Bro. P. and the few of like precious faith struggling to keep prominent the doctrine of Christ's speedy coming. Every effort I put forth for God and truth makes me cry, O for more of the Spirit and power of God, so that hearts may be reached and permeated with the love of Jesus by the Spirit, bringing them into such a nearness as to make them entirely new. How hard to reach men, so as to make them feel the need of this radical change.

Philadelphia is having a continual holiday. Flags are flying, designating the loyalty and union of all countries; but the excitement caused by the great show, which envelopes all minds, is calculated to take the place of that which is more important—"Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness." Hence it will not be beneficial to pure religion, and it will take a mighty effort, by the power of God and human energy, to keep and bring back the spiritual interest and feeling in Phila. to the higher life of former days. Everything seems combined to draw away from the living Fountain, and keep one interested in things of less importance; so that the thunder tones of the soon-coming One may not be heard. The command is, Watch, lest coming suddenly, he find you sleeping.

I took occasion to visit the Centennial, and sent a brief report to the Chelsea Record, as follows:

MR. EDITOR:—I am now on a visit among friends in Camden, N. J., and have availed myself of the privilege of visiting the Centennial exhibition, with its ten thousand times ten thousand magnificent curiosities, attractions and beauties. There is a grand display of mechanism in all its varieties, from all parts of the world, showing the increase of knowledge; so with the agricultural department. You can see all the modern improvements of husbandry, with the best products of all countries and States. You can see every thing you can think of, and a thousand things you never would think of unless you saw them here. I shall not try to give a description of the wonders to be seen here. It is a big thing, and no idea can be formed of it by newspaper descriptions. The spending of two hours in riding round the grounds will surprise you with the gigantic proportions of an achievement accomplished in buildings to accommodate the World's Centennial exhibition Then enter the main building, and with the freedom to go where you please, and two or three days spent looking till the eyes ache, walking till your limbs ache, then leaving with the thought that you have seen but little of what there is to be seen at the Centennial.

A man to see and criticise what is to be seen wants three months. If I were to do this thing over again, I would wait until cool weather. It would be more pleasant, and there are accessions continually, and will be for months to come. The ambition to excel gives a splendid display of the best in every department of life. It is but little to say, it is well worth making an effort to see. Go in the early morning, enter the main building, see the varieties from London, Paris, China, Japan, Germany, Ireland, Scotland, Canada to Greenland, and so on till the forenoon has passed, and you have made but little progress. But the outer man must be replenished; then you find yourself in Paris, there dine. After refreshment, you start anew to explore, and soon find yourself among New England's perfections, beautifully arranged for inspection. You gaze, the eye catches something near, more dazzling still, so you are hurried on, wondering what next. The next is seen, and thus from building to building, from apartment to apartment, till you can hardly stir, until the covering of goods apprizes you that night is coming on, and you must take exit to your transient home.

BRO. L. REIMER.

Editors of the Crisis:—Bro. L. Reimer says in a special notice to his readers, under date of June 21st: "For about eight days (perhaps in consequence of nightly overexertion) our other eye has become partly obscured. We are thus at present not in a condition to continue the Bible Searcher farther, even if we possessed the means. Should an operation upon the eyes, which we intend by God's help to undergo, fully restore our sight, the Brn. will hear from us again. We commit ourselves until then to the care of our heavenly Father, and also desire the hearty prayers of our dear brethren.

A WORD TO THE WISE.

I heard it said at the Office, that "but few" to whom the Crisis is sent free have paid so much as the postage. Your love for a gift so valuable should induce you at once to send on the postage, so as to let them know that you appreciate the paper, and desire its continuance. Don't read and forget. Thus much I feel it duty to say.

L. BOUTELL.

Correspondence.

From Sr. Sarah Shrinor.

Dear Brn. and Sisters:—It is not from lack of interest in the cause of our blessed Redeemer, and the glorious truths that are so fearlessly advocated in the Crisis, that my pen has been so long silent; for these things grow dearer to me continually. I love to meditate upon them, and with all my heart I love the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ. The editorials that appear from week to week in the Crisis, showing how the prophecies are being fulfilled in these last days, and how plainly the end is drawing nigh, are deeply interesting to me.

Only one sad thought casts a shadow over the prospect that opens to our vision; there are so many who are unprepared for the events so close at hand;—not only those who entirely neglect these things, and turn scornfully away from them, but there is reason to fear that many who profess to be followers of Christ, and to believe that his coming is nigh, will be found among the foolish virgins, having no oil in their vessels, their lamps gone out, because the cares of life and the deceitfulness of riches choke the word, crowding out the things that belong to their eternal peace. O how important that we attend to the injunction of our Savior, "Take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares."

More and more do I feel the need of constant watchfulness and prayer, and also of sounding the warning everywhere—"Jesus is coming." This is the watchword. Let it sound from shore to shore. I don't know that we could have a better recommendation from the outside world, than the expression made by one who came one day to the tent-meeting held here three weeks ago. It was said, "Their whole cry is, Jesus is coming. They pray it, they sing it, and they preach it." I could only say, Praise the Lord for such a testimony. What more glorious news could we proclaim? When we think of all that is connected with his coming, what great things we are expecting then, and what our lives must be in order to be prepared for it; surely there is enough to occupy all our thoughts and all our powers.

For some months past, my time has been almost wholly given up to going from place to place, assisting in meetings, and holding meetings for the purpose of proclaiming these truths to the people, and urging the necessity of preparing to meet the Lord. Of course, this takes my husband from his farm and shop; but his heart is in the work, and he is willing to sacrifice all to help carry the good news of salvation to the perishing, and to encourage those who have set out for the kingdom. Bro. and Sr. Clark are about to leave this part of the country to go to Virginia City, Nevada. May the blessing of Israel's God attend them. We shall miss their labors here very much. It strengthens us to know that we have the sympathies and prayers of God's dear children; therefore we say, pray for us, that our faith fail not, and that we falter not in the work of the Lord.

Washington, Washington Co., Kan.

From Bro. B. Spaulding.

Brn. Editors:—I am here in Aroostook county, near New Brunswick, visiting families, giving lectures, and writing letters. I spend much time in writing because my feet fail, so that I find it difficult to walk much. I find here a very large field to labor in. There are few ministers here, but there are no other ministers, they are so poor; but they are very ready to hear, and quite ready to receive the truths in relation to the coming of Jesus, the resurrection, and restitution. I am now in Woodland. Here I find quite an interest to hear. People turn out well, and listen with great attention, and some are ready to be baptized. I started to-day to leave the neighborhood, but found things so interesting that I turned back to labor longer. Last evening several arose, and confessed their need of Christ, and things look encouraging.

This is a newly settled country. Many yet live in log houses. Most of them began with nothing, and it takes a very long time to get up into easy circumstances, yet they all get a comfortable living. They are all farmers, and of course find plenty of work to do. The State lands are cheap—only fifty cents an acre, and that is to be paid in work on the road; and there must be a house on it and a family in it in two years, and a certain number of acres under cultivation in five years; then they get a deed from the State. People are moving in here quite fast. Yes, and the Advent doctrine is being received very generally; I think faster than that of any other denomination.

I remain firm in the faith which I have so long tried to proclaim. Perhaps I have gained some in knowledge. In this new country the Advent doctrine is fast prevailing. Ears are open to hear, and hearts to receive, and I can get access in most any place. I love and enjoy my work. My paralyzed feet are the only obstacle in the way, but I thank God I can do a little. I am well received and hospitably treated, everywhere. Blessed be the Lord.

Woodland, Me., July 10th, 1876.

Extracts from Letters.

Sr. Lydia Gunn writes from Greenwich, Mass., July 16th:—"The Crisis is an increasing treasure to us. It wears a sanctified look. I never before took a paper in hand with so much heavenly satisfaction. It seems next to the Bible. I should rather give up all the table luxuries, and many of the conveniences of life, than to give it up. God bless the editors and writers of this paper, and nerve up their hearts and pens in this noble enterprise. Your reward is coming soon. Jesus will not stay away long from his weary, waiting bride.

I am happy in God, and long to see him as he is, and dwell with him forever. July 4th, I entered into my seventy-second year. I want to say for the encouragement of others, that my husband, who left off using tobacco the 16th of last October, has not the least appetite for it now. It was a great victory. God helped him, and he now rejoices, and is happy in God."

Bro. Abram Hardy writes from Madoc, Ont., July 12th, 1876:—I have great pleasure in stating that your paper is doing much good in this place. It has been the means, in the hands of God, to awaken the minds of some, so that they are seeking to find rest to their souls. One man said that one of your papers was worth ten cents to read. He was a Presbyterian. I am the only preacher in this place who is looking for the coming of Christ. I am trying to preach it to the people."

Bro. Ali Andrews writes, July 14th, from Bridgeport, Ct.:—"This church is one of the weak ones, yet we feel strong in the Lord, for by the help of kind friends we are able to have preaching every first day. Last Sunday, Bro. G. L. White baptized five persons, making twenty-five that this brother has baptized with us in less than one year. There are others ready to be baptized when he comes again. The hundreds of the three-months Crisis that have been given away in this vicinity have been the means of bringing many into the faith and hope of the church, as held by the fathers, who lived as sojourners here, looking for a better country, according to the promise in Isa. 65:17."

FOREIGN NEWS.

The Eastern War.

London, July 19. The Times Ragus despatch says the Montenegrin march on Mostar is uninterrupted. Salem, Palank and Castaba surrendered under the threat of bombardment. Mukhtar Pacha, commanding the Turks, intends going out to meet the Montenegrins in the field, hoping the troops from Bosnia will take them in the rear. Mostar is considered indefensible.

Belgrade, July 19. A terrible battle was fought yesterday near Saitschar. The Servian forces, numbering 10,000 men, attacked the Turkish army 12,000 strong, who were entrenched near Saitschar, and succeeded in carrying three positions. The object of the Turks was to gain the road between Nisch and Saitschar, leading into the heart of Servia. London, July 21. The Telegraph's Vienna special says it is asserted that M. Koumoundouras, President of the Greek Council of Ministers, has requested the King to return home immediately, as the Chambers must be called to vote credits for the mobilization of 40,000 men.

Another dispatch to the Standard from Constantinople says: "Notwithstanding anything you may read to the contrary, the Sultan's condition is very serious, and his abdication is imminent."

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Philadelphia, July 21. The storm here last night proved very disastrous. The gale struck the city at Gray's Ferry, on the line of the Baltimore and Wilmington Railroad, extending into the southwestern portion of the city, tearing down a large number of trees and tearing the roofs off of over one hundred houses. A portion of the round house attached to the Baltimore depot was demolished; one hundred feet of the roof of Howell Brother's paper manufactory, Rief, Wilson and Fentintre's writing paper factory, and several other mills were blown off and the contents of the buildings damaged by rain; total loss estimated at $500,000.

On the above roads Campmeeting Tickets, good from Aug. 7th to Aug. 23d, must be called for at the ticket offices, and they must also be signed by the Secretary at the campmeeting. Remember this.

Passengers coming from North of South Vernon, unless provided with return tickets, should purchase only to South Vernon, and then purchase to Springfield and return. The same rule will apply also to passengers coming from East of, or in the vicinity of Greenfield.

Central Vermont Railroad.

Arrangements have been made with this Road so that all who come over this Road to attend the Campmeeting will purchase regular Tickets to South Vernon. Then buy Campmeeting Tickets for Springfield. On the camp-ground the Secretary will, upon the request of such, furnish them with a free return pass from South Vernon to the place on the Vt. Central R. Road from which they came. And this without regard to the number who may go. But be sure and follow our directions.

On the Springfield, Athol, and North Eastern Railroad fare is reduced one-half. Call for Campmeeting Tickets, which will be endorsed by the Secretary.

On the Worcester and Nashua R. R., Campmeeting Tickets will be sold at Nashua, Ayer Junction, Clinton, and Sterling Junction. Be sure and call for Campmeeting Tickets, as no passes will be given out this year.

The New London Northern Railroad has reduced the fare on their Road. Tickets to be had at New London, Norwich, Willimantic, and Stafford. Good Aug. 7th to Aug. 23d. Buy Campmeeting Tickets for Palmer, at which place purchase Campmeeting Tickets for Springfield.

On the Providence and Worcester R. R., Campmeeting Tickets at one third discount can be obtained at the depot in Providence, good from Aug 7th to Aug 23d. Call for Campmeeting Tickets.

Further arrangements will be noticed hereafter.

Ample provision has been made for boarding and lodging on the ground. Price of board, 80 cents per day. Breakfast or supper, 35 cents; dinner, 50 cents; horse keeping 50 cts. per day; baiting 35 cts.

Sunday trains will run at same rates.

Boston and Albany have reduced fare from Springfield to Seabrook and return, to $5.10. From Worcester and return, $3.10. Tickets good from Aug. 19th until Sept. 6th. So all who wish to attend the Alton Bay meeting can do so, and return on their Seabrook tickets. Tickets will be sold from Seabrook to Alton Bay and return at $2.50.

All desirous of building or renting tents on the ground, or renting rooms in the neighborhood, or for information relative to the meeting, please address the Secretary at Seabrook, N. H.

Able and efficient ministers of the gospel will be present to preach the word. The committee will spare no pains for the advancement of the interests of the meeting.

D. M. Leavitt, for Committee.
N. H. Robie, General Agent.
C. A. Barton, Secretary.

Special Notice to Conn. Brethren.

For the general comfort of those attending our campmeeting, some improvements are needed on the camp-ground. It has been decided to make a sufficient number of new seats with backs, to accommodate five hundred persons. The lumber will be delivered on the ground cut up, and each part fitted ready to put together. There is some other work necessary to be done on the ground, and if our brethren generally will come or send a man, and give us one day's work, it will greatly lighten the burden and reduce the expense. To this end, we invite you to come to the camp ground in good season, Wednesday, August 23d (or if stormy the next fair day) Joiners' tools are wanted to build the seats; and axes, hoes, rakes, and crowbars to do the other work. Let every man bring tools of some kind with him, and not be dependent on his neighbor. Brethren, please don't forget to respond to this invitation

For the Committee, O. D. Woodruff.

The Lake View Campmeeting, Magog, P. Q., Canada, will be held, as per vote of conference, immediately after the Alton Bay meeting, to commence Sept. 2nd, and continue over two Sabbaths. The business of the conference will be attended to during the meeting, at such times as will least interfere with the regular services of the campmeeting; and we trust an effort will be made to wisely harmonize our campmeeting and other interests, so as best to subserve the interests of the cause of God among us. We expect able ministers to be present to preach the word, and trust the Lord of the harvest will send so many, and such ones, as will be for the best. Ministers will have free passage through the beautiful Lake Memphramagog from Newport, Vt., and return; all others half fare, as also on all the lines of the Passumpsic, and on other roads, of which more hereafter.

Let all come who can, especially those interested in the cause of our coming Savior. Come early. Provide yourselves with bedding, straw ticks, etc., and shelter will be provided. Board and horse keeping to be had at reasonable rates.

C. P. Dow, for the Committee.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE Second Advent Christian Association.

The annual meeting of this Association will be held in Chelsea, Mass., on Wednesday, Aug. 23rd, commencing at two o'clock p. m. Besides the regular business usually transacted at the annual meeting, action will be taken looking toward the still further amending of the Constitution.

It is hoped that there may be a full attendance of delegates, and it is suggested, if any conferences entitled to representation in this Association have as yet failed to appoint their delegates, that they will appoint them in due season for this meeting, which will be one of great importance.

By order of the Board of Directors,
C. E. Barnes, Secretary.

American Advent Mission Society.

The Annual Meeting of the American Advent Mission Society for the election of officers will be held in Chelsea, Mass., commencing Thursday, Aug. 24th, 1876, at 2 o'clock p. m.

The members are composed of the annual delegates to, and officers of, the Advent Christian Association (East) and the Western Advent Christian Association, and of all ministers in good standing—co-operating therewith.

A. W. Sibley, Secretary.

Notice.

An extra session of the N. H. Second Advent Christian Conference is hereby called to meet on the Alton Bay camp-ground, Tuesday, Aug 22d, at ten o'clock a. m., to choose delegates to the Advent Christian Association, and transact other business that may come before the Conference. As business of importance is to be transacted, it is desired that all churches in the State be represented by their ministers and delegates.

A. Ross. T. W. Piper.
J. G. Smith. C. H. Fletcher.

A Call to the Second Advent Churches in New Hampshire.

It is important that the Secretary of the N. H. Advent Christian Conference be informed without delay of the number of members of the churches in the State, that we may know how many delegates to send to the Advent Christian Association. Let the Pastor, Clerk, Elder, or Deacons, report at once to the Secretary at Newport, N. H.

C. H. Fletcher, Sec.

Tremont Campmeeting.

The annual campmeeting at Tremont, Mass., will commence Monday, July 31st, and continue to Aug. 8th. Arrangements will be made as formerly for board and lodging. All who can bring tents are requested to do so. Dear brethren, as we may be permitted to have one more gathering on this consecrated ground before the Lord comes, let us avail ourselves of this opportunity to do all we can to arouse the church, and save the lost. We intend to secure good laborers to help in this blessed work to give the last notes of warning to a lost world; for the omens which are now looming up in Europe strongly indicate that our work will soon be closed up for this world.

Tickets from Boston to be had at the Crisis Office for the round trip for $1.90.

Henry V. Davis, for the Com.

Springfield Campmeeting.

I wish all who are not going to use their tent ground this year, would notify me as soon as possible, so that I can accommodate others with your spot before Wednesday morning, August 16th. Such as have frames and floors would, no doubt, like to rent them for a little something, rather than let them stand idle, and be more exposed to injury than if they were covered and protected. There are a number of Springfield people from other churches who want tent spots. It bids fair for a large and good meeting. If any have rooms in wooden tents to rent, please inform me, also telling the location and price, immediately, and I will rent them. Those wishing to get help to work putting up tent frames on the ground, will find help on the ground, also lumber and nails, as usual. Direct to Chicopee Falls, Mass.

Hiram Munger.

For Sale.

Alton Bay Camp-ground.

Persons coming to this ground previous to the regular meeting, and desiring their baggage conveyed to their tents, will please send me a postal card the day previous to their coming, as I have been appointed to see to this matter.

John L. Ricker, Alton Bay, N. H.

Notice.—All persons wishing to hire rooms or tents, locate, buy or sell tents, on the Alton Bay Camp-ground, will please correspond with J. G. Smith, Farmington, N. H., and J. D. Swain, Alton, N. H. J. Couch, for Com.

For Sale.—Tent No. 78, Alton Bay, in a good location, near the boarding tent, nearly new, and convenient. Price $80. Address David Hayes, Dover, N. H.

Bethel, Vt., Campmeeting and Conference.—The Vermont Annual Conference will be holden on the Bethel camp-ground, Sept. 12th and 13th. It is important that we have a full delegation. The campmeeting will commence the 14th, and hold till the 21st. Particulars hereafter.

A. A. Hoyt, for Com.

The Connecticut Campmeeting near Plainville, is appointed for September 2nd to the 11th inclusive. Particulars in due time.

For the Committee, O. D. Woodruff.

The Wolfboro Campmeeting will commence Saturday, Aug. 12th, and hold over Sunday, Aug. 20th. Board will be furnished on the ground at 80 cents per day. Ample hotel and boarding-house accommodation in the immediate vicinity of the grounds, at reasonable charges.

A reduction of about one half fare has been made by the following railroads: Worcester, Nashua and Rochester; Boston and Maine; Eastern and branches; Portland and Rochester; and the Maine Central. Also Steamer Mt. Washington; Lady of the Lake; and Portland and Bangor steamboat Co. Tickets good from August 10th to Sept 5th inclusive.

The Boston and Maine R. R. will not issue campmeeting tickets to Wolfboro; but persons wishing to attend the meeting, can purchase at all stations on their road campmeeting tickets to Alton Bay. (Have their baggage checked to Wolfboro.) And when they arrive at Alton Bay, go on board steamer Mt. Washington, and purchase a campmeeting ticket to Wolfboro, which will be 70 cts. and return. Passengers by this route can attend both meetings, as the tickets are good from Aug. 10th to Sept. 5th, which covers the time of both meetings. Take the 8.45 or 12 o'clock train from Boston, as the 3.30 does not connect with boats.

Jasper Stone, for the Committee.

The R. I. Campmeeting, at Coventry Centre, R. I., on the H. P. and Fishkill R. R., will commence Wednesday, Sept. 6th, and close Friday, the 15th. To those in the business circles of life, that are anxiously looking for the return of former prosperity, with fearful forebodings of the future; and those that are watching coming events, waiting the promised return of the Savior, in like manner as he went away to give life and immortality to the faithful, this meeting will be one of unusual interest. Preachers will be expected to show from the Bible the first named class, the position they occupy, as plainly as did Noah's preaching the antediluvians, and the absolute necessity of getting ready to meet the things soon coming on the earth; and cause the second class to lift up their head, and rejoice that their redemption draweth nigh. The signs of the times are as unmistakable omens of the final doom of man, as the putting forth of the buds of the fig tree are of the approach of summer. Being obliged to reduce our expenses to meet liabilities, that we owe no man, free boarders, not active spiritual laborers, will be expected to labor in any position assigned them, to save expense of former meetings. By this arrangement, we do not exclude our aged sisters, who with anxiety have cared for and made happy the home of him whom the woe has been upon if he preach not the word. Come, every one of you, and know that the Lord provides for the Marthas as well as the Marys. Those willing to volunteer their services to reduce the expense of the meeting, will please write J. P. Hazard, Greene, R. I., that there be no confusion at the commencement of the meeting, or unnecessary trouble in hiring help. Board 80 cts. per day. Horse keeping 75 cts. per day, ample room being provided on both sides of the road for horses and carriages. No teams or carriages will be allowed to stand within the limits of the highway. Railroad fare reduced as usual. By order of the committee.

Appointments.

☞ Appointments must be received as early as TUESDAY MORNING (as our paper goes to press about noon) to insure insertion for the coming week.

☞ The following Resolution was passed at the late meeting of the A. C. P. Society:—

"Resolved, That no appointments be published in the Crisis henceforth for persons unknown to the Editorial Board (by which is understood the Editors, Editorial Committee, and Business Agent), unless satisfactory reference shall be given."

The Committee appointed by the Adv. Chris. Association, at its last Annual Meeting, to advise with the Editorial Board "in relation to the publication in the World's Crisis of the appointments of men unworthy of recognition as preachers," having attended to the duty assigned them, recommended, and the Editorial Board have adopted, and ordered to be published, the following resolution:—

"Resolved, That when the Editorial Board is properly notified by any of our Churches, or Ministers, or responsible persons by a written allegation that a certain minister, or ministers lack moral character, that they be instructed to notify such minister, or ministers, of the information received as a reason for withholding their appointments till after a proper trial and acquittal."

All communications in relation to this matter should be addressed to the Secretary of the Board—Geo. T. Adams, Boston, Mass.

BY AND BY.

What will it matter by and by
Whether my path in life was bright,
Whether it wound through dark or light,
Under a gray or a golden sky,
When I look back on it by and by?

What will it matter by and by
Whether, unhelped, I toiled alone,
Dashing my foot against a stone,
Missing the charge of the angel nigh,
Bidding me think of the by and by?

What will it matter by and by
Whether with laughing joy I went
Down through the years with glad content,
Never believing, nay, not I,
Tears would be sweeter by and by?

What will it matter by and by,
Whether with cheek to cheek I've lain
Close by the pallid angel, Pain,
Soothing myself through sob or sigh?
All will be else-wise by and by.

What will it matter? Naught, if
Only I'm sure the way I've trod,
Gloomy or gladdened, leads to God,
Questioning not of the how, or why,
If I but reach him by and by.

What will I care for the unshared sigh,
If, in my fear of slip or fall,
Closely I've clung to Christ through all,
Mindless how rough the path might lie,
Since he will smooth it by and by?

Ah! it will matter by and by
Nothing but this: that joy or pain
Lifted me upward, helped to gain,
Whether through rack, or smile, or sigh,
Heaven—home—all in all, by and by.

THE ORIGINAL PENALTY OF THE LAW.

BY REV. S. M. MERRILL, D. D

(Concluded.)

8. The original penalty is death, or simple destruction of life. . . . It is all comprised in the word death. This word, in the Scriptures, is used with some latitude and variety of application; but its radical meaning is never disregarded. There are qualifying terms applied to it in the Bible. Adjectives may be applied to life, because life is a positive something, having a real existence; but death has no positive existence, and no qualities to be expressed by such terms. In theology, adjectives applied to death cannot well be dispensed with, but it is evident that they can only have a relative meaning. It is sometimes said that death is the opposite of life, as silence is the reverse of sound, and rest the reverse of motion; but this fails to give the force of the word. Death is not only the opposite of life, but the destruction of life. That which never lived cannot die. There may be an existence in a state the reverse of life, without death. The mere absence of life does not imply death, unless in case of something which once lived. The radical idea of the word death is the destruction of life. Then the nature of death must be determined by the nature of the life destroyed. The destruction of vegetable life is vegetable death; the destruction of animal life is animal death; and the destruction of spiritual life is spiritual death. The distinction sometimes made between spiritual and eternal death is a distinction without a difference; for . . . all death is eternal in the nature of things. This is implied in the fact that it is the destruction, and not the mere suspension, of life. It must be so, unless there is something in it that will destroy itself, and bring back the life it took away. But having only a negative existence, it can have no such power. Stripped of the trappings of fancy, which lively imaginations have gathered around it, death appears without form, attribute, quality, or being. It is an effect, and not an agent. Hence, if death once occur, whether in the vegetable, animal, or spiritual kingdom, it will reign forever unless arrested by divine power in the production of a new life. In this way will the resurrection of the body come to pass, and not by the natural termination of the dominion of death. So the soul, dead in trespasses and sins, must escape the power of spiritual death, not by the natural expiration of death, but by the quickening power of the Holy Ghost. Death never ends of itself. It therefore follows that the death incurred by the first sin was not of temporary character, whether we understand it of the body, or the soul, or both. It was, in its nature, a finality; and if it did not prove such in fact, that was owing to the intervention of mercy in the redemptive system, with remedial agencies for bringing man out of his fall. By this intervention the penalty was stayed; and but for this, the offenders must have died, in the full sense of the word, in the day they sinned. So Adam must have understood it. He evidently looked for a sudden death by the judgment of heaven, and the penalty enforced would have realized his saddest fears. . . . By keeping the law of his probation, his holiness and immortality would have been confirmed. But by sin all was forfeited. The death incurred would have destroyed the life of his soul and body, and thereby cut off all prospective life. . . .

Those who explain the penalty by the after condition of Adam, and hold to a threefold death—spiritual, temporal, and eternal—define the first to be a separation of the soul from God, resulting in loss of spiritual life; the second, a separation of the soul from the body; and the third, the eternal punishment of soul and body together in the future world. If all this was included in the original penalty, it is plain that it never could have been executed upon the first sinners, if they had been left unredeemed. Corporeal death would have separated the body from the soul, and consigned it to the dust; then, how could the soul and body have been united again in order to suffer eternal punishment together in the future world without a resurrection? But we know of no resurrection without the resurrection of Christ; and to suppose that God attached a penalty to his law, the literal execution of which required a resurrection, is carrying speculation a little too far. From this difficulty there is no escape, except by abandoning the idea of a threefold death as the penalty.

9. Temporal evil a consequence, not the penalty of sin. It is important to distinguish between the penalty and the consequence of sin. The law of the state forbids the use of ardent spirits, under the penalty of imprisonment. In violatian of law a man drinks to excess. The consequence is intoxication, with its ills and incidents, but the penalty is imprisonment. That only is penal which the law affixes to the crime as punishment. A father forbids his child putting his hand into the fire, on pain of correction with the rod. The child disobeys, and thrusts his hand into the fire; the consequence is, the hand is burned, but the penalty is not the burn, but the correction with the rod. Thus the consequences of Adam's sin, in the shape of a blinded understanding, perverse will, and corrupted passions, with actual subjection to mortality, by reason of his separation from the tree of life, remained upon him, and became the heritage of his posterity; but the penalty, the direct infliction of death, by the judgment of God, in the day of transgression, was arrested by the timely advent of the covenant of redemption.

Hence, death, as it entered into the world by sin, and passed upon all men, comes not upon the race as a penalty for Adam's sin, but as a consequence, allowed in view of the remedial and compensating provisions of grace. Hence, also, the pain, privation, weariness, labor, and sorrow, to which the first sinners were subjected in consequence of sin, are not to be regarded as parts of the original penalty, but as elements of the new probation, evil in themselves, but capable of yielding spiritual profit, under the influence of gracious manifestations. And as these evils were to Adam, so are they to his posterity. "Adam begat a son in his own likeness." He transmitted to that son a body tending to dissolution, and a soul naturally void of spiritual life. "We have born the image of the earthy." Thus bodily death and moral depravity were entailed upon the race by the invariable law of propagation. Adam's sin affected all the human family, not by the imputation of his guilt, for that would have been false and wicked; not as a penalty for his offense, for that would have been unjust and cruel; but simply as the result of their natural descent from him.

Under a rigorous administration of the first covenant, Adam would have had no offspring. The pelalty executed would have cut him off without posterity. Calvinistic writers never appreciate this fact. Their views of the imputation of Adam's sin, and of the penalty of the law as implying a threefold death, including the future punishment of soul and body together, lead them to the assumption that God could have permitted a fallen progeny to be brought into existence, so related to Adam and the first sin, as to be justly liable to everlasting malediction on account of that sin. This assumption was the foundation of the Calvinian doctrine of election. How often we hear it said, that God could have left the whole race to suffer the entire penalty of the law. And how glibly men argue, that, if God could have left all to the misery of their previous state, that is, to eternal punishment for Adam's sin, or for personal offences unavoidably growing out of that sin, he could leave part to perish, and do them no wrong by saving others. But the underlying assumption is unsound. It has no support in the Scriptures, is contrary to all our conceptions of the character of God, repugnant to every sense of justice, and is a conception worthy the darkest night that ever settled on the church. In the language of Mr. Fletcher: "As we only sinned seminally in Adam, if God had not intended our redemption, his goodness would have engaged him to destroy us seminally, by crushing the capital offender who contained us all; so there would have been a just proportion between the sin and the punishment; for as we sinned in Adam without the least consciousness of guilt, so in him we should have been punished without the least consciousness of pain. . . .

Calvinists, with their high notions of divine prerogative and the imputation of Adam's guilt, may consistently hold moral depravity and temporal death to be penal inflictions for original sin, and deem it an act of grace that any are saved from eternal perdition on the same account; but those who believe the conscious being of the race on earth, results from a gracious intervention that contravened the penalty of the first sin, can admit no such ideas. Universalists, also, with their views of present retribution, and imperfect ideas of probation, may find in the announcement to Adam of a life of toil, privation, sorrow, and weariness, an actual punishment for disobedience; but all who believe in "a judgment to come," as the time of rewards and punishments, will look to the future for the infliction of the penalty upon the guilty, and regard the toil, pain, sorrow, and death entailed upon Adam and his offspring, as the substituted probational arrangement of the new covenant, based upon the sacrifice and triumph of "the seed of the woman." . . .

But then there is a remedial scheme, whose development was concurrent with the entailment of death, by the operation of which the penalty was arrested, and the new probation secured, and we are born so related to Adam as to inherit from him the evil of depravity and death, and so related to Christ as to derive from him the benefit of grace and life. . . .

The doctrine herein imperfectly set forth, exhibits the sovereignty, holiness, and justice of God, so as not to obscure the milder beams of goodness and mercy. It secures to God the glory of the salvation of all who are saved, and leaves the condemned without excuse. It shows guilty Adam and Eve snatched from impending death, and spared to propagate their species as a fallen race, while justice and mercy shine with equal radiance, in surrounding them with the helps and hopes of a better covenant. Avoiding the revolting idea that God could impute guilt to those who had no guilt, or punish sin in those who had no sin, it preserves the federal character of Adam, and accounts for the entailment of depravity and death upon the race, in harmony with the strictest conceptions of moral government and individual responsibility.

DOMESTIC DISCORD.

J. C. HOWARD.

Breaches of harmony will occur between imperfect men and women; but all bad results may be avoided by a resolution, well kept on both sides, to ask the other's pardon for every offense, for the hasty word, the peevish complaint, the unshared pleasure; everything that awakens an unpleasant thought, or wounds a sensibility. This reparation must be made at once; and if you have a frank and worthy nature, a quarrel is impossible. My opinion is that ninety-nine one hundredths of the unhappiness in the connubial relation is the absolute fault, and not, primarily, the misfortune of the parties. You can be happy together if you will; but the agreement to be happy must be mutual. The compromise cannot be all on one side. It is a mulish pride in man that makes the principal difficulty in all unhappy cases, and a sensitive will in women. I say to every man and woman, If you have done anything which has displeased your companion, beg her or his pardon, whether you were intentionally guilty or not. It is the cheapest and quickest way to settle the business. One confession makes way for another, and the matter is closed, and the result is union and happiness forever.

PENCIL POINTS.

I. I. LESLIE.

There and here, but what is accomplished? Then in the city, and now in the highways and hedges, and who is saved? Preaching to some who know more than the preacher; and to others who are not able to learn. Ears to hear, criticise, and find fault; to hear what they already believe, and reject whatever may disprove their long-ago-come-to conclusions. Ears to hear the word of God proved, rather than listen, and with the heart believe its plain declarations. Sowing where the fowls have their nests; sowing on the stony ground; sowing on the thorny. Where is the good ground? What will the harvest be?

Laboring, but waiting for evening; longing for the sun to go down. Are we not then looking more for the reward than desiring to bring profit and honor to the Lord of the vineyard? Selfish servants? Then where is the love for the Master? Doing something, but doing it unwillingly; complaining of the work so hard and difficult to do. "Hard man, requiring so much to be done with so little ability given to perform it. Cross so heavy it cannot be borne. This suffering! why is it? O that the end would come!"

Evangelizing. Are we now doing this? Where are the heathen to whom we can now go? And were there heathen, who would be willing to go and carry this gospel to them? But to whom are we preaching? If not to heathen, then it must be to christians. Gospel-hardened, christianized sinners. Is our message to these? Verily, to such must we go? No Ninevites now for a Jonah to warn. No great city, knowing not the true God, to hear us and believe our message. Domes and spires everywhere; all pointing to the one God. Is not the world evangelized? Bibles everywhere; ministers and teachers crowding each other, all proclaiming the gospel (?) Is not the world evangelized?

The gospel, what is it? Where can we find it? Gospel sermons, exhortations, songs and hymns? Yes, all these; but the gospel, where can this be found? Beautiful sermons, beautiful songs and hymns—all sweet and pleasing; but where can we find the gospel? In that Book. But there is too much labor in finding it there. It must be read, and perhaps studied, before it can be obtained. And then it is not interesting there, as it is in the sermon, and when it is heard, preached or sung. It is much easier to hear it than to read it. Who loves the gospel of Christ? Who reads it and believes it? And more than all who obeys it? Precious gospel! let me read, believe, obey, and never be ashamed of it.

REPORT OF THE ELEVENTH ANNUAL MEETING

Of the N. Y. Adv. Chris. Conference.

By invitation of the church at Springwater, this conference held its annual meeting June 8th to 12th, 1876, in the neat, commodious chapel, with the above church, in the beautiful Springwater valley. On account of the dullness of the times, the churches within the bounds of the conference were but partially represented. As will be seen by the report, there was a large personal representation of the ministers in the conference. Notwithstanding but a few of our churches sent delegates, we had a very large gathering of brethren and sisters from the regions beyond, who live isolated from the body, and who very seldom hear the message of the gospel of the kingdom. There seemed to be a deep spiritual feeling pervading every meeting from beginning to end.

The first business meeting was called Friday, at 10 A. M. After prayer, the meeting was opened for business. Ministers present: M. R. Miles, W. J. Hobbs, R. H. Bateman, Jas. E. Wells, E. S. Sergisson, E. C. Cowles, Srs. L. M. Stoddard and E. S. Jennings, Brn. C. P. Greenman, F. Douglass, J. H. Luttenton, C. W. Low, C. F. Sweet, A. C. Newell, S. Moose. Reported by letter: C. H. Williams, P. A. Smith, B. P. Stevens, Wm. Morrell, Wm. Ingmire, A. H. Dunbar, L. C. Kerr. No report from C. Colegrove, L. C. Gove, R. G. Wells.

Delegates: Levi L. Allen, Ontario; Geo. E. Waugh and Sr. E. C. Williams, Rochester; A. H. Dunbar, Martville; A. Wiley, F. Waite, and H. Clapp, Springwater; P. C. Marsh, Hamilton, Ont. Quarterly collections: Ontario $3, Alton $2.25, Rochester $1.30, Martville $4, Hamilton $2.

Committees appointed: Business—W. J. Hobbs, R. H. Bateman, E. S. Sergisson. Devotional—R. H. Bateman, J. G. Morris, Geo. E. Waugh. Ordination—C. W. Low, Jas. E. Wells, R. H. Bateman.

Voted, That all the preaching Brn. and Srs. be invited to a seat and voice in the deliberations of the conference.

Voted, To receive the Advent Christian Church of Hamilton, Ontario, Ca., into this conference.

A letter was read from Bro. L. C. Kerr, Ontario, Ca., requesting his name to be dropped from the conference roll, which request was granted.

Saturday, 10 A. M., was made the special order for the election of officers. After the balloting, the following officers were declared unanimously elected: M. R. Miles, President; C. W. Low, Vice President. On motion, the offices of Secretary and Treasurer were combined, and Jas. E. Wells elected to fill said offices. The Board of Trustees elected were Levi L. Allen, Ontario, N. Y.; A. C. Bishop, Honeoye; N. McCulloch, Rochester; Benj. Crofoot, Martville; Henry Clapp, Springwater. On motion, Srs. L. M. Stoddard and E. S. Jennings were received as members of the conference.

Voted, That Bro. Wm. M. Steele, of Sodus, be received as a member of this conference, and a preacher's license given him.

Voted, That for the ensuing conference year this body will hold, in place of three quarterly meetings, one semi-annual session, to be convened at such time and place as the officers may elect.

On motion, the President appointed Bro. C. W. Low to deliver the semi-annual address.

Voted, That the Secretary correspond with such members as have not reported by letter, or person, to the annual conference, and ascertain if they desire a certificate; if so, forward one to them. The Constitution reads, in relation to reports: Art. X. Sec. 1.—"All preachers belonging to this conference shall be required to report personally, or by letter, at each annual session." A letter was read from Bro. C. H. Williams, of West Martinsburgh, requesting a letter of recommendation from this conference. His request was granted, but we were sorry to part with such a faithful and efficient co-laborer in the gospel ministry. May God bless him, and souls be given him as seals to a faithful proclamation of the gospel. The devotional and preaching exercises were marked by a deep and intense desire for more practical godliness, and a thorough preparation to meet the coming King.

Preaching Thursday evening by Eld. M. R. Miles, from Acts 20:28. Friday, at 2 P. M., Eld. E. C. Cowles, from 1 Kings 10:7. Prayer and conference meeting in the evening, when many testimonies were given, expressing joy for the privilege of meeting with the scattered flock once again. Preaching by Eld. E. S. Sergisson, from 2 Pet. 3:11, 12. The minutes of the three quarterly meetings during the conference year were read and adopted; as also the following Treasurer's Report:

Jas. E. Wells, Treas.

The election of officers, and reports from ministers and delegates, were deferred until Saturday. The following preamble and resolutions were heartily endorsed, and unanimously passed:

Whereas, The sale and use of ardent spirits, as a beverage, is alarmingly increasing, as seen in the rapid march of immorality, and crime of the darkest dye; and,

Whereas, It is the duty of all christians, as far as it is in their power, to stay the ravages of this awful scourge; and,

Whereas, The church of Christ is commanded to "abstain from all appearance of evil"; therefore,

Resolved, That it is the bounden duty of this conference to discountenance the sale and use of fermented wine at the communion of the Lord's Supper.

Resolved, That this conference hereby requests all ministers, elders and deacons, within the bounds of this conference, to use pure or unfermented wine in the administration of this ordinance.

Resolved, That we believe the Reformed Medical Profession are right when saying that tobacco is injurious to both body and mind, and should not be used by any person; therefore all christians are exhorted to immediately discontinue its use in every form. And be it further

Resolved, That this conference will not pass or ordain to the gospel ministry any candidate who uses tobacco.

Saturday, 2 P. M. Preaching by Bro. P. C. Marsh (candidate for ordination), from 1 Cor. 2:9, 10. In the evening we had another heavenly sitting together, as the prayers and praises came from the hearts and lips of those whom the great King delights to honor. Preaching in the evening by Sr. E. S. Jennings, from Rom. 14:7, 1 Cor. 6:20.

Sunday, 9½ o'clock A. M., met in love-feast. Sixty-one testimonies, beside the many songs, were given, as an index to the life they had in the person, and heart of Christ. They were not discouraged, though weary, in waiting the return of the heavenly Bridegroom. Pilgrims, whose locks were silvered over with the snows of many winters, were strong in faith, like Joshua, that we could, and would soon, enter the promised land. After our morning conference meeting, we listened to a discourse by Sr. L. M. Stoddard, from Luke 10:2. Preaching at 2 P. M. by Bro. W. J. Hobbs, from 1 Tim. 3:15; after which the ordination committee presented Sr. L. M. Stoddard of Lockport, N. Y., and Bro. C. P. Marsh of Hamilton, Ont., Ca., as candidates for ordination. They were then formally ordained to the work of the gospel ministry by prayer, charge, and laying on of hands. Ordination prayer by Bro. A. C. Newell; charge by Brn. C. W. Low, M. R. Miles, and Sr. E. S. Jennings; right hand of fellowship by C. W. Low.

The harvest truly is great, but how few the laborers. Gladly do we welcome to our number those who feel to respond to the call of God—"Preach the gospel to every creature." God help us to preach the gospel, not men's opinions; to preach the word, not human dogmas; to preach truth, not a multiplicity of errors; to preach Christ, not ourselves. The battle-cry of eternal emancipation from the moral thraldom of sin and death will not cease until every jot and tittle of the law is fulfilled. Till then we need recruits to fill up the broken ranks, which have been shattered by the fell destroyer.

Prayer and conference meeting at seven o'clock in the evening, followed by a discourse from Bro. C. W. Low, founded on Acts 20:21. After the sermon, we gathered around the sacramental board to commemorate the sufferings and death of our Savior. We then returned our heartfelt thanks to the kind friends in Springwater, who had so kindly entertained us. In concluding our report, we would request our brethren and sisters to make a special effort to attend the semi-annual conference, whenever and wherever it shall be held. We desire very much that our next great meeting might be on "the shining shore," where the saints of all ages and climes will greet one another, clothed with life immortal and joy eternal.

The signs are ominous, and events portend that in a little from this the midnight cry will be heard, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh." "Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh." "What I say unto you, I say unto all, Watch." May the Lord help us to heed the admonition. Jas. E. Wells, Sec.

Faith in Christ is the root from which all the branches of holiness grow. Receive Christ into your heart and he will receive you into his kingdom.

LONELY AMONG FRIENDS, YET HAVING LIGHT AMIDST DARKNESS.

(Written at Beebe Plain Campmeeting.)

I. K. LOMBARD.

Here I meet with many loved ones,
Greeting me with kindly heart;
But their presence shows one absent,
Causing tears to freely start.

Hence, with friends I'm often lonely,
Though my friends to me are dear;
One I miss—it is one only,
She who always gave me cheer.

Earth seems empty, pleasure tasteless,
Oft I loathe my daily food;
Yet my sad heart is not graceless,
I can say, "the Lord is good."

How his loving presence cheers me,
When all earthly hopes depart;
How at times he sweetly nears me,
Lest my grief should break my heart.

With the blessed hope he cheers me,
Hope of meeting by and by,
On the resurrection morning;
For that blessed hour I sigh.

Light he gives amidst the darkness,
Cheering hope attends my way;
Clouds appear with silver lining,
Telling of a better day.

Thus on heavenly manna feeding,
Earthly sorrows pass away;
And the heart, so torn and bleeding,
Hopeful waits the dawn of day.

CONFERENCE AT INDIAN RIVER, MAINE.

The Conference at Indian River, Me., closed Sabbath evening, June 26th, after a session of four days. The Spirit of the Lord was there. A short sketch of the brethren present, who "preached the word," may be profitably written. Bro. M. W. Corliss, of Milltown, Bro. Rufus Snow, Jacksontown, N. B., Bro. N. G. Reed, Bro. A. K. McKenzie (pastor of the I. R. church), Bro. John N. Brown, Beals Island, Bro. William Foye (colored), Bro. Smith, the blind preacher; and last, but by no means least, Bro. R. F. Emerson, of East Rochester, N. H. Bro. Corliss' name is a household word among the brethren of like precious faith. He does an honest day's work for the Master every day, in anticipation of a reward at his coming. Bro. Snow is also an earnest and effective worker under the Master, and his labors have been blest at Indian River. Bro. Reed may be styled the veteran preacher of the conference. He is quick to see error, and fearless to rebuke. His laconic utterances and positive declarations are all supported by the "word." Bro. Brown is more of a philosophical reasoner, but the philosophy he reasons with is Scriptural philosophy. He reasons out his statements in a very plain, straightforward manner, that is at once pleasing and effective. Bro. Foye speaks with power. He is an earnest, effectual worker. Bro. Smith speaks earnestly. Bro. R. F. Emerson is an eloquent speaker, a diligent worker, and a living epistle of the power and mercy of God. Indian River is his native town, from which he has been absent since a youth. He has found the work intended for him by the Master, and is devoted to it. His reward is hid with Christ at present; but at his appearing he will reap if he faints not. Bro. McKenzie, the pastsr of the I. R. church, is a lion in the cause. God is good to him. The Master notices his work.

Sabbath day, Bro. Snow buried nine in baptism, and still "there's more to follow." The Spirit of the Lord pervades the community. Souls will be saved. We left brothers Snow and Emerson to help Bro. McKenzie in the work, so promisingly begun. The truth is spreading in Eastern Maine, in spite of the opposition of the combined forces of the popular churches and the devil. Thank God, there are some who have ears to hear, and minds to believe, and the little flock is prospering in immediate anticipation of a secure home in his kingdom. We have trials and persecutions, but God has filled our hearts so full of his love, that we glory in them. Let us keep near him, and he will so endow us with the Spirit, that we shall always rejoice. Sadness is the offspring of disobedience.

As we came home from Conference to our little meeting here at Baring, it looked rather small; but we were blessed. In fact, the blessing is sure to follow every sincere worker in God's cause. I have always regarded the "faith once delivered to the saints" as beautiful, from the fact that we must abandon all others to possess it; must give up everything before God will plant faith in our hearts. But when we have given up, and submitted ourselves to God, then comes the peace that passeth understanding, and the love we feel but cannot comprehend. Thank God for his word, the only source of consolation we have. It shows us how to obtain that faith which shall make us co-inheritors with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, of the kingdom of God. I have that faith, thank God. With his help I mean to retain it, so that at the great conference day I shall obtain an abundant entrance among the redeemed.

SAVE THE POSTAGE.

All who attend the campmeetings, or who can send by friends, should buy such books as they intend to buy during the year and can be found on the camp-ground. This saves either you or the seller much postage. It is but a little on each book, but it amounts to hundreds of dollars in the aggregate, and is an entire loss to you or us, when you can buy without being subject to postage. I have paid out about three hundred dollars postage on one book—"History of the Second Advent Message." It is better to borrow or hire the money for a few months to pay for your books at campmeeting, than to order them through the mail. The postage on a book, at present rates, costs more than the interest for two years on the price of the book. Thus you can see a great saving can be made by taking books where you can get them not subject to postage.

THE DUTIES OF THE HOUR.

J. W. MCAULIFFE.

"Therefore be ye also ready."—Matt. 24:44.

It appears to me that there has been no time when these solemn words of Jesus should be so deeply impressed on the mind of every child of God, as in the days in which we live. Dark clouds are around us on all sides. What is the meaning of them? They must mean something. Yes, a great storm seems ready to burst on the ungodly world. Men are steeped in sin, and religion is seemingly dead. Wickedness is waxing "worse and worse." The love of many is growing cold. The cry of "peace and safety" is going up day by day; but when they cry "peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them." Nations are arming, and rumors of wars are all around us. All bespeak to us the truth of God's word, "Be ye also ready." Nothing short of a daily preparation will do in these days of peril. Brethren, there is no time for disputing one with another; no time for idling in the vineyard; no time for quarreling one with another. If in the past anything crossed your pathway that irritated or vexed you a little, let it go. Only a few more days or months at most are left. Let us improve them as they fly.

Jesus is coming soon; sooner than the world expects him. Let us look well to our lamps, and keep them brightly burning. How sad to be left outside; to have the door shut; and to lose the kingdom of God. Who can endure the thought? Then let us awake to duty, live for God, walk in his commandments, and inherit life everlasting in the kingdom of immortal glory. Daniel's time of trouble is just at hand. The dear saints of God will soon be delivered. Gog and Magog are at hand; but the saints will have a hiding place in God, secure from the storm. God help us to be ready. Sinner, fly to Jesus now. Soon the door of mercy will close forever. Run for the ark, and find a shelter. Saints of God, live in daily preparation. Soon you will see the King in his beauty, and be made like him to die no more. Praise God.

WORRY.

Believers have rest. God gives them this great comfort. Worry comes from doubt. It nearly always arises from foreboding evils that never come, or doubting promises that are sure. Usually, neither joys nor sorrows are what we anticipate. Why not wait then, till they come! The present is all that we know with certainty, why then take thought for the future? David says, "I hate vain thoughts." And so should we; and do not most of our fears and many of our hopes and desires, prove to be utterly vain? Our Savior forbids anxiety when he says: "Take no thought for the morrow." Forecasting is well if seasoned with trusting; looking ahead is proper if we look in hope, and allow for unseen results. Our greatest griefs are unexpected; our highest joys break suddenly upon our hearts.

The connection of divine agency with human action is such that no one can forecast the future exactly. Often, what we most fear is changed to blessing, and what promised highest pleasure, drives thorns to our hearts. Will worry make our hair white or black? It whitens hair without cause, excludes peace where the Lord would give it, exhausts life where rest is offered, creates evils out of good, begets fear where no fear is lawful, prevents blessings that are sent to our doors, consumes energies needed to win success, invites enemies that hope would repel, grieves the Spirit and hinders his gracious helpfulness.—Selected.

LIVE FOR SOMETHING.

Thousands of men breathe, move, and live—pass off the stage of life, and are heard of no more. Why? None were blessed by them; none could point to them as the means of their redemption; not a line they wrote, not a word they spoke, could be recalled, and so they perished; their night went out in darkness, and they were not remembered more than the insects of yesterday. Will you thus live and die? O, man, live for something! Do good, and leave behind you a monument of virtue that the storms of time can never destroy. Write your name, by kindness, love, and mercy, on the hearts of thousands you come in contact with year by year, and you will never be forgotten. No; your words, your deeds, will be as legible on the hearts you leave behind, as the stars on the brow of evening. Good deeds will shine as brightly on the earth as the stars of heaven.—Dr. Chalmers.

The command is, "fight the good fight of faith." Blessed be God, though there are many warriors who enter into battle with doubts and fears as to the issue of the conflict, it is not so among the soldiers of the Lord Jesus Christ, who wage the celestial warfare. Victory is declared before the combat commences, and as sure as they begin to fight, faith tells them they shall be made "more than conquerers."

In one respect there is some resemblance betwixt the custom of the court of princes and of heaven. No admittance into the latter, as well as the former, unless in full dress. Every soul who enters heaven must have on the resplendent robe of God's righteousness by imputation. This is necessary to have a seat in the court of heaven.

HOME AND HEALTH.

THE DRESS OF GIRLS.

The number of American women who suffer more or less from uterine derangements and diseases, is estimated by intelligent physicians to be four-fifths of the whole. It is freely admitted by physicians that the greater part of these diseases are superinduced by the unhealthful style of dress that has prevailed and still prevails. At the bottom of our woes lies the corset, compressing the chest and upper part of the abdomen, and forcing down upon the most delicate and sensitive organ in the female structure all the organs of the abdomen, thus causing retroversion of various kinds. The weight of the heavily trimmed skirts adds its terrible quota to this pressure, until it is almost martyrdom to move under the load. Thus burdened, hundreds and thousands of women stand all day about their work in shops and houses, go up and down stairs, bear and rear children, all the time suffering pain and languor and weariness inexpressible.

If women dressed as sensibly as men do, they would suffer no more inconvenience than men from standing at their work and from going up and down stairs, for women have just as many muscles to "keep them up" as men have. The sympathy which has of late been expressed in our daily journals with poor shop girls, who stand all the time behind the counter, should take the form of earnest expostulation with them to adopt a healthful style of dress, for it will be found, almost without exception, that they are laced tightly, that their skirts are heavily trimmed, that their shoes are high-heeled, and that the weight of their clothing hangs from their hips.

Those who have tried to convince women thus unhealthfully dressed to lay aside every burden, and the corset that does so grievously afflict them, to diminish the weight of their trimmings, and to suspend their skirts from their shoulders, know how very hard it is to persuade them that by making these changes in their dress, immense relief will at once be felt. Yet those who have been thus persuaded, and they are many, can testify in most unmistakable and emphatic terms to the blessedness of the results.—Science of Health.

CLEANLINESS.

That "cleanliness, which is next to godliness," implies obedience to every law of the vital organism. The common causes of disease are poisons introduced from without, through the stomach, lungs, or skin, and poisons ingenerating in consequence of retained effete matters. Cleanliness, therefore, demands as much attention to the ingesta as to the surface. Unless this be attended to, no amount of washing or bathing of the skin will prevent foul blood, morbid secretions, and general impurity. Many persons are fastidiously neat with regard to their hands, faces, dress, and the furniture of their apartments, yet strangely reckless of what they swallow, inhale, or absorb. Pure blood, without which no one can be clean within, whatever may be the external condition, cannot be maintained unless all the excretory organs—the skin, lungs, liver, bowels, and kidneys—are kept free and unobstructed. And this cannot be done without the proper use of all hygienic agencies, and the misuse or abuse of nothing.

In all places where offal or garbage is allowed to accumulate, sickness prevails; and if the accumulation be great or prolonged, pestilences occur. There is little doubt that all contagious diseases—small-pox, measles, whooping-cough, mumps, etc.,—would soon disappear were all the people cleanly in their persons and surroundings. Stagnant water is known to be as prolific a source of disease as are atmospheric impurities. Sinks, cess-pools, drain-pipes, etc., should never be allowed to become offensive to the senses; and all excrement should at once be removed from dwellings, or be disinfected with earth or chemicals. The gases arising from rotting and decaying animal and vegetable matters are the causes of some of the most malignant fevers known.—Science of Health.

ADM'L. FARRIGUT'S CONVERSION.

In a recent conversation Admiral Farragut said: "When I was ten years of age I was with my father on board a man-of-war. I had some qualities that I thought made a man of me. I could swear like an old salt; could drink as stiff a glass of grog as if I had doubled Cape Horn, and could smoke like a locomotive. I was great at cards, and fond of gaming in every shape.

At the close of dinner, one day, my father turned everybody out of the cabin, locked the door, and said to me:

'David, what do you mean to be?'

'I mean to follow the sea.'

'Follow the sea! yes, to be a poor, miserable, drunken sailor before the mast, be kicked and cuffed about the world, and die in some fever hospital in a foreign clime.'

'No,' I said, 'I'll tread the quarter deck and command as you do.'

'No, David; no boy ever trod the quarter deck with such principles as you have, and such habits as you exhibit. You'll have to change your whole course of life if you ever become a man.'

"My father left me and went on deck. I was stunned by the rebuke and overwhelmed with mortification. 'A poor, miserable, drunken sailor before the mast, be kicked and cuffed about the world, and die in some fever hospital! That's my fate, is it? I'll change my life, and change it at once. I will never utter an oath, I will never drink another drop of intoxicating liquor, I will never gamble. I have kept those three vows to this hour. Shortly after wards I became a christian. That act was the turning-point in my destiny."

The CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

BE CONTENT.

There are who sigh that no fond heart is theirs;
None loves them best. Ah, vain and selfish sigh!
Out of the bosom of His love he gave—
The Father gave his Son for thee to die.
For thee he died, for thee he lives again,
For thee he triumphs in his endless reign.

Thou art as much his care as if, beside,
Nor man nor angel dwelt in heaven or earth;
So sunbeams pour alike their glorious tide
To light a world, or wake an insect's mirth.
They shine and shine, with unexhausted store.
Thou art the Savior's darling. Ask no more.

SIGNS OF THE NEARING ADVENT OF CHRIST.

BY REV. DR. H. BONAR.

6. Human Efforts at Self-regeneration. I do not say this of the church, though there are some tokens of it even in her. But I speak of the world. Man seems now to be putting forth every effort to regenerate himself without God. Amid all the modern achievements of science and of art, he has lost sight of his own helplessness and dependence on him who created him. He thinks to be a God to himself. It is as if, before God's glorious purpose of restitution is brought to pass, man is to be allowed to do his utmost for the renewal of himself and of the world. He is to be put to the proof. He is to be permitted to boast himself for a little, and congratulate himself upon the triumph before him. Hence the vain-glorious speeches we so often hear of man's powers and man's prospects. Political reforms are spoken of as the regeneration of the world. One party most loudly maintains that the separation of Church and State is to usher in the millennium; another as boldly affirms that it is the union of Church and State that is to accomplish this.

Education, science, literature, philosophy, are sometimes called the world's regenerators, and no limits are assigned to the blessings which these are to confer upon the world. It is curious, also, to observe, for some years past, how eagerly science has been putting forth all its energies in pursuit of discoveries that shall restore fruitfulness to the soil. Agricultural chemistry has shot up into a separate study. As if unconsciously prescient of the earth's deliverance from the curse of barrenness, men are laboring to do all that science can to hasten on that day of restitution. These efforts at self-regeneration must prove abortive; for man cannot undo either his sin or its consequences. They may succeed to a certain extent, but only to prove how little they can effect. These are, however, signs of a coming deliverance. For when man's endeavors shall prove fruitless, both in reference to himself and society, and the soil which he tills, God shall at length interpose and accomplish the work of renovation by the word of his power.

7. The Spread of Knowledge. "Many are running to and fro, and knowledge is increasing." (Dan. 12: 4). Nor is it knowledge of one kind, but of every kind, secular and sacred. It is, however, for the former that this age is specially distinguished. And Satan is putting forth his utmost resources of power and craft thus to lead men captive at his will. "He is the prince of all knowledge, where God is not known; of all power, where God is not acknowledged; the bright archangel of the natural man, revealing himself in his angelic glories of natural knowledge, natural beauty, natural wisdom, and natural humanity." Thus does he play his part in this last age. Under these radiant disguises, he is bewildering the eyes of men, and persuading them that this diffusion of knowledge is the appearing of the millennial dawn. So specious are his counterfeits that it is hard to separate the real from the false, the precious from the vile; for when he thus comes forth as an angel of light, clothed in every perfection that the natural heart loves and the carnal eye admires, who shall penetrate the deception and escape the snare, save those who "know all things," by reason of "the unction from the Holy One"? (1 John 2: 20). Most truly has the present state of the world been described by one of the world's own poets, when picturing the gay glitter of an evening assembly, over which was thrown—

"A dazzling mass of artificial light,
Which showed all things, but nothing as they were."

So it is now upon the earth, among the heedless multitudes of the children of men. It is the world's midnight. They are eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage. Literature, science, philosophy, are all their own. Yet there is an artificial coloring, an unreal brightness, over all. There is music, but it is of the syren kind. There is eloquence, too, but it is "the words of man's wisdom," not that which speaks for God and "winneth souls." There is fervor, too, but it is the warmth of wild excitement, born in novelty, and nursed by perpetual change. There is high thought, too, but it is often of the unhealthful cast, wrought off at the midnight lamp; not the deep musings begot in fellowship with God, and ceaseless converse with that inspired word which maketh wise the simple. And, in connection with all this, there is a proud air of independence, like that which said, "Our lips are our own; who is Lord over us?" There is a reckless determination to hold what opinions men please, unchecked and unreproved.

8. The Maturity of the Papal Antichrist.—Popery itself is no new thing on earth, so that its mere existence is no peculiar sign of the last day. But its progress and prevalence are entirely new. There is a maturity about it which, in other ages, it could not claim. It is rising in stature and fast hastening to its consummation. In extent of circle she stretches far beyond the territories of other days. In all regions of the earth she is planting her banner and claiming dominion over the nations. Never did she show herself more thoroughly in earnest. She is flinging her chains across the globe. With stealthy foot she has been advancing step by step, till now she walks abroad at noonday with the sound of the trumpet, lifting up her head in bold defiance. Her hand, like Amalek's, is "upon the throne of the Lord;" and she acts and speaks as if in nothing she would be restrained of all that she has imagined to do.

Never, since the Reformation, has Popery made so deadly and determined a struggle for the recovery of throne and altar. Hundreds of missionary priests are thrusting themselves into every corner, winding themselves into the confidence of the influential, and insinuating themselves with serpent-stealth and subtlety into all seats of power. They mark off their districts, and rear their churches everywhere, carrying on their work of proselytism at any expense, and by every method. They build with costly splendor; they adorn with most attractive grace; they cast the net with consummate art, that beneath its ample stretch they may entangle the thousands of every age, and class, and temper, who love a theatrical religion, that will gratify the carnal sense, and furnish men with a license for the commission of any amount of iniquity. They talk proudly, too, and boast openly of their success, casting off the mask of meekness and modesty which they had in some measure assumed; proclaiming loudly that, as no heresy was ever allowed more than a duration of three centuries, the British apostasy has now reached its close. Thus they prophesy of their own speedy triumph, and of our hastening doom.

It is not my part either to confirm or to confute the prophecy. A few years will unfold it all. There may be darker days in reserve for Britain than many will believe. Her day has been long bright, her sky long cloudless. What nation has ever enjoyed a century of such profound tranquillity as we have experienced, unbroken save by a few political commotions, or a few murmurs of fretful discontent? The cup of trembling, which was put into the hands and pressed to the lips of every nation in Europe, in 1793—1815, passed us by. The revolutionary earthquake shocks that have during this century successively laid waste every kingdom around us, convulsing nations and overturning thrones, tearing up a thousand hearths, and agitating ten thousand fearful bosoms with alternate despair and hope, reached us not, nor stirred even one ripple on our sea-bound shore.

When Providence raised up Napoleon Bonaparte as the scourge of the Papal empires; when he called him to his foot, gave the nations before him, and made him ruler over kings, giving them as dust to his sword and as driven stubble to his bow, he appointed him his bounds that he could not pass over, and we were preserved, unmolested and secure. When every capital in Europe was in flames, from Moscow to Madrid, we were sitting each man under his own vine and fig-tree, with none to make us afraid. The enemy, with the vanquished might of Europe in his train, prepared to overwhelm us; he threatened, boasted, numbered his armies, talked of a second Armada; but in vain. We were secure. We needed "no bulwarks, no towers along the coast." We were Protestant, and therefore invincible. Our protest was our palladium. From our far-off lonely island, there went forth upon the earth the solitary voice that testified for Christ against Antichrist, in the midst of a world of idolatry and darkness. God heard the testimony, and he blessed the witness.

But since that time what has taken place? We have laid aside our protest, as too bigoted for an enlightened age like ours. We have struck our Protestant colors, and hung out the flag of neutrality; or rather, we should say, of religious indifference. With our own hands we have taken down the old ancestral standard which has braved three centuries of storm, allowing the spoiler to tear in pieces and trample under foot the inheritance of our fathers, the birthright of our sons; proclaiming to the world that our past protest was a stain upon our history, and that it matters nothing to a nation's well-being whether the Bible or the Koran be the basis of her statute-book, or whether the national ensign be surmounted by the cross, the crescent, or the triple crown. We have little reason to hope that we shall ride out another storm as we have done the last. The anchor of our national Protestant testimony is gone.

9. The Diffusion of Infidelity. This at least is new. Our fathers knew comparatively little of this; and our fathers' fathers almost nothing. An infidel was rare indeed in their day—a man wondered at and shunned. Towards the close of the last century infidelity burst forth in France, and partially extended itself elsewhere. Of late years it has developed itself with prodigious swiftness, and assumed a bold and lofty attitude of assault. Its extent is incredible. The masses are thoroughly leavened with it. It has insinuated itself everywhere, and is eating out the heart of everything like deep principle among men. It has corroded the cement by which society hangs together, so that nations and communities are now like walls or towers without mortar, ready to fall to pieces of themselves, or be levelled by the first blast.

Its ferocity is alarming; its activity unceasing. Much of it is undisguised and confessed, but very much of it is still secret and unavowed. It taints the air; it blights life; it ossifies conscience; under it all good things wither. It is the worm at the root of all that is noble and excellent in these last days. Hence the hollow condition of things amongst us—the chill that is upon life's warm fellowships and offices of love. Social, political, kindred ties are worm-eaten and ready to break asunder. The erect bearing and manly vigor which religion imparts is no longer visible. Superstition has come to the rescue, and is trying to supply its place. But in vain! Expediency rules. Large masses of the people are either openly or secretly infidel, if not atheistical. God is not acknowledged. His yoke seems to gall men's shoulders. The nations are ready to cast it off. And what hope is there, what token, that this is to end before the Lord returns to end it? Is it not a sign of his approach, and the denial of the possibility of a previous millennium of holy blessedness upon the earth?

REPORT OF THE "Conditional Immortality" Conference.

(Concluded.)

Mr. Arthur Mursell, being received with cordial applause, said: Mr. Chairman—christian friends: I did not come here to make a speech; and nothing would have induced me to yield to the persuasions of my friend Mr. Minton, to come forward from the lower end of the room,—to which I went when I first came into this hall,—did I not so heartily sympathise with the truth represented by this assembly, and were it not that by refusing to come and identify myself with the movement of this morning, I should have been exposing myself to the charge of being afraid of the comments of the organs of the denominational press, which have been exposed by Mr. White as holding very much aloof from this movement. I would rather be branded with any name than that of "coward" (cheers); and as my convictions are so decidedly those expressed this morning, I could not but identify myself with the truth (hear, hear). It has been said that this movement puts an argument into the mouth of the unbeliever; but on the contrary I have found it to be the very opposite (cheers). I was present at a public discussion on the question of "Atheism versus Christianity," held between a popular atheist and a no less popular christian opponent. It lasted six weeks, one night a week. And the strongest allegation brought against Christianity was,—that it taught the doctrine, the incredible doctrine, of the eternal torment of the soul. It was the very strongest point made against the Christian side of the question. Whatever we may think of the name of this atheist, one thing is certain at least, and that is, that he is exercising over the working classes a very tremendous influence. If therefore we can manage to obtain from the Christian world a fair hearing and proper understanding of this question, we shall be doing God's cause a great service (hear, hear). For myself, I can only say that, in retiring from such a meeting as this, I shall clasp the Father with a stronger confidence for all the arguments which I have heard advanced this morning (cheers).

Mr. Tinling, who was warmly applauded, then addressed the meeting as follows:—Mr. Chairman and christian friends: I feel in a somewhat similar position to the previous speaker with reference to making a speech upon this occasion. I have so little to say that I fear I shall be occupying the valuable time of my hearers to small purpose. Since, however, I must say something about this movement, I would express a feeling uppermost in my mind when I came to this meeting—a feeling of mingled gladness and fear. Not now to speak of the gladness which I share with all present, that this subject of immortality is coming to the front,—which the present gathering evidences,—notwithstanding the diversity of opinion that otherwise exists amongst its advocates, I would just briefly express what is in my mind with regard to the literature in connection with this movement (hear, hear). On this point my opinions have as been as well expressed as I could wish by my friend, Mr. Edward White. I feel that it is exceedingly important that we should advocate this truth in connection with all other evangelical doctrines,—and I am very glad that Mr. White is able to say that there are none present this morning who have deserted these doctrines,—and that we should advocate them in a spirit worthy of the followers of Christ. But I cannot help thinking that the particular subject which has called us together is too often thrust into undue prominence to the ignoring of other and very considerable truths (hear, hear). Moreover, I do not not think that we can better convey our convictions to others respecting conditional immortality than by preaching them in connection with the other vital matters of the gospel. Every body knows in the town in which I live, who knows me at all, that I am a believer in conditional immortality, although as yet I confess I have said very little about it; but I took the opportunity at the beginning of my ministry, in a very full meeting, to avow my honest belief. When I first went to this town a meeting of ministers was held there, but some of the evangelical section decided that they could not countenance me because of my special convictions. I want to preach all truth; I want to build up a cause for God in that town which shall be in harmony with Christianity.

The grandest and most satisfactory answer which we can give to opponents is the evidence that God is with us of a truth. I have been thinking since I entered this hall, of the features of a special class of newspapers, in connection with an undue setting forth of life in Christ; and it strikes me forcibly that there is a great resemblance between an exclusive advocacy of this one truth and the disproportionate cartoons of the comic papers of the day. I think there is great danger by undue enlargement upon this truth of caricaturing it, while we are accurately representing its features; as in the figures of which I speak, wherein the features of public men are faithfully reproduced the while that the head is thrust into ridiculous proportions and unnatural prominence (hear, hear). It is also of the utmost importance, as our dear friend Mr. White has remarked, that the advocacy of this great truth should not fall into the hands of those who make a hobby of it, but into the hands of those who hold with it all the other vital truths of the gospel. To me, the doctrine that Christ is the source and cause of my immortality, means that Christ is everything; and all who believe in conditional immortality, so it seems to me, must necessarily be real, loving workers in his cause. I need not say more; but I anxiously desire, request, and entreat you, brethren and sisters, who with me have not taken up this cause as the cause of any section of the public who may advocate this doctrine, but because we believe that God has revealed it to us as his truth, in which his glory is concerned in no little measure,—I earnestly entreat you to consider that the spirit is much more than the letter,—that we have within the letter a most important truth,—that we have a truth which, if we hold really and with love, will enable us to show the world the power of God's grace in man, more than any amount of labored, elaborate, or earnest arguments which can be got out of our learned brethren, who confine themselves exclusively to the study of the subject of which I speak

Mr. Starkey, being cheered, said:—Mr. Chairman and christian brethren,—It is but half a dozen sentences I wish to address to you upon this question. It is surely important to the truth we are seeking to establish, to recognize other life than that which is in Christ. The motto adopted by some as expressive of the truth we advocate, namely, "Life in Christ only," is open to the objection that other life exists apart from him. It may be true that he is the source of all life; inasmuch as all things were made by him; but since life temporary exists apart from him, it might be held by some as possible that life of that order may be held eternally. It is said of fallen angels that they are "reserved in chains under darkness unto the judgment of the great day." These have life of its kind apart from Christ. The wicked dead also, when raised to judgment, before being finally destroyed in the second death, will have a life of its kind apart from Christ's. Animals and vegetables likewise have life of their kind apart from him. Hence, we shall do well, in speaking, to bring under notice the fact, that it is "eternal" life which is given life in Jesus Christ; as expressed in Rom. 6: 23: "The gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord" (cheers).

THE CHAIRMAN: Before I close this meeting, I invite you to join with me in a very cordial vote of thanks to the gentlemen who have so ably and eloquently addressed us this morning on those subjects which we have so much at heart,—Mr. Minton, Dr. Leask, Mr. White, and those who followed them. I ask you to hold up your hands and cordially show your appreciation of the kindness of these beloved brethren. (Unanimous show of hands). Now, I should like to add a few words before we separate upon the several points brought before us in the addresses that have been given (cheers). I am very glad of the opportunity afforded for the expression of the truth; and if we have convictions that what we have heard is upright and true, then we have a function to perform in opposing the foes of truth, under whatever guise their comments are disseminated, whether from the pulpit or press—to act consistently with the Scripture tenets of our profession, and as friends of the truth, come to the help of the great cause of the Lord, against the dishonor of Christ our Savior. From christian opponents,—we take no heed of others,—we call for righteousness, for honest and fair discussion with spiritual weapons, drawn from the armory of God; not a fruitless war of unprofitable phraseology, waged with the weapons of traditional dogmatism as by the spirit of man; dogmas that must paralyze the senses of humanity, if they are sounded to the great depths that a consideration of the eternity of torment would inevitably lead to. True, we are but a small army at present, but it is as the army of Gideon, and we have the sword of the Lord, and the battle is his.

One word now in regard to what I promised in reference to the heathen missions: I have been amongst them for thirty or forty years of my life, and I know very well that what is assumed of the heathen, that they are at enmity with anything that the missionaries may have at heart, is false. But they revolt against the frightful acts that are attributed to our God; and they would far rather retain their pantheistic faith than accept of God as he is popularly represented. Now, having got so far, I desire very earnestly to impress upon you what has been already mentioned concerning a valuable aid of our cause;—let me commend to your notice a periodical which has been in the hands of our respected brother, Dr. Leask, for many years—The Rainbow. There are many of you who know it, read it, and love it; and I trust that from henceforth it may assume a greater power in order to counteract the evils with which we have to contend; and that it may for the future be still more largely patronised. I look at the cross of Christ as a revelation of God for the abolition of sin—to judge it for its abolition in the person of his own Son. The character and work of Christ is, that he was condemned to death in order that he might abolish sin; hence he is "the Lamb of God that taketh away"—literally, removeth out of God's sight—"the sin of the world." The apostle Paul declares it to be all sin—the aggregate of all the sin of the world; whether in the saint of God now, or presently by the destruction of unbelievers. Will any limit the effect of the wondrous sacrifice of the Son of God? Men speak as if they were wiser than God. I say "wiser," because they have unwarrantably assumed a reign of terror, a dominion of sin, a Satanic despotism, beyond the express duration of this present age. "The word of the revelation of Jesus Christ" pronounces the solemn fact, that after the dread assize no place shall be found for anything, or any person, that has been attainted with sin; and the eleventh verse of the twentieth chapter of Revelation is a heading only, or a text, of which the remaining verses of that chapter literally detail the explanation. It is in the face of this that the truth of conditional immortality stands upon so firm a basis. Men are judged only for the deeds done in the body in this life. I repeat, therefore, that it is an unwarrantable assumption to bring forward any statement which leads to or hints at a reign of terror in the dominion of Satan after this present life (cheers). We leave the matter with the Lord.

Mr. White then proposed a vote of thanks to the Chairman for presiding at the meeting, and, Dr. Leask, in seconding the resolution, said: It has filled me with great pleasure indeed to see such harmony as has prevailed throughout the whole of this morning's proceedings. I am sure that it will be the precursor to a great and glorious work. Before sitting down, allow me to announce to you that a full and verbatim report of this Conference will be published immediately in pamphlet form by Messrs. Kellaway & Co., 10 Warwick Lane, the publishers of the Bible Echo, a periodical which is doing good work in this cause. A report of it will likewise appear in the pages of the Christian World, and also in the Rainbow.

Mr. Kellaway, Editor of the Bible Echo, who was cheered upon mention of his name, made a few remarks to the effect that within the last three years an almost literary prodigy had been performed through his instrumentality, about a hundred works bearing upon the truth of immortality through Christ, from tract to volume, having been issued from his repository, aggregating somewhere about twenty-five million pages; all the above having passed through his own hands. This matter having been distributed among thoughtful men, and much of it among ministers, there is reason to hope that its fruits will sometime be seen, although, in certain instances, it may be after many days. The spread of so much literature is good reason for gratitude and hope.

Prof. Rarrit, of Trinity College, Dublin, said he would have addressed the meeting, but the time being near one o'clock he would not detain the audience longer.

The benediction was then pronounced, and the assembly was at an end.

HOW I FOUND THE TRUTH.

E. MOSS.

Dear Editors:—About thirty years ago I was converted and joined the Methodist E. Church, in whose communion I am still found. The doctrines taught by that church I received without any questionings, taking for granted they were the doctrines of the Bible, without going to the trouble to investigate for myself. I tenaciously clung to the popular views, styled orthodoxy, until about four years ago, when, while boarding with my friend, Dr. C. Patterson, in Philadelphia, he asked for Bible proof to sustain my doctrinal views. After diligently searching for the proofs, I was compelled to acknowledge that I could not find them. Dr. P. then directed my attentions to the doctrines of the Advent church, as taught in the Crisis, with the request that I would carefully inquire into them. I regarded it as sinful to hold and teach the doctrine that there is no immortality for man, but by union with Christ, the Life-giver, as the vine is united to the branch; and that it cannot be had nor enjoyed until Jesus comes again, bringing our reward with him. In relation to the doctrine of the eternal torment of the wicked, although always shocking and revolting to my mind, and irreconcilable with the nature of God; yet because my teachers said it was the doctrine of the Bible, I accepted it, as thousands are doing in the various christian churches to-day, who never investigate for themselves. I did not want to hear these doctrines discussed, regarding them as altogether wrong and dangerous. But curiosity led me to search and see if these things were so; and the more extended my researches, the more interested I became.

As the light gradually shone into my mind, it created a hungering for a more perfect understanding of the precious word. The doctrine of the personal reign of Christ in the new earth, and his near advent, I had received several years before. The result of my searching for Bible truth was the necessary and unavoidable acceptance of the doctrines taught by the Advent branch of the Christian Church. I said, as many are now saying, what is the use of troubling ourselves about where we shall reign with Christ, the nearness of his coming, the state of the dead before judgment, or the extent of punishment the wicked shall endure, so long as we know that we are saved? I answer, that while the all-important thing is the assurance of personal salvation, yet as light is superior to darkness, so is truth to error. It is far more satisfactory to have truth on our side, than to be in a doubtful or mystified state. I have always loved and revered the blessed Book; but since the Holy Spirit has shed this new light upon my mind, which led to my acceptance of these precious truths, the Bible has seemed like a new book; and I love it as never before. It is my daily companion. I read it with an unflagging interest. Have just finished reading it carefully through. The heretofore irreconcilable and inharmonious portions of Scripture now beautifully harmonize. As I have opportunity, I set other minds to inquiring into these doctrines.

In discussing these topics with my brethren, I am surprised to find so many, holding high official positions in the Methodist church, that have accepted these same doctrinal views. While some have been expelled for teaching these plain Bible doctrines, instead of tradition, there are hundreds in the Methodist church to-day, who are Adventists in everything but name. Some may ask why we do not change our church relations for more congenial society? We believe we can do more good where we are, because of having access to people we otherwise could not reach. After reading my Crisis, I give it to others, each week, placing it in different hands, where I think it will be read and appreciated. I would gladly distribute tracts if I had them, even at the risk of being excluded from my present church fellowship.

How full of comfort is the blessed assurance, while battling with life's trials and privations, that we are heirs of a rich inheritance, which we shall soon possess.

PENCIL POINTS.

I. I. LESLIE.

Sliding back. This means the loss of some attained position. Sliding back is sliding from. Sliding—not walking firmly, boldly back, but with feet slipping, and a gliding away from the place once occupied. Would, perhaps, go forward, but then—sliding, sliding back. What a condition! No hope? Where is it? Filled with his own ways, will the backslider in heart take another way? And is there no hope? Yes; but the strong cry must go up, and the pierced hand must be reached down to save. Backsliding! Going back to the world, away from God and Christ, and all heaven; away from truth, righteousness, and salvation! Having left Sodom, tarrying in the plain, looking back to what had been forsaken. Are you sliding back? Going in this manner from Christ? Sliding away from him? Why go in this way? Why not, if you will go, go boldly back, and let all know why you do so? Tell the world you are coming back, and the reasons. Don't tell them you have not come back, when they see that you have. Don't slide back.

Lacking wisdom. Who has wisdom in all things? Who does not lack it in many things? If a brother err from the way, who is there that has the wisdom to deal with him, and have his sin hidden, and he saved from death? Is it wisdom to brand him and cast him out before an effort has been made to save him? Do we not sometimes injure the cause of Christ by a lack of wisdom, and in our haste to purge and defend ourselves? Is it not wisdom to be merciful, at least for a time? Does not God delay the execution of justice, giving men time for repentance? and is he not wise in doing this? We surely often lack wisdom in dealing with the erring.

Hindering. There are more that hinder than help, even in the church. Unlike the bees, men tolerate drones among them, who not only do nothing themselves, but hinder others from doing what they should perform. Many a sinner is hindered from coming to Christ by those in the church, who do nothing but set an example which the unconverted might not dare to follow. Hindering the work of God, the salvation of men! Who would do this? Awful thought, that we may stand in the way of one sinner coming to Christ. Saved ourselves and know we have done this! Might this not lessen our joy in the world to come? Look out that you do not hinder.

Treachery. Whoever thought well of a traitor? Traitors to country, traitors to friends, traitors to God! He that is a traitor to one of these may be a traitor to each of the others. A traitor to country is a traitor to friends and to God. But where there is treachery to country, there may be treachery to friends and God. It is not hard for many to be treacherous to friends, and certainly easy for all to be treacherous to God. But men can be traitors to God, and not be regarded as they would be if traitors to country, or friends. Is God of less accouut than these? It would seem so in the estimation of men. Christ had one traitor among his disciples when he was here. Now that he has gone away, he has many who betray him. He that betrays the friends of Christ is a traitor to him; and they who forsake and wound his cause, deny and crucify him.

HOW MUCH DOES IT COST?

W. J. WARNER.

Are we to gain that heavenly rest, which Jesus has gone to prepare for those that endure unto the end, cheaper than our forefathers? Is our enemy less crafty and diligent than when he burned the martyrs at the stake? Emphatically, no. He no longer burns at the stake, nor tortures the body by his devilish art; but his present mode of conducting the warfare is far more successful.

We no longer have to hide in dens and caves, but if we are not secreted behind the armor of Christ, we are sure to be pierced by some of the many darts hurled by the enemy. He is at work through the same agent now that he was then. It was the professed church then that slaughtered and cast out all that walked not with them. It is the professed church to-day that join hand and hand with the world, and say, Let's have a good time; and all that refuse to join them are called radical, and are cast out as unclean.

The martyrs knew who their enemies and their friends were, for none were among them but the tried and the true; for a man will not lay down his life for a cause to which he is not loyal. But to-day we can place no trust in men, not even in our professed brethren. Then it was an open warfare, face to face with their adversary; but to-day it is a constant warfare with hidden sins; and unless we have the detecting eye of Jehovah to direct our steps, we shall be hugging to our breast combustibles, possibly wrapt in a leaf from the Bible, which will explode at the judgment, if not before, and we shall be lost. But the Rock into which we have fled is equal to the storm, and we are safe, even in these perils of the last days.

M. G.

OUR CAMPMEETINGS.

We are now in the midst of the season for holding our annual campmeetings. These meetings have become a very important part of our religious experience, and by habit, if not by God's appointment, a very essential item in our christian labor. Their character exerts one of the most powerful influences, for good or for evil, in the public mind that the Christian church wields at the present time. All classes of people understand that they get a correct, general representation, at these great christian convocations, of the faith, hope, charity and spiritual status of the people holding them. They have an undoubted right to so understand it, therefore the responsibility thrown upon those charged with the government, and all actively engaged in establishing the character of these meetings, is great before their God.

In the first place the government of the meetings should be in justice, equality, impartiality, kindness, and manifested sympathy for all, with firmness for right and the interests of Christ's cause. It should not be arbitrary, dictatorial, and lordly, unnecessarily manifesting authority; but those having charge should feel and appear as if they were servants, and not lords, to execute the will of those who employ them.

Their influence for good, and ease in governing, will depend very much upon the words they use in giving directions, and their general tone and appearance. If their words are sharp and dictatorial, there will be rebellion; if they are indefinite and undecided, there will be confusion and want of order. They should speak softly and kindly, but definitely and firmly. They should be men of meekness and of great willingness to serve, and should be possessed of sufficient manliness and nobility of christian character to rule with love and firmness. Without good government it is impossible to have a truly good and permanent meeting.

The preaching, as far as practicable, should be representative preaching; that is, it should truly and intelligently represent the different topics discussed and the general sentiments of the class of worshipers there assembled; because all persons have a right to expect such preaching at such meetings, and will understand it and report it as such. It is not right or profitable to preach conflicting doctrines at such a meeting, especially when not authorized to do so by those having charge of the worship. If we Adventists have a right to exist as a denomination of christian believers, it is because we have a specific message of truth which God has made it our duty to proclaim to this generation; a work which we could not so freely and effectually do without an independent association. Then it is our especial duty at the representative meetings to make prominent those characteristic truths. The people who attend these meetings expect to hear such truths, and are dissatisfied if they do not.

If God has made us a people, he made us a prophetic people; and we had better, in the fear of God, keep ourselves such, and continue to so represent ourselves by preaching as in former days.

Our preaching should consist largely of warnings to the people to prepare immediately and thoroughly for the speedy advent of the Judge of the world. It should present the necessity for immediate preparation for translation. As the church was never before called to make preparation for such an event, she was never before called to embrace truths designed to produce such a preparation.

Brethren, we believe God was with us at our campmeetings thirty years ago, and more signally manifested his approbation of our preaching and position than he does now. We have been straying from the old paths into which God led us, and our preaching and devotion does not now represent our profession as it did then. Our spirituality has diminished because our faith has grown weak.

We are convinced that Satan is using artful devices and an ensnaring influence, to dislodge us from the stronghold of truth and the power of the Holy Spirit, into which our Captain led us. Brethren, pardon us for our plainness of speech upon this subject, for we feel that God will cast us off at last if we are not faithful to the little flock in this her most perilous hour. Let us, therefore, at our coming meetings, make prominent the great message God has called us especially to proclaim. We were never so holy and perfectly consecrated to God as we were when we thus preached the gospel. We appeal to the gray-headed scarred veterans in the ranks to testify to the truthfulness of what we say.

Brethren, scattered over this broad land, we devoutly and earnestly plead with you to go into your closets, and pray earnestly to God to increase our faith, so that the Holy Spirit may be increased at our coming campmeetings, that we may be fully prepared to labor the brief space we now have left us for the salvation of perishing sinners, and that we all may obtain that holiness which will adorn us in the kingdom of God.
J. C.

OUR POSITION.

It is now over thirty-three years since we became identified with those who believe we are near the coming of Christ. In reviewing that period, we find abundant reason to thank the Lord for the many rich blessings we have enjoyed by the way; and that he has enabled us to hold fast to the "blessed hope," which is continually growing brighter. We have never had one moment's sorrow over a lost reputation for the truth's sake. We are most heartily contented with "our position." We never believed more firmly than now the great truths for which we have suffered reproach with our brethren of like precious faith. We have counted the cost, and see no occasion to change our course. The coming pathway looks bright, and we expect soon to realize the consummation of our hope.

We have met with some losses on the way. Among them is the loss of all worry about the future; troublesome doubts and fears; all impatience, all cross feelings, all sectarianism, and many other annoying things, that might be named. In the place of these losses we have received perfect love, perfect peace, full assurance of acceptance, blessed contentment, delightful and perpetual rest in Jesus.

We are ready to co-operate with every christian who is willing to labor for the salvation of the perishing. If one should ask us to sacrifice any truth for the sake of a union, our whole being would revolt against such a thought. By the grace of God, that shall never be done. We adopt the saying of the wise man, "Buy the truth and sell it not," no matter how high the price offered. When we unite to work with others to accomplish a specific work, we do it without the least compromise of any christian principle. If a Republican and Democrat should unite together to rescue a man from drowning, would they by so doing compromise their political principles? Would either be justified in refusing the helping hand? How much more heartily should all christians unite to lead perishing souls to Christ, and thus help to secure eternal life.

As all things show we are in time's closing hours, let us prove our loyalty to Christ, and our love for the lost, by united effort with all who are willing to do anything to save our fellow beings from being drowned in perdition. "United we stand; divided we fall." These sayings are specially true in relation to the followers of Christ. Satan gains his greatest victories by introducing divisions in the christian army. This is done mainly through a sectarian spirit, caused by contentions about doctrinal points that do not materially affect one's salvation, and thus they are led away from the fountain of perfect love and peace, and fall into condemnation, while at the same time they increase in zeal for their peculiar theological opinions. In this whirlpool many thousands have gone down to darkness, holding the truth in unrighteousness.

There can be no real union only between those who have the Spirit of Christ. A few such may be found in almost every church, but the majority seem to be filled with a worldly spirit, therefore they speak and live like the world. Others have seen the truth, and because it was unpopular, they have turned against it and its supporters. With such the true christian can feel no union. He can take no backward step for the sake of a union, but he can most cheerfully stoop to the lowest, to help them up to a higher, nobler, brighter, and happier position, and at the same time elevate himself. In doing thus, he only imitates his divine Master, who was the chief friend of sinners.

In conclusion, we wish to say, we are fully satisfied that our Savior is coming very soon to receive his waiting bride, and commence his heavenly kingdom. Without delay, let this glorious truth be published everywhere, by all possible means. M. G.

THE COVENANT BOW.

After God had destroyed all flesh of men and of beasts from the face of the earth, by a flood of waters, exept those saved by divine arrangement in Noah's ark, to relieve men of fear of a repitition of the deluge, God made a covenant with the earth and all flesh that he would not destroy it and its creatures again by a flood of water.

To continue to impress the human heart with the great truth that God has made such a covenant with men, and that it is still in force, he continues to paint upon the rain-cloud, the "token of the covenant"—his "bow in the cloud."

God says, "I do set my bow in the cloud, and it shall be for a token of a covenant between me and the earth." Gen. 9: 13. Again he says, "And the bow shall be in the cloud; and I will look upon it, that I may remember the everlasting covenant between God and every living creature of all flesh that is upon the earth." V. 16.

It is an impressive truth that the Creator of all worlds and creatures looks upon the rainbow on the clouds, in the earth's atmosphere, and recognizes the immutability of his covenant, and invites man at the same time to look upon the heaven-given token and feel the assurance which God's promise can give, that the earth shall have but one baptism by water.

We were last evening, July 20th, more vividly and deeply impressed with this solemn and glorious truth and the sublimity and impressiveness of God's token, so wonderfully adapted to move the heart and perpetuate the remembrance of his mercy, than ever before. We had for several days suffered in this vicinity—Alton Bay, N. H.—from a sharp drought; vegetation was being badly withered under the scorching rays of the sun, while some praying hearts were sending petitions to the Giver of showers of rain that the blessing might be sent upon the unthankful and the good. While the sun was declining to his hiding-place behind the western hills, the gathering clouds and whirling currents indicated that the condensing vapors would soon descend in the much needed rain. The deep-toned thunders rolled their sounding waves through heavens like the echoing voice of a God, and the blinding flashes of electrical fluids ornamented the heavens with fiery network of wonderful patterns, such as we never saw before. The heavenly fireworks were awfully grand, and surpassingly beautiful, exhibiting the infinity of God's matchless works.

The rain descended graciously upon the thirsty earth, giving a new lease of life to grass and grain, extinguishing the threatening fires, and furnishing a greener carpet under our feet and a bluer arch over our heads.

The black and threatening clouds broke at last in the western heavens, and the sun threw his golden rays broadcast over the retiring scene, suddenly spreading a curtain of light over the entire concave, looking like a soft reflection from a burning world. In the center of this superbly painted curtain stood the covenant bow, in its most beautifully tinted robes. It was a perfect arch, standing with its right and left foot upon the horizon, and its center grandly towering towards its great Giver and Author. As we gazed upon the marvelously inspiring scene, which seemed so infinitely beyond anything that can be painted by man, and so much superior, as to grandeur and sublimity, to anything that human art can produce, we felt profoundly impressed as never before that God giveth such exhibitions of his skill and power for the merciful purpose of turning men's wandering thoughts to him and his assurances of grace and good will to them. The reflection that God looked upon the bow at the same time that we were looking upon it, the eye and mind of both concentrated in doing the same thing at the same time, thus experiencing a divine oneness and harmony with the great Jehovah, gave us a most sweet and joyful experience.

Happy is the man who walks so closely with God, that he can feel so intimately associated with him that he can hear his voice in the thunders, and see the fires he kindles in the lightnings, and feel his power in the vibrations of the earthquake, and realize the direct authority of God's covenant, when he looks upon his bow.

As God's bow in the cloud gives the assurance that the earth shall not again be baptized by water, so he gives us his promise that the earth shall be baptized once, and only once by fire.

This covenant bow is also presented in the Scriptures as existing (in antitype) beyond the earth's baptism by fire, which will be an assurance to the saints that the earth will not be again destroyed by fire, as the bow in the cloud gives the evidence that it shall no more be destroyed by water.

The bow is connected in symbolism with the last gospel message signifying that the message would present a sweet assurance that the earth is soon to be enjoyed in its eternal state beyond the last great change by fire. See Rev. 10: 1, and Ezek. 1: 28. When therefore we look upon the bow in the cloud, we should not only let the mind go back to the flood, and believe that the earth is now secured by the covenant of God from another overthrow by water, but we should let it go forward by faith to a time after it shall have been overthrown by fire, and as firmly believe that God will, according to his everlasting covenant with Abraham, give to him and his seed the earth as a "heavenly country," to be enjoyed forever without injury by water or fire. Glorious hope! May we enjoy the eternal inheritance. J. C.

A WEEK'S VACATION.

In order to give our compositors a little vacation, and also to accommodate the editors and clerks, who have extra work at this season, in consequence of the campmeetings, etc., we have decided to

Omit the Crisis for Aug. 23d,

but shall give our subscribers the full number for the volume, as usual. AG'T.

SPRINGFIELD CAMPMEETING.—As the time is drawing near for the opening of the campmeeting at Springfield, let it be made a subject of special prayer, that the Lord will manifest himself in a wonderful manner in saving sinners, reclaiming the backslidden, and in comforting and strengthening the saints. Each year these meetings have been growing more blessed; and this year we expect a decided advance. We long for the time when we shall again greet the dear saints in the tented grove, and again enjoy with them "the feast of tabernacles." M. G.

BRO. WM. SHELDON has arrived in Boston, from Wisconsin. He purposes to be at the Eastern campmeetings. May the Lord bless him richly. M. G.

THE TURKISH WAR.

The great powers of Europe are making large preparations for the coming conflict. It is becoming more and more probable that Russia and England will soon be on the battle field to decide the fate of nations. The Russians are well prepared for fighting on land or sea. When the conflict is once begun, we may look for terrible results. They dread the onset; but some unseen force seems to be crowding them into the the bloody scene. The thought of what is coming is really horrifying. Truly, this world has become alarmingly wicked, with no prospect of any permanent reform. Its last days are Sodom-like, but the opening of the new heavens will be supremely grand, and sublimely glorious. All hail the millennial dawn! Saints, make ready for the change from mortal to immortality. The pure heart is the necessary qualification. Let all sins be confessed and pardoned; each waiting one be filled with the Spirit, and clothed with the wedding garment of Christ's righteousness. M. G.

DAY OF JUDGMENT.

Under the above heading, the following appeared in the New York Mercury, and in the St. Louis Globe:

"The heavens above, the earth beneath, the waters under the earth, and the atmosphere which envelops our planet, have recently exhibited such portentious phenomena as to fill the minds of all Christendom with wonder and apprehension. Men of profound research, like M. Victor Herault, De la Rue, Carrington, and others, who have struggled assiduously to wring the secret of our world's destiny from nature, are no longer treated as mere distempered visionaries. Those cosmical changes that the telescope and the spectrum reveal in the heavens, and the terrible meteorological demonstrations that dotted our coast-line with shipwrecks, lead us by solemn steps back into the infinite. There is not an astronomer or scientist worth the name living to-day but accepts the statement that 'both the earth and its inhabitants have passed the prime of their development,' as a self-evident fact. They predicate this condition as respects the earth, just as confidently as we popularly assert a man of sixty is past his physical prime.

The subject of the death of the earth may not be a pleasant one; but some of the foremost minds of the age have said death may occur to the earth at any moment, just as to the individual who has entered upon his 'second childishness and mere oblivion.' It may be by a slow process of natural decay, or it may be sudden. The fact that the globe has entered into its death period, it will be remembered, has nothing whatever to do with the intellectual development of man. The earthquake, the volcano, the thunderbolt, and the hurricane spread havoc and destruction irrespective of man's wishes or man's prayers, and the globe's final convulsion, we are assured, will overtake us 'as a thief in the night.' 'Then we which are alive,' says St. Paul in Thess. 4: 17, 'and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air. This does not seem much like a peaceful millennium!" M. G.

PERSONAL.—Bro. B. T. R. Foster, Smithville, Tenn., wishes to return his deep-felt gratitude for the favors he has received to meet his pressing necessities. We have before us a note from the Postmaster of the place, which we give to our readers, as follows:

"Smithville, Tenn., July 20th, 1876.

"I am acquainted with B. T. R. Foster, of this place, who has a wife and nine children—the older ones girls, and who has been for a long time disabled by paralysis. He is forced to support himself and family by an appeal to the hand of charity, but the gratuities of this place are wholly inadequate to sustain his large family and other dependents, in these stringent times. I take pleasure in commending Mr. Foster and family as worthy and highly deserving the sympathy and aid of all who may be disposed to relieve suffering humanity."
ROBERT BLACK, P. M.

MOTHER-GOOSE PARTY.—Had the Pilgrims who came over in the Mayflower, and landed on Plymoth Rock, in 1620, been informed that the professed church of Christ would become as degenerated in two hundred and fifty years, as we now see it, they would have been slow of heart to believe any such thing could happen. What would they have thought of a notice like the following, from a California paper:

"The ladies of the Congregational Society of Woodland will give a Mother-Goose party at Washington Hall, on Monday evening next. The tableaux, recitations, songs and costumes will illustrate those old-time rhymes so familiar to childhood days. Mother Goose and Mother Hubbard will be there, also King Cole and various other celebrities. All are invited to attend in costume. Admission fifty cents; children half price." M. G.

EXPLANATION AND CORRECTION.—In my article, "Has the dragon been bound?" I say, "The dragon of Rev. 20 has ten horns." I said this on the supposition that the dragon of the 20th is the same as the dragon in the 12th, which has ten horns. It also reads: "France had been a Roman Catholic nation for three hundred years before the French Revolution." It should read—before A. D. 792. J. S. WHITE.

"HE LEADETH ME."

D. D. LOTHROP.

Dear Editors of the Crisis:—You recollect that last spring I renewed my subscription for the Crisis, having been without it some two or three years, and that I had become very hungry for "meat in due season," desiring to know the signs of the times; in other words, to ask, "Watchman, what of the night?" I stated that it had generally been my lot to be alone with reference to the Advent Christian faith. This longing desire to see the Crisis once more is all plain enough to me now. I found that the signs in the East were very much brighter than I had expected, which cheered my heart greatly. I tell you, dear brethren, there is nothing in this world which thrills my heart with so much delight as to learn of additional light in the signs of the nearness of our Lord's return.

Although I take several different papers, none of them take notice of the signs in the East, and compare them with the prophecies so fully as the Crisis does. My children, as well as myself are always anxious to have the week roll round for the Crisis to come, that we may get more light from the East. If there ever was a time when the children of God should be awake, it is now. Now is the time to have our lamps trimmed and burning. We need this in order to endure the frowns and sneers of the foolish virgins, as well as to be ready to meet the Bridegrom.

But this is not all the good news I have to tell you. When I read the Crisis and the Christian, I lend them to some of my neighbors; and to my surprise and pleasure, I found out by this means that there are some less than seven thousand in Montrose who have not bowed the knee to the image of Baal." I found that there are a few in this town who hold these precious truths, and are looking for the Lord's return; some of them aged, some poor, some widows; yet they love the Lord and his coming dearly. As fast as I read my papers, I lend them, and they go the rounds and come back again; then I send them by mail to friends at a distance. They are precious. If I were able to do so, I would subscribe for another copy of the Crisis, that I might the better supply these christian people with the good news. I have friends at a distance to whom I would like to send papers frequently, but deem it more necessary now to cheer up those in my immediate neighborhood.

I had been here nearly two years, and did not know of these brethren till I lent the Crisis to them; although a short time before I heard an expression in the Baptist prayer-meeting, which led me to think there might be such christians here. They reminded me of the early christians, spoken of by St. John (20: 19), who were assembled in the evening, and the doors were shut for fear of the Jews. They manifest signs of having been persecuted for their faith; and not having the meat in due season, their lights burned so dimly, that they did not seem to radiate beyond their little circle. Thank the Lord for his leading Spirit, which has so kindly opened communication between us. May the Lord bless them, strengthen and encourage them, that their light may shine more and more unto the perfect day.

I am also lending the few tracts that I have, and they are a source of pleasure to those who read them, and I trust they will be the means of giving new light to those who have not known these precious truths. Of course, there is no Advent Christian preaching very near us, and we have to attend other meetings, or stay at home; and if we stay at home, we will be unknown and unrecognized by the people; so I think it is better for us to attend meetings, and let our light shine on these precious truths, as much as the people will bear it, although it is but little; and so keep it before them enough so they will be conscious that such a faith is held in their midst. By so doing we will be performing our duty to the world, that appears to be so unconscious of their danger.

This meeting of the conference was an important and interesting one. The business, preaching and social meetings were of greater interest than usual; and it is hoped that lasting good was done by this gathering of ministers and people to sustain the cause of their soon coming King.

The church in Lynn was truly hospitable, and amply provided for all who came. The thanks of the conference were given them, and the blessing of God invoked in their behalf. I. I. LESLIE, Secretary.

Correspondence.

From Bro. R. H. Gresham.

To the dear Brn. and Srs. in Christ:—A little over two months ago, I addressed you from Turnpike, Buncombe county, N. C., through the Crisis, which was inserted in that valuable paper of June 7th. I then instructed correspondents to address me at that most salubrious new town of Highlands, Macon Co., N. C.; and they may continue to address me there, though as I am often elsewhere, those wishing to know of that lovely country, and the new colony, should address S. T. Kelsey, at that place. I have been traveling by railroad, boats, stage-coaches, and on foot, and wherever I go I am distributing papers, and in every proper manner to awaken a lively interest among the people concerning the straight and narrow way that leads to the kingdom of God, which will shortly be established on the earth. I find but few, comparatively, very few, who seem willing to give their time and money as they ought to in the investigation and practice of these all-important matters. It seems easier to enlist a thousand men, soul, body and strength, in a political movement, than to enlist one man heartily in the cause of Christ.

Louisville, Ky., contains about one hundred and fifty thousand persons, and I have found but two families in that entire city who seem to be intelligently looking for and loving the Lord's appearing. Bro. L. H. Farrell, of Louisville, deserves great credit. I trust he may hold out faithful, and be found worthy when our Lord comes; if so, he will then get the great reward. There is a little band of true believers in Jeffersonville, Ind., who are striving to fight the good fight; yet some of them, I fear, are too much disposed to lean upon their fellow men for help in spiritual matters. Not one of us should ever forget for a day, or even for an hour, that pure religion is a personal matter, that every brother and sister in Christ, however poor, and ignorant, and humble, has an individual responsiblility upon them, and an individual work to perform; and none should wait for the elders and deacons to perform the work which they themselves ought to do. I do think it the imperative duty of our preaching brethren everywhere to impress it most earnestly on all the members in Christ, that each and every one (high or low) should work most earnestly, constantly, consistently and lovingly for the cause of Christ.

My heart has been made glad since I came here by some good letters from the few dear brethren and sisters near Turnpike, N. C., and others near Bright's Creek, N. C., who came into the one faith through my feeble efforts a few months ago. I have mentioned them by name in former letters, and I trust that the dear brethren everywhere, who have read my letters, will continue to pray for the scattered few in N. C. who have gladly accepted the word of truth, and who are striving daily to fight the good fight of faith in strict conformity with the apostolic teaching.

Elder N. Field, of this place (Jeffersonville, Ind.), deserves a great deal of credit. If each and all of the members here were as earnestly at work as he is, I do think that more good might be done; but here, as elsewhere, there is a lack among some of the members to assist in sounding the good tidings, and proclaiming the gospel of the kingdom. All are not apt to teach, but each and all can do something. We who are heralding the truth should not shun to declare the whole counsel of God, as far as we have learned it. We should pattern after Paul, and should reason with the people of temperance, righteousness, and a judgment to come. Let us use the pure speech, and continue steadfast in the apostolic doctrine, in prayers, and in all that the apostles have enjoined on us, because the apostle Peter, after enumerating many things that we must do, says—"If these things be in you and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord. . . . So an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of God."

I expect to return to North Carolina in a few days.

Jeffersonville, Ind., July 8th, 1876.

From Bro. H. Stevens, Jun.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—Through the mercy of God, I have been enabled to reach home again, after nearly three years' absence. I left Bro. Brundage at Cole's Ferry, Va., July 9th. Have written to him once, but have not received an answer as yet; hope to soon. He (Bro. Brundage) left Cole's Ferry the day after we parted, the 10th, for home, at Black Walnut, Halifax Co., Va. Bro. B's wife will try to attend the campmeeting this year. I have found this place somewhat as Paul found Athens. The people are not thinking much about God, neither judgment. I preached last night in the Baptist church; subject, St. John 14: 2, 3. Some seem stirred on the subject, as it seems to be entirely new to them. It seems that the pastors care but little about warning the people of a speedy coming Savior. They think of going to heaven or hell as soon as they die; so the idea of the coming One is mere ideal with some. With your prayers and God's help, I think much good can be done here. I want all of you to pray that the word may have free course, and that much good may be done in this place.

I shall not be able to attend the campmeetings this year. I shall labor and scatter tracts as widely as I can. If any Bro. or Sr. feels like sending some interesting tracts for distribution, I will try to scatter them where they may take root in some poor sinner's heart. "Some fell in good ground," etc. If any Bro. or Sr. sends tracts—directly or indirectly—pray as you send that they may do good to the receivers. As you assemble on the consecrated campgrounds this summer, let your prayers go up to God for the perishing throughout this dreary land.

Pray for me, that I may be an instrument in the Master's hands, and that much good may be done. Should death overtake me before I shall be able to see you again, I hope to rise at the sounding of the first trump triumphant over death and hades, and enter through the gates into the city from above, where we shall see the spotless Lamb, who will "lead us unto living fountains of water."

Goldsboro, N. C.

From Bro. C. E. Preston.

Dear Brn. and Sisters, in the faith of the soon coming of our King:—I wish to write a little of my experience in the town where I live. I came to this place about four years ago. I knew nothing of the Bible at that time. I had no interest in divine things, therefore attended no church. About a year afterwards I began to attend the Methodist church, and became somewhat interested. The next fall I went to Alton Bay Campmeeting with my mother (she being an Adventist), and there felt I was fully converted to God. During two years I have been working in the vineyard of the Lord, trying in my weak way to persuade men to get ready for the coming judgment. We are almost home. The walls of the New Jerusalem are almost in sight. Remember, "the path of the just is as a shining light," and it does shine more and more. Thank God, only a little while longer. I am sick of old earth. May Jesus come soon.

Medford, Mass.

From Bro. P. G. Bowman.

Dear Brethren:—My dear wife, after suffering more than pen or tongue can describe, for the last two slowly rolling years, of wasting disease, sweetly and joyfully fell asleep in Jesus yesterday, about three o'clock, firmly believing that the resurrection trump will soon call her into life and immortality. Had she lived one month more, she would have completed her fifty-first year. In all the relations of life, she had no superiors and few equals. Utter desolation reigns throughout my heart and the hearts of my poor children. O when will the power of death cease? Will all who love Jesus pray for me in this dark and cloudy day; and for this mission; for the death of my dear wife has produced a wide gap in it. Hoping to see you all once more, in a short time, I ask again an interest in your prayers.

Lydia, Darlington Co., S. C., July 23d.

From Bro. J. R. Comstock.

Brn. and Srs. in Christ:—I am still holding on to that blessed hope once delivered to the saints, and looking for the speedy coming of the Lord. There are but a few here of like precious faith, and they are scattered over a large territory; but we get together occasionally and have a love-feast with one another in the Lord. I visited the Athens church last Lord's day, and presented the word to them. The meeting was in the grove, and well attended. This church numbers something over thirty members, and are all live christians. Eld. S. R. Knox presides over them, and is a faithful shepherd. I preach twice every Lord's day; travel seven miles to the first appointment, and ten to the second, and return, making a travel of thirty-four miles. I am young in the work, but feel strong in the faith. I desire an interest in the prayers of the church, that I may not falter.

Burr Oak, Kan., July 4th, 1876.

Extracts from Letters.

SR. AGNES C. GRAY writes from Dexter, Me., June 26th, 1876:—Dear Brn. and Sisters: For a long time I have thought I would like to write to you through the Crisis. How it cheers my aching heart to read from others words of joy or sorrow, as they are waiting for their Master's return. For the past three months I have been unable to read, or even to hear the letters read from the dear ones. Many of you know I have not enjoyed good health for the past twelve years. Trouble, and working so much beyond my strength, have at last thrown me upon a bed of long and painful sickness. I am gaining, but very slowly. Now, dear ones, you that have faith in the living God to heal the sick, please pray for me, that I may be raised up once more to labor in the cause of Christ. Truly the laborers are few, and all are needed who are willing to work in the field.

I have had many happy hours since I have been sick. O how good God has been to me. How sweet it is to rely on his promises. Dear ones, you that have enough of this world's goods, you do not know how sweet it is to look up and pray, 'Give us this day our daily bread,' and wait, and trust in faith until it comes. It will surely come, if we ask aright. If we are poor, our Father is very wealthy. He has promised to feed us here, and give us eternal life in the kingdom. Loved ones, you that are sick, cheer up, for we soon shall see the King in his beauty. We then shall be made immortal, and have bodies like unto his most glorious body. O how patient we will try and be, while suffering pain and anguish, having such a blessed prospect in the future."

Bro. S. P. Lowell writes from Eugene City, Oregon:—"The cause of the Lord is advancing steadily. There are quite a number who believe we are nearing the end, and there is a great desire by nearly all to investigate the truth. We need some one to preach to us, but no one has been sent yet. Oregon has been forgotten. I am in hopes some one will be directed by the Spirit to come to this State. If there is any way that you can send tracts for free distribution, I will scatter them. I have only what I get by days' work, and I have my family to support. It is very hard times for money."

Obituaries.

Porter. In Danville, P. Q., July 17th, 1876, of congestion of the brain, after two days' illness, Sr. J. Porter, wife of Eld. John Porter, of Danville, aged fifty-one years.

Sr. Porter's death will be a great loss to the christian community in which she lived. She was a devoted and loving wife, an affectionate mother, and a consistent christian, living in expectation of the coming King. Her words of comfort have often cheered the sorrowing; her wise counsel often brought peace, where otherwise rancor and hatred might have been. She had developed the christian grace of love to a most remarkable degree. She will be missed by the pilgrim preachers, who have often been cheered and comforted by her christian kindness and hospitality. The public in the neighborhood, without denominational distinction, manifested their sincere respect towards her in their sympathy for her aged and bereaved partner and family. The stroke was sudden and unexpected; but thank God, she was prepared. Bro. Porter feels the loss he has sustained very keenly. May the Lord sustain the bereaved family by his grace, and comfort them by the assurance that the separation will not be long, as Bro. P. most firmly believes. In the absence of any regular preacher, the writer endeavored to improve the occasion by words of comfort and admonition, from 1 Thess. and latter part of the fourth chapter. J. Ward, Montreal.

Hill. In Dayton, Me., July 11th, 1876, Sr. Hulda Hill, aged eighty-six years.

Our dear sister came down to the grave like a "shock of corn fully ripe," and ready for harvest. She embraced the hope of life through Christ at the age of seventeen, and has lived a devoted christian ever since. Sixty-nine years for Jesus! Her testimony was a great help in our prayer and conference meetings. She was greatly beloved by all who knew her, and loved most by those who knew her best. In her sickness she expressed a desire to see Jesus come, but would submit to the will of God; for through life his will had been her's. May God bless the dear bereaved family, and help them to follow the example of their godly, pious mother. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer, from St. John 11: 25. J. Hill.

Hale. In Danbury, N. H., after a distressing illness, Bro. Simeon Hale, on his birthday, June 2nd, 1876, aged seventy-three years.

Bro. H. has for many years been a firm believer in the speedy return of the Nobleman, and died in the faith that he will soon triumph over death by a resurrection from the dead. A kind father, loving husband, and weary pilgrim has fallen. May the Lord comfort the bereaved family. S. F. Leavitt.

Sanborn. At Iron Hill, June 3d, 1876, of lingering consumption, Bro. George Sanborn, aged twenty years and six months.

Bro. Sanborn gave his heart to the Lord about twenty months ago, was baptized by Bro. Abram Tibson, and was a faithful christian until his death. Funeral services by the writer, from Rev. 14: 13. L. Marsh.

Thatcher. In Shefford, P. Q., June 30th, 1876, of consumption, Sr. Mariah Thatcher, aged sixteen years and nine months.

She sleeps in Christ, with full confidence of a part in the first resurrection. A few days before her death, she chose for the text Ps. 23: 1–3, and the hymns to be sung at her funeral. Funeral attended by the writer. L. Marsh.

Town. At Clear Lake, Iowa, July 12th, 1876, by kerosene oil explosion, Effa R., youngest daughter of R. and C. Town, aged seven years, ten months, and fifteen days.

Effa was a bright, good girl, and a favorite of all who knew her. She lived about seven hours. Words of comfort by the writer, from Matt. 19: 14. Assisted by H. H. and M. J. Janes. Peter S. W. Deyo.

She was a great sufferer with a cancer in the throat; but she now sleeps, waiting for the last trump to sound. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer, from Rom. 8: 18. Geo. E. Brown.

Young. In Ossipee, N. H., July 11th, 1876, of quick consumption, Sr. Addie Young, aged twenty-six years, and one month.

Her funeral sermon was preached by Eld. A. Stillings, from Rev. 21: 4. A. Stillings.

Bilields. In St. George, Me., May 30th, 1876, Thomas, infant child of Bro. Wm. and Sr. Lizzie Bilields. H. S. M.

Constantinople, July 25. Official dispatches say that a Turkish detachment from Satchunitza crossed the Servian frontier and defeated the Servians, killing 3000 men. It also burned three villages.

London, July 27. A dispatch from Constantinople says it is stated that the Government has decided to issue paper currency to the amount of three million Turkish pounds.

Ragusa, July 27. A Berlin special says preparations are making to mobilize the whole army.

Vienna, July 27. The Montenegrins, in consequence of their defeat on the 23d, retreated to Krestac, where a fresh engagement is expected.

July 28. The Tagblatt says that a change of rule in Turkey is an accomplished fact. Abdul Hamid Effendi, younger brother of Murad, is regent.

July 28. It is reported here, on reliable authority, that the Sultan Murad Effendi is dying, and that Abdul Hamed, a brother of the Sultan, has been appointed provisional regent.

London, July 28. A dispatch from Semlin says Servia has authorized the formation of a legion of foreign volunteers. Signori Carrizzini and Cerceni, the latter an aid-de-camp of Garibaldi, are forming an Italian legion. The strength of the Servian army is now 115,000 men, and 250 guns, including one battery of Krupp's guns, and 150 bronze pieces. The Servian artillery officers are superior to the Turkish, but the Servian army is deficient in infantry officers. Russian officers and surgeons are arriving at Belgrade daily.

The Czar will send one of his own physicians to attend the wounded at Belgrade. Many Odessa ladies have started for Servia to superintend the hospitals.

London, July 29. The Pall Mall Gazette has a dispatch which says: "Soderhann, a maratime town of Sweden, forty-two miles north of Gefie, on an inlet of the Gulf of Bothnia, was almost totally destroyed by fire on the 22d inst. Great distress prevails. The damage amounts to many million crowns."

The News' Maderia special says the blockade of the ports of Dahomey was declared on the 1st of July. The British man-of-war Spiteful is stationed at Whydah, and the Ariel at Little Popo.

The vessels now in the blockaded ports will be allowed thirty days to load and depart. It is not intended to attack Dahomey from the sea. An available force will go in a mail boat to Porto Nova and thence to the Capital.

The Pall Mall Gazette's Berlin dispatch says: "The defeat of the Montenegrins occasions discomfiture at the Russian Court, where Prince Nicholas has been ostentatiously petted. Some of the Russian diplomatists assert that it will be impossible for the Czar to repress the war spirit in Russia if the Turks invade Servia. Knowledge of this fact probably accounts for the hesitation of the Turks."

Vienna, July 30. A dispatch says the rear guard of Prince Nikite's army, which was defeated a few days ago by the Turks, has had an engagement with the Turkish army and defeated it. They laid an ambush for the Turks, who unsuspectingly fell into it, and after a sharp encounter, the Turks were completely routed and their commander, Osman Pacha, taken prisoner. The victory is considered most important at this juncture. Osman Pacha was one of the best of the Turkish generals, and his defeat and capture will be a sad blow to the Turks.

They laid an ambush for the Turks, who unsuspectingly fell into it, and after a sharp encounter the Turks were completely routed and their commander, Osman Pacha, taken prisoner. This victory is considered most important at this juncture.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

San Francisco, July 24. A dispatch from Eureka says that about nine o'clock last night a cloud burst on the Diamond range mountains, thirteen miles east of here, which resulted in the death of thirteen Chinese wood-choppers and probably a large number of Italians, camped in a canon getting out timber. Without a moment's warning, a column of water two feet high rushed upon them, drowning all but one Chinaman. The Italians were camped a short distance above, and as no trace can be found, it is feared all perished.

The R. I. Campmeeting, at Coventry Centre, R. I., on the H. P. and Fishkill R. R., will commence Wednesday, Sept. 6th, and close Friday, the 15th. To those in the business circles of life, that are anxiously looking for the return of former prosperity, with fearful forebodings of the future; and those that are watching coming events, waiting the promised return of the Savior, in like manner as he went away to give life and immortality to the faithful, this meeting will be one of unusual interest. Preachers will be expected to show from the Bible the first named class, the position they occupy, as plainly as did Noah's preaching the antediluvians, and the absolute necessity of getting ready to meet the things soon coming on the earth; and cause the second class to lift up their head, and rejoice that their redemption draweth nigh. The signs of the times are as unmistakable omens of the final doom of man, as the putting forth of the buds of the fig tree are of the approach of summer. Being obliged to reduce our expenses to meet liabilities, that we owe no man, free boarders, not active spiritual laborers, will be expected to labor in any position assigned them, to save expense of former meetings. By this arrangement, we do not exclude our aged sisters, who with anxiety have cared for and made happy the home of him whom the woe has been upon if he preach not the word. Come, every one of you, and know that the Lord provides for the Marthas as well as the Marys. Those willing to volunteer their services to reduce the expense of the meeting, will please write J. P. Hazard, Greene, R. I., that there be no confusion at the commencement of the meeting, or unnecessary trouble in hiring help. Board 80 cts. per day. Horse keeping 75 cts. per day, ample room being provided on both sides of the road for horses and carriages. No teams or carriages will be allowed to stand within the limits of the highway. Railroad fare reduced as usual. By order of the committee,

J. P. Hazard.

Iowa Mission Tent.—I will send a stereoscopic view of the Iowa Mission tent, taken while pitched at the National M. E. campmeeting of the West, at Clear Lake, Iowa; myself and family, Sr. Janes, and other friends of the cause, also dear little Effa Town, who was burnt to death four days after the picture was taken. I will send one for 50 cts., or three for $1.00; the profits to be applied to lift the debt on the tent. I can furnish other views of the camp, the great Pavillion Lake, Mrs. Van Cott and children, etc., at the same rates. As profits are but little, if any wish to help, they can send also an offering. It will be thankfully received. I trust that the pledges will be redeemed, as I need them very badly to meet my contract. I must sell the tent unless help comes soon. In the meantime, I shall keep at the work. Brn., pray for us. Peter S. W. Deyo.

Iowa Campmeeting.—The General Union State Campmeeting and Conference will convene at West Irving, Tama Co., Iowa, August 25th, and continue over two Sundays. West Irving is about five miles north of Belle Plain, Benton Co., on the Chicago and Northwestern R. R. Conveyance will be run from all day trains to the ground. Stop at Belle Plain, and inquire for the West Irving campmeeting conveyance. There will be hay and grain on the ground for teams. A boarding tent and provision stand will also be kept. The committee have made all possible arrangements for the comfort of those who attend. Bring your bedding, and if possible bring tents. The N. E. A. C. Mission tent will be on hand in time for meeting. It is expected that this will be by far the largest meeting we have had. Make your arrangements, and come at the first of the meeting. Per order of committee, J. Ridley, Sec.

There is a little band of lovers of the Lord and his appearing in Salem, N. H., who would be glad of preaching occasionally; and if there are any brethren who feel like coming this way, trusting the Lord as their paymaster, such will please correspond with Orlando Welch, Salem Depot, N. H.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE Second Advent Christian Association.

The annual meeting of this Association will be held in Chelsea, Mass., on Wednesday, Aug. 23rd, commencing at two o'clock P. M. Besides the regular business usually transacted at the annual meeting, action will be taken looking toward the still further amending of the Constitution.

It is hoped that there may be a full attendance of delegates, and it is suggested, if any conferences entitled to representation in this Association have as yet failed to appoint their delegates, that they will appoint them in due season for this meeting, which will be one of great importance. By order of the Board of Directors,

C. E. Barnes, Secretary.

American Advent Mission Society.

The Annual Meeting of the American Advent Mission Society for the election of officers will be held in Chelsea, Mass., commencing Thursday, Aug. 24th, 1876, at 2 o'clock P. M.

The members are composed of the annual delegates to, and officers of, the Advent Christian Association (East) and the Western Advent Christian Association, and of all ministers in good standing—co-operating therewith.

A. W. Sibley, Secretary.

Notice.

An extra session of the N. H. Second Advent Christian Conference is hereby called to meet on the Alton Bay camp-ground, Tuesday, Aug. 22d, at ten o'clock A. M., to choose delegates to the Advent Christian Association, and transact other business that may come before the Conference. As business of importance is to be transacted, it is desired that all churches in the State be represented by their ministers and delegates.

A Call to the Second Advent Churches in New Hampshire.

It is important that the Secretary of the N. H. Advent Christian Conference be informed without delay of the number of members of the churches in the State, that we may know how many delegates to send to the Advent Christian Association. Let the Pastor, Clerk, Elder, or Deacons, report at once to the Secretary at Newport, N. H.

C. H. Fletcher, Sec.

Tremont Campmeeting.

The annual campmeeting at Tremont, Mass., will commence Monday, July 31st, and continue to Aug. 8th. Arrangements will be made as formerly for board and lodging. All who can bring tents are requested to do so. Dear brethren, as we may be permitted to have one more gathering on this consecrated ground before the Lord comes, let us avail ourselves of this opportunity to do all we can to arouse the church, and save the lost. We intend to secure good laborers to help in this blessed work to give the last notes of warning to a lost world; for the omens which are now looming up in Europe strongly indicate that our work will soon be closed up for this world.

Tickets from Boston to be had at the Crisis Office for the round trip for $1 90.

Henry V. Davis, for the Com.

Springfield Campmeeting.

I wish all who are not going to use their tent ground this year, would notify me as soon as possible, so that I can accommodate others with your spot before Wednesday morning, August 16th. Such as have frames and floors would, no doubt, like to rent them for a little something, rather than let them stand idle, and be more exposed to injury than if they were covered and protected. There are a number of Springfield people from other churches who want tent spots. It bids fair for a large and good meeting. If any have rooms in wooden tents to rent, please inform me, also telling the location and price, immediately, and I will rent them. Those wishing to get help to work putting up tent frames on the ground, will find help on the ground, also lumber and nails, as usual. Direct to Chicopee Falls, Mass.

GOD KNOWS."

Through all my little daily cares there is
One thought that comfort brings whene'er it comes;
'Tis this—"God knows." He knows
Each struggle that my hard heart makes to bring
My will to his. Often when night-time comes,
My heart is full of fears, because the good
That seemed, at morn, so easy to be done,
Has proved so hard; but then remembering
That a kind Father is my Judge, I say,—
"He knows." And so I lay me down with trust,
That his good hand will give me needed strength
To better do his work in coming days.

FROM BRO. T. J. GREENE.

To the A. A. M. Society.

Dearly Beloved:—I again attempt to write you from this southern part of the Lord's vineyard. Every thing out here bears the marks of the curse so plainly, that it may well be said that the nations are in "distress," "with perplexity." I have never witnessed so much distress among the masses as now. The conflict between political parties is raging with unabated fury. The masses are groaning under the oppressive laws enacted by the predominant party. Taxes are so high the poor can scarcely pay them. Many, yes, very many, cannot get bread enough to eat. The poor women and children are suffering, and in dirt and rags. Their lands are mortgaged away for bread, and their crops this season are a failure, as they were last year. My own land has not been wet since the first day of April; besides, the horses have been dying with the epizootic, and many others are disabled. My own horse has not been fit for use the whole summer, but appears to be getting better, though too weak to ride much. I have had to travel on foot all the summer. I have been attacked with inflammatory rheumatism in my right knee, so that I could not walk much, and therefore have not done as much as I would like.

I am pressed upon on every side to "come and preach for us," but am not able to respond. I am trying to keep up the cry—"Behold the Bridegroom cometh." The brethren are still alive, and it is to be hoped many are ready to meet the Lord. We are having good meetings, and very attentive hearers. They are still coming out on the Lord's side. I have baptized two since my last report, and two others are waiting an opportunity. So, every thing considered, I think I may safely say, that when the Lord comes he will gather a few precious ones from Florida. I am anxiously waiting for the good Lord to enable me to go out in the hedges and compel them to come in. About all that do come will have to be compelled by the most overwhelming evidences, because the message is so unpopular. Hence it requires much labor from the minister now-a-days to convert one sinner.

I am anxious to be with you all at the coming campmeetings, that I might be refreshed; but, alas! I am not able. But I do hope that the Brn. and Srs., one and all, when they meet at Springfield and Alton Bay, will devote a portion of their time in prayers for me and the Florida mission. Especially the prayers of the righteous avail much. Pray for my health and success in the glorious cause. Pray God that my faith fail not while passing through fiery trials.

Dear Brn., let us arouse from slumber, for surely the Lord is soon coming to set up his kingdom under the whole heaven. May both reader and writer meet him in peace, is the prayer of your humble servant in the Lord.

Suwannee Shoals, Fla., July 2nd, 1876.

P. S.—As some of the brethren and sisters have complained of having written to me without answer, and their letters were returned, I would say that the mistake is that Lake City is only my nearest money-order office; while Suwannee Shoals is my post-office address. T. J. G.

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The fourth quarterly meeting of the A. C. Conference of North Western Kansas, was held with the church at Smith Grove, Lincoln Co., commencing Friday evening, June 16th, 1876, and continued over Sunday. The first meeting for business was called to order by President, S. R. Knox, Saturday, 9 o'clock A. M. After opening prayer by the President, the Secretary being absent, there were no minutes of the previous meeting read. On motion of W. E. Moss, Elijah Smith was elected Secretary pro tem, with the privilege of voting in the conference. On motion, Brn. — Ross, V. P. Dillingham, and Wm. Green, were appointed a committee on devotional services. Also on motion, Brn. W. E. Moss and — McCartney were appointed a ministerial committee.

Report of Ministers. Bro. Knox made a very favorable report of his labors. Bro. McCartney also reported that he had labored in the ministry as far as he had time, and that his labors had been blest. Bro. W. E. Moss also reported that he had labored in the ministry all that his health would permit him.

Report of Churches by Delegates. Bro. A. Vanamburg, of the Smith Grove church, reported that it was in a thriving condition. Two members had been added since the last conference. Bro. Ross, of the Athens church, reported that they are in a thriving condition. Credentials were presented by E. N. Bliss and Wm. T. Martin, as delegates from Salt Creek church. On motion of Bro. Moss, E. N. Bliss was not received as a delegate. The credentials were withdrawn by Wm. T. Martin.

Bro. McCartney offered the following:—

Resolved, That hereafter, if it is not already in the constitution, delegates from all churches shall present letters of commendation from the church to which they belong, before they shall be allowed to vote in the conference. Adjourned.

Evening session. The case of E. N. Bliss, requesting a committee to settle the difficulty, or investigate the matter of difference between him and Bro. and Sr. Clark, ruled out for want of jurisdiction. On motion, Bro. Knox was appointed to talk wiith Bro. Thorp, and stir him up to his duty as Secretary of N. W. Conference. The delegate from the Salem church handed in his credentials. On motion, the delegate was received by vote. On motion, the Salem church report was received.

T. R. Comstock presented a petition asking license to preach. The ministerial committee examined the brother, reported favorably, and on vote of conference, license was granted him to preach. Moved and seconded that the conference adjourn to hold its next session with the Salem church, in Jewell Co., Kansas.

CONFERENCE REPORTS.

Thos. Fitzsimons.

Dear Brn. of the Crisis:—The reference to long conference reports and obituary notices, that appeared in a late number of the Crisis, is so well-timed, so excellent and valuable, it should be re-published. Two-thirds of your readers, we believe, endorse it. The constant repetition of long, monotonous, and the same conference reports, is, I think, in occupying column after column of the Crisis, a real injury to the paper, and is one reason why I believe many fail to renew their subscription when it runs out. In the paper of June 28th, from which I enclose your notice (and I am glad to see the Crisis editors awaking to this fact), there are no less than two columns of the paper occupied with these reports and obituary notices, some of the latter upon infants. Surely, the eventful state of the times, and the rich harvest of prophetic fulfillments, now asking publicity to confirm our faith, and gather through these proofs converts to the cause of Christ, are much more important and valuable to be given to the world. As you say, valuable facts, and articles of great interest, are kept out of the paper by these reports. We hope you will republish your notice to Brn. who continue to send these long and really uninteresting accounts of conferences, lumbering up the paper with articles that, as you truly say, but few ever read.

Let our brethren condense their reports. It would be a good plan to permit no "conference report to exceed half a column of the paper, and no obituary notice more than twelve lines. Excuse the liberty I take in writing these few suggestions, as my motive is to see the Crisis the great prophetic messenger of the world. The field is rich and immense; and testimony from every side is daily asking admission. A great struggle is before us. Fortify us with the now-coming-out testimony in Europe and America, and the opinions of the great men of the day on these subjects. Yours in love and fraternity.

P. S.—I would mention that many of the news, facts and proofs, given in the Crisis, of Christ's coming, are used by our preachers in their sermons over the land. How important then is your advice, and the great value of space in the Crisis to only the most valuable articles, and daily prophetic intelligence. T. F.

REPORT OF HOOSIC VALLEY A. C. CONFERENCE.

This conference was held at Sandy Hill, N. Y., commencing July 5th, and closing Sunday evening, July 9th. The business sessions were Thursday P. M. and Friday morning. The meetings were called to order by the Chair, H. K. Flagg. The business was done with despatch and in christian harmony. From facts brought out it was decided that we are entitled to four delegates to the National Convention. Bro. Robert Candlish, of Rutland, was voted in as a delegate, to be added to our present number. Preachers present were H. K. Flagg, Savoy, Mass.; R. Mosher, Sandy Hill, N. Y.; S. G. Mathewson, Castleton, Vt.; Arthur A. Waite, Sandy Hill, N. Y.; Cornelius Pike, Massena, N. Y.; A. W. Sibley, Providence, R. I. Delegates—N. W. Waite, Jacob Pike, Judson Kingsley, Sandy Hill, N. Y.; Gilbert Remington, James L. Congdon, North Fort Ann, N. Y.; S. D. Hartcheus, Robert Candlish, and Mary Candlish, Rutland, Vt.; P. G. Lord, No. Shrewsbury, Vt.

Reports were given in by preachers and delegates from the following churches: No. Adams, Mass.; Hoosic, Hebron, Massena, Lake George, Sandy Hill, and No. Fort Ann, N. Y.; Castleton, Rutland, and No. Shrewsbury, Vt. As a whole, the reports were encouraging, yet there is a great lack of ministerial labor within the bounds of the conference. The meetings were well attended, and great interest manifested.

Eld. A. W. Sibley, of Providence, R. I., having moved out of the bounds of this conference, and having become a member of the R. I. and East Ct. Conf., wished his name dropped as a member of this conference. Preaching by the following brethren: S. G. Mathewson, H. K. Flagg, A. A. Waite, and C. Pike. It was voted that our annual conference be held with the church at Castleton, Vt., if agreeable to the church. Voted, that the minutes of this conference be sent to the World's Crisis and A. C. Times for publication. Adjourned sine die.

R. Candlish, Secretary.

NOTES BY THE WAY.

H. B. Sevey.

Dear Brn. of the Crisis:—As many of the readers of our loved paper are anxious to know how I am, by your permission I will give through its columns some of my experiences for a few months past, which have been months of sadness, amid glorious hopes of the coming future. I had my foot jammed in February, which has confined me at home until this time, and am yet obliged to use the crutch and cane to go about the house. The nerves of the foot are injured, which affects the nerve in the leg. I am better at this time, and hope soon to be able to work in the vineyard of our blessed Master. In the mean time, I have held meetings in my own neighborhood with Bro. F. E. Blaisdell, which resulted in the reclaiming of wanderers, and the conversion of some from sin to a new life in Christ and a love for his truth, which embraces his coming and kingdom on earth. One went forward in baptism; others intended to, but were prevented by opposing influences.

In April my family was taken down with the quinsy. They were all sick at one time. My wife had lung fever. Our brethren and sisters came to our relief, and gave us timely help. In May our daughter Ella was taken down with rheumatic fever, which settled on the heart, and in a few weeks, we were obliged, amid tears, to lay her down beside others we loved. She died the seventh of June, aged twelve years. Just before she died, she gave away her things, and made preparation for her burial. The funeral was attended by Bro. A. H. Walker, who gave us words of comfort founded on 1 Thess. 4:18—"Wherefore comfort one another with these words." He told us that one Jesus was coming to this earth, and that our daughter, who was dead, would then live again; that this earth would be the paradise of God, and all the saints would be made immortal, with glorified bodies, which would not suffer pain; for there would be no more pain in that world, for the curse would be removed, and the wicked would cease to trouble, for they would be destroyed; and the devil, which had the power of death, would be destroyed; then the earth would be filled with the glory of God, the desert would blossom as the rose, the lame leap as an heart, and the redeemed would return from the land of the enemy, and the time was at hand when we might look for it. These words comforted our sorrowing hearts. While we mourn, it is with hope. We have buried all but one of our children; may he with us be prepared for the glorious day which is coming, when loved ones shall live to die no more.

I have thought much of those who are confined, and have been for years; how they must long for deliverance. It seems, at times, almost impossible for me to keep quiet, I view time so short, and the world sleeping; and I fear many who profess to be his followers are also asleep. Is there not danger? Has not the apostle given us the caution not to sleep, as others do? and do not the signs portend, in thunder tones, the judgment at hand? Awake! awake! Sound the alarm. Pray for me. Your Bro. in tribulation, looking for deliverance soon.

Mt. Vernon, Me., July 11th, 1876.

JOTTINGS.

C. H. Sweet.

An excellent meeting was enjoyed by many lovers of our Lord's appearing, at West Parsonsfield, Me., July 4th. Sermons were preached by Eld's. J. Gay, and W. H. Mitchell, and Bro. Webster Stevens, of West Parsonsfield, was publicly set apart to the work of the gospel ministry.

At Ossipee Pocket, N. H., a good interest has been awakened under the labors of Bro. Stevens. A number of persons have been hopefully converted, and some of them have followed their Savior in the ordinance of baptism.

The interest aroused, by our protracted meetings, at South Hiram, Me., last winter, has not yet died out, as was plain to be seen a few Sabbaths since, when it was estimated there were more than five hundred people assembled to witness the baptism of some of the strong and healthy converts. God continues to bless us at Water Village, N. H. Since my last letter to the Crisis, two middle-aged men have taken a very decided stand on the Lord's side. We look for others to follow.

My neighbors gave me a good hearing in their Free Baptist meeting-house Sabbath, July 2nd. I spoke to them of the evils of sectarianism, and defined my position upon the subject of Christian Union. Most of them received it well. Some, however, treated both me and my message rather cooly. This does not dishearten me, as I long since got well used to such treatment. I am still confident that we shall yet witness a good work in the neighborhood of this my new home.

Some of my readers will remember the ordination of L. W. Gowen, at Springvale, Me., one year ago last spring. He was recently reordained by the Wolfboro (N. H.) Free Baptist Quarterly meeting. The facts concerning the two ordinations having found their way into the columns of the Granite State News, Rev. A. D. Fairbanks (Free Baptist), published a reply to the correspondent who gave these facts to the paper. In his reply he states that ordinations "by the Advent Society" are considered mere "boy's play by all Evangelical denominations," and that Adventists have not yet "attained to acknowledged respectability" among said denominations.

QUAR. CONFERENCE REPORT.

The Kansas Central A. C. Conference met according to appointment July 1st, at Ottumwa, Coffey Co., Kan. Preaching Brn. present—Eld. W. W. Cate, of South Western Mo., Moses McGuire, D. Webster, N. S. Brian, Aaron Preston, V. Hunt, H. H. Klock, and J. C. Smith, of Kansas. Bro. Smith, in connection with the brethren at Ottumwa, had the Kansas Mission Tent pitched on Thursday before the conference, and had meeting in it at night. Brn. Cate and Fry, from Mo., came on Friday, and spoke to us at night. Other preaching Brn. came in on Saturday.

Conference met at 10 o'clock, and adjourned till afternoon service, when it was called to order by Elder Moses McGuire, Vice President. Bro. J. C. Smith was chosen Secretary pro tem. Brn. Cate and Fry, from Mo., were invited to act with us in our deliberations. A motion was made by Bro. H. H. Klock, that Brn. J. C. Smith, M. McGuire, and A. Preston, be appointed a committee to arrange for preaching Brn. to exchange at different places in the conference, so that the word of life may be administered once a month at least in each place;—notice of which will be given in the Times and Crisis. Also a motion was made that the same committee appoint the next quarterly conference. Conference adjourned to meet again at the call of the committee.

This meeting was one of deep interest and good results. Bro. Cate spoke some seven times, and the word spoken will not return void. Brethren and sisters were greatly cheered by the coming of Brn. Cate and Fry to this meeting. We trust, if time continues, that this will not be the last visit we shall have from them. The Lord ever speed and keep them in the good work. Bro. Brian gave us a good, soul-cheering discourse on Sat. night. Lord's day, four were buried with Christ in baptism. Bro. Preston gave meat in due season in the afternoon. Brn. and sisters that came from a distance, and those that so liberally provided for all that came, were greatly strengthened to press on toward the goodly land, the promised rest. They were richly paid in waiting on the Lord. Many tracts and papers were sent forth from this meeting into different parts of the State, and Missouri. An aged Bro. Thayer and companion had saved up some over a hundred numbers of the Crisis, which they gave to us to scatter in new places. Other brethren lend their papers as they have opportunity. On Wednesday after the Fourth, Bro. Hunt commenced his debate with Mr. Lee. Victory turned on the side of truth, and not a passage was advanced to prove the immortality of the soul.

A great and effectual door of utterance is open before us in this wide western field, and more laborers that labor for Jesus' sake are greatly needed to proclaim the "good tidings." O that some may feel the woe, and come to work while the day lasts. The harvest is near. Rewards will soon be meted out, and eternal life gained or lost. O that all may be active and diligent now in the Master's vineyard, that they may gain a rich harvest when the reapers are sent forth to gather into store-houses. The Lord grant us a share in the homestead promised, is my prayer. Amen.

J. C. Smith, Sec. pro tem.

GOSPELS.

Wm. Sheldon.

Really there is but one true gospel, having numerous features, and all its features should be faithfully exhibited by the minister of Christ; but many are so dim of vision that they only see one feature at a time, and with them that is the gospel. Now it is not well to cut the gospel into numerous fragments, and make each fragment a distinct gospel; yet this very thing is done on a large scale, much to the detriment of the cause of Christ, even in our own midst.

To illustrate: one man sees that the gospel offers life to perishing men; and with him that is the gospel, and nothing else is. Another man discovers the gospel offers a kingdom to the saints on earth renewed, and with him nothing is gospel but that.

Still another man discovers that the gospel requires holiness of heart, and forthwith he makes that a distinct gospel, and everything else must be subordinated, and with an air of triumph the question is asked, What is the kingdom without holiness? Yes, indeed; but there is another side to this matter. What is the preparation without the kingdom? We prepare for something, and not for nothing—having "respect unto the recompense of the reward." A full gospel has an incentive, as well as teaching an alliance to Christ, thus furnishing a double comfort of heart—the comfort of acceptance, and the comfort of contemplation. "It doth not yet appear what we shall be." Sonship here leads us to contemplate future glory.

BITTER SWEET.

"A rare old word, half shadowed and half bright,
Half clad in gray, and half in rosy light;
And yet it is not hard to comprehend,
For gain comes oft through loss, and we have known
True joy and comfort out of suffering won,
So curiously doth grief and gladness blend.

Our dear Lord Christ doth temper every grief
With some deep joy, which brings our hearts relief;
The sunlight gilds the clouds that intervene,
And on the darkest cloud God's bow is seen."

A PRAYER-MEETING RECIPE.

We have had a great many, but we shall get none too many good ones. Go to the meeting with a heart warmed with love to Christ and to christian brethren. Carry a spirit of prayer with you from the closet, and then you will be sure to have it when you get there. Be ready and prompt to pray and speak. Backwardness and waiting throw a deathly chill over the meeting. Let not the meeting ordinarily exceed one hour. Let brevity be observed in the services. Long prayers are apt to abound in vain repetitions, and prolonged remarks are often tedious. The model prayer given by our Lord and Savior may be easily repeated in half a minute. The prayer of the publican comprises only six words, and is still very comprehensive. From three to five minutes is usually long enough for any brother to occupy at one time in remarks or prayer. In the closet, one may pray an hour or a whole night if he chooses, but in the social circle prayer should be short, specific and fervent. Keep the services free from all friction of unkind feeling and censorious remarks.

Let attendance upon these meetings be regular and constant as possible. Be sure to go unless unavoidably prevented. If your faith is weak, go; if your love is chilled, go; if peace and joy have failed to permeate your soul, go. Every professed christian should be sure to go, if possible, that the activeness of the soul may be stirred up to a holy zeal and drawn out in the service of the Master. If you have for a long time stayed away, and the christian armor has got rusty, go. Prayer makes it bright, burnishes the shield, the sword, the helmet, and the breast-plate of righteousness. Go if you expect only a few to be there; for, if you stay away, the number will be still less. Go, expecting and longing for the special refreshings of the Holy Spirit, and expecting there to meet Jesus, agreeably to his promise, that where two or three are gathered in his name, he will manifest himself in the midst of them. Be sure to go to the prayer-meeting even at the sacrifice of ease and profit in worldly things; and you will find in it a rich reward to your own soul, and see rich blessings bestowed upon your neighbors and upon the church of Christ.—Selected.

THE BEEBE PLAIN CAMPMEETING.

This campmeeting is pronounced by all parties to have been a success. The grove is one of the best for a campmeeting. We had the best of preaching, and a good spiritual tone characterized the whole meeting. Some delay in getting lumber on the ground in season forced the work of preparation somewhat into the meeting, but we managed the matter as well as we could. The old familiar faces of preaching Brn. and others, with whom we have been associated for years, were seen among the people; and voices that have grown familiar through the years of watching and waiting, were lifted once more to encourage the hope of the church, and warn the unchristian of coming judgment.

Although the meeting was a new one, it seemed much like transporting Springfield or Alton Bay to Canada. There were Brn. J. Couch, M. Grant, H. L. Hastings, C. H. Williams, N. Wheeler, T. E. Lang, D. M. Leavitt, G. H. Wallace, W. H. Mitchell, I. C. Wellcome, Allen Damon, A. A. Hoyt, O. D. Eastman, C. P. Dow, H. Canfield, and others, who preached, prayed, sung, exhorted and labored, with good results to saint and sinner; and many were made happy in Jesus who were only worldly happy before. We saw the tearful eye and heard the broken sob of the sin-penitent ones, who for the first time sought the Lord; and we feel like giving to God all the glory of all the good. We feel like expressing our thanks to the preaching brethren for their timely aid. Many of them came a long way to help us. Also to all for their sympathy and co-operation, and for the co-operation and good will of the community where the meeting was held. The Baptist minister of the place was often present, and gave up his meetings to attend ours. The civil authorities proffered all the courtesies in their power.

While time lasts, we expect there will be an annual campmeeting at Beebe Plain. Only one thing is necessary for it to go on without embarrassment, and that is funds. We shall have a deficiency for seating the ground, building stand, and boarding house, and to meet the expense of an act of incorporation, which the Association voted to apply for, of about three hundred dollars; and we are hoping that the brethren who are interested about the matter will save the committee the necessity of borrowing the money and paying interest on it, by forwarding to me money and pledges to be paid as soon as possible, to make up the deficiency. Brethren, let the money freely come, and let all who are indebted to the Association pay their bills as soon as possible. We hope that all this will be done, and that, if at last there is a deficiency, some good brother, or brethren, will loan us without interest the sum needed to meet our obligations, until it can be raised. Let all communications be directed to me at Richmond, P. Q., Canada, for the present.

A MOTHER'S LOVE.

W. Capron.

How precious is the memory of a mother's love! Words cannot express, and perhaps actions fail to give to the object of their affection the real intensity of this parental emotion. Fathers may cling to a child with unwavering constancy; brothers may devote the labor of years to the benefit of cherished, dear ones; sisters may lovingly entwine their arms around you, and by the kiss of affection and the kindly spoken words show forth their love; but the love of a mother far surpasses all this. Who can fathom it? Who shall dare say it has a limit? All who have ever been, or are now the object of this heaven-born feeling, will unite with us in saying the affection of a true mother can never cease. When others condemn, how eagerly she believes in the innocence of the loved one. When others seek to discover errors, how earnestly does she strive to conceal them, and tell with loving words of the virtue and goodness of her dear ones. Who first kindled the love for high and noble desires within your bosom? It was your mother. Who first taught the infant lips to lisp the words of prayer? It was your mother. Who told you with such loving, tender pathos, the story of the cross, and urged you to accept the offered sacrifice of a crucified Savior? It was your mother. How lightly we sometimes value this great, this holy love.

When sickness comes and lays us unwillingly on the couch of pain, who soothes the ruffled pillow? Who cools the burning brow? Who moistens the parched lips? It is the same old answer, mother. How sweet the sound of this loved name! Ask yon wretch who is dying from the effects of vice, what name is sweetest to his ears; question that lad, toiling for a position and a name in the world; obtain from that care-worn man the sweetest sound in the language which he speaks, and one word echoes to each response, mother. The pages of history are filled with facts showing the love of patriots for their country, husbands for their wives, and children for their home; but as the electric spark encircles the globe in all its magical and wonderful power, so does a mother's fond affection glance through every fibre of our being, and animates us to great and lofty purposes.

A man convicted of a crime was sentenced to be hung. A wife and mother were the relatives of the condemned. The wife wept with bitter anguish, asked for a pardon, strove earnestly for a reprieve, but was unsuccessful. The mother could not weep; she was beyond this. Tears (blessed relief to an overburdened mind) could not moisten her eyelids. With the despair of one who sees her one object of love hastening to a felon's doom, she interviewed the judge, who held her son's life in his hands. She pleaded, prayed, persuaded, implored the judge to save him. She endeavored to touch his heart by a personal application of the case. With the most earnest entreaty, groans, tears, prayers and bewailings, she endeavored to soften the heart of the judge; but he was inflexible. From a sense of duty and judgment he could not yield, though the despair of this loving mother was awful to witness. Finding all her efforts unavailing, she went to the prison, and through that last night of sorrow, when all others had gone, she never left his cell. The morning dawned. The hour arrived for the prisoner to walk forth to meet his doom, and she accompanied him. She attempted to ascend the steps of the scaffold, declaring none but herself should perform the last offices for her child; but the officers held her back, and would not permit her to do so. Then, filled with the pent-up fire of untold love and anguish, she shrieked, "You shall not kill my boy!" Alas! she could not prevent the execution of the sentence, and a few moments afterward the breathless body of her son hung from the gallows.

Tell me not, my friends, a mother's love can die. Study the unwritten past, and see the facts staring you in the face. Read the truthful narratives of the present day, and see what they reveal. Not always perhaps with the fiery devotion in the case mentioned, but always patiently bearing the faults of her loved ones in an unswerving manner, until the "silver cord be loosed or the golden bowl be broken."

Second to none but God's is a mother's guiding influence. Watching the path of her wayward one, she loves him. Knowing his feet have strayed, she loves him still. Shall all this love be in vain? Shall this be for naught? Let the cry respond from ten thousand hearts, No. Though the waves of sin may seem to have us in their power, fling to the four winds of heaven the answering sound, my mother's love shall save me, and win me to paths of virtue and religion.

Reader, have you a mother? Do you remember when she cheered and encouraged you in youth, and implanted good desires within your breast? Have you forsaken all good ways, and are now treading the paths of sin? If so, pause for a moment. Just yonder, amid the scenes where your youthful days were spent, is your mother. The thought of you still lingers in her memory. Daily, hourly, her prayers ascend for you. Down in the recesses of her heart is the deeply graven image of her wayward one. See! Look! Hark! Hear the murmured prayer—"Father, forgive him, and lead him back to me, and fill him with thy love." We hear the murmur through the distant haze, and it falls like sweet incense upon our ears, while rising until it reaches heaven's pearly gates, and suddenly swell to the blissful chorus of angels chanting praise to their heavenly King.

Oh, friends, let us endeavor, ere the clods of the valley fall over the insensible forms of our mothers, to return their holy, faithful love, so that when they pass over the river, no cloud of sorrow shall cover us with vain regrets, but instead, the joyful feeling of a mother's kind love fully, gladly, and freely returned.

Correspondence.

From Bro. John B. Hitchcock.

Editors Crisis:—Having read in the columns of your paper experiences and incidents pertaining to the lives of different ones, I thought I would give you a short sketch of my life. I am now bordering on eighty-two years of age. At a very early age I received impressions of my need of a Savior. When six years old I was deeply convicted, and again at ten, but remained in my sins until about fifteen; when one Sunday evening, at a prayer-meeting, I was deeply stirred by a certain man's prayer, and went home with a heavy burden. The next day, with a heavy heart, I was sent out to make rails. I had cut down a small tree, when my convictions were so powerful that I could endure them no longer, but dropped on my knees, and begged God for mercy. For a brief time my load of guilt seemed terrible; when all at once it was gone, my heart was filled with joy, and I jumped up shouting, Glory to God. I felt that to serve God now would be a complete joy, and I set about it in earnest. I improved all the means of grace, and enjoyed them greatly.

I soon connected myself with the M. E. Church, and remained with them about thirty years. Very different were those days with this people than now. We enjoyed seasons of fasting and prayer. The Spirit of God moved powerfully among us; pride and worldliness were condemned, and plain dressing in accordance with Scripture was enforced. O, how sad the change! Backslididg was little known then; but how common now. It has been my endeavor, ever since my conversion, to serve God with my whole heart.

At last the M. E. Church, where I was connected, seemed to lack the true devotion that I thought was needed, and I found the United Brethren more to my desire in this direction. I connected myself with them, remaining with them until about six months ago. I had been in this place for a time. There were no United Brethren here. I had been to the various churches in town, trying to feel at home, but could not. About this time the Advent Christians had fitted up a small chapel, and by chance I came in contact with one of their members, who seemed very much in earnest in serving God. He lent me papers, and talked with me, and by this means and further experience by connection with them, I am convinced that we may confidently, according to the light of the Holy Scriptures, as being fulfilled every day, soon look for our dear Savior in the clouds of heaven. How it gladdens my poor old heart. I enjoy myself much with this people. They seem so earnest in trying to keep unspotted from the world, ready to meet the Lord at any time. We enjoy some rich seasons in prayer and exhortations.

From Bro. J. S. Hinds.

Dear Brn. and Srs:—I think myself much to blame for not letting you know something of how we are getting along. I was reading the obituaries in the Crisis last evening, and when I came to the one of a little girl six years old, that died of croup, I felt much to blame for not advertising what I and wife believe to be the best medicine for the croup. It is Blood Root. If you buy it at the apothecary's, it will be pulverized; if not, you can grate it fine. If the person is very bad with croup, take one-fourth of a tea-spoonful of the pulverized root, put with about one table-spoonful of water, neither cold nor hot, but lukewarm. Don't use any alcohol, nor steep the blood root. Give a dose once in fifteen or twenty minutes, till it causes nausea, or vomiting. The first does may cause vomiting. If it does, don't give so much, nor so soon. If your child vomits two or three times, then stop, for your child will be well the next morning. Use blood root for lung fever in about the same way, only not as large doses, nor as often. We recommend it also for whooping cough.

Now for a few words to the editors and officers of the World's Crisis. Dear Brn., I can't think of words to express how much I love the Crisis and A. C. Times. It was eleven years last March since I first saw the Crisis, and when I saw what it was, I threw it down quickly; but I saw the heading of some piece, and thought I would see what they said about that. I read it, and called it good, and went on reading for an hour, and then borrowed one half dozen of them, and took them home; but my wife was displeased. So I would read the papers, and she took the Bible, for she claimed it did not read so in the Bible; but we found they agreed with the Bible. In three weeks we both came out from the erroneous doctrines we formerly believed, and have since boldly held to the views advocated in the World's Crisis and A. C. Times.

Now I want to tell you how thankful we are to our heavenly Father, and all who have helped us to have these papers. I can only say we are extremely thankful. I am now past seventy-four years of age, and not able to do much work. O how I enjoy the Crisis. It seems to grow better all the time; and the A. C. Times also.

Dear Brn. and Srs. in Christ, who are interested in mission work; knowing how good and pleasant it is to hear from our fellow-laborers, I write to do as I would be done by. We came to East Hiram, Me., by invitation of two or three isolated, discouraged seekers after truth, fourteen days ago. The Lord came with us, has been with us, and blessed the labors of this tent's company. He has sealed instruction to the hearts of several. Some backsliders have taken a bold stand for Jesus. Four have been baptized, others contemplate going forward. The precious message of a soon coming Savior and King of glory, is awakening the lost and perishing to search the Scriptures. Pray for us.

HOME AND HEALTH.

HONORING MOTHERS.

During a long and varied life I have had much to do with children, more especially with boys. As a rule, I could predict the future career of a boy by noting his conduct toward his mother. Boys who were dutiful and affectionate towards their mothers have usually turned out well. Unkind and disobedient lads I have usually found to become bad men. There seems to be a divine blessing resting upon loving and obedient children. It is, I am sorry to say, a very common thing for school lads to ridicule a boy who consults the wishes and obeys the counsels of his mother. It requires great moral courage to resist such ridicule, but those boys are wise and brave who do so.

By the time a boy gets beyond his mother's reach, he is made or marred. If she has had a fair chance to work on him, and has done her work well, time and eternity will show grand results. If she has been defrauded of her opportunity, or has failed to do her duty, alas for the child whose life is formed without the moulding influence of a mother's hand? Alas for the world into which such a child is sent forth to develop the evil that is in him, and to prove that "one sinner destroyeth much good."—Sel.

TRUTHFUL AUGUSTUS.

A little boy named Augustus was sent by his mother to get some milk. His brother wanted to go in his stead; and, when they had got into the street, he tried to force the pitcher from his hand. Augustus, who had been sent by his mother, held the pitcher fast, till at last it fell on the ground and was broken to pieces between them; and Augustus began to cry bitterly. A woman who was in the street, and saw how it happened, not fearing God, told him to say, when he went home, that the woman who sold the milk had broken the pitcher. Augustus, wiping his eyes, and looking steadily at the woman, said:

"That would be telling a lie! I will speak the truth, then my mother will not scold me; but, if she should, I would rather be scolded than tell a lie."

Cure for Felons.—The Country Gentleman says: "We had a case of felon in our family lately, and treated it successfully by steaming the whole hand with bitter herbs. It was badly swollen, exquisitely painful, and of a livid purple color. Being in the palm of the hand, it involved the whole hand and wrist in the swelling. A handful each of tanzy, hops, catnip and wormwood, was thrown in an old basin, a small quantity of tobacco and half a teacupful of soft soap added, and sufficient water to cover. When boiling hot, the hand was placed over the steam, and a small blanket was thrown over the basin to retain the steam which was applied until the mixture cooled. This was repeated day and night until the pain was entirely removed, which was in forty-eight hours. The relief from the paroxysms of pain is almost magical as soon as the steam is applied. The mixture was only once renewed. No anodyne was used to procure sleep, as the steaming instantly relieved the successive paroxysms of pain."

Tobacco.—Dr. Willard Parker says that those who are much addicted to the use of tobacco, or who work in the manufacture of snuff or cigars, never recover soon or healthy from injury or fever. The Emperor Napoleon had his attention called in 1862 to the effect of tobacco on the mind, by a report which showed that the cases of paralysis and insanity had increased quite regularly with the increase of the revenue from the tobacco tax. This led him to order an examination of the effect of tobacco on the students in schools and colleges. It was found that those who did not use tobacco were stronger, better scholars, and had a higher moral record than those who used it. The result was that an edict was issued forbidding its use in the national institutions.

Anatomy, physiology, phrenology and hygiene should be taught in all our schools, and children be made to understand and obey the laws which govern their bodies and brains as well as the moral laws, that one is just as binding as the other, and that if they attempt to infringe upon them they must suffer. Teach children these things, and train them up with strong bodies and strong minds, and they will grow to adult life understanding themselves and their capacities, and far better fitted to battle manfully in the great arena of life, than if they were crammed with all the classic learning of all the colleges.—Herald of Health.

Typhoid Fever.—Mr. George Johnson takes the ground that in the treatment of typhoid fever careful nursing and feeding are of primary importance, while, as a rule, no medicines of any kind are required, and when not required they are often worse than useless. Diarrhœa is a less frequent symptom than before this plan was adopted, and when it does occur it is far more tractable, while tympanitic distension of the abdomen is a rare event.—Ex.

It is the fault of our people to pay little attention to what they eat. Vital strength and longevity, they should remember, in a measure depend upon wholesome food. If we take the necessary exercise, the most frugal fare is tempting to the appetite; and we may safely say that the stomach craves unnatural food, strong spices, and tainted flesh, in proportion to the extent that it has become diseased through a lack of physical culture.

A LITTLE WHILE.

O. W. HOWARD.

A little while! take courage, brother pilgrims,
Soon this dark night of weeping will be gone;
'Tis always darkest just before the morning,—
We know the glory soon will on us dawn.

A little while to labor for the Master,
Let us be strong and at our troubles smile;
Trusting in Jesus, we can brave each danger,
And rest at home in just a little while.

A little while to weep and pray for sinners,
And point them to the Lamb once crucified;
O christian, as each golden moment passes,
Tell some poor sinner Jesus for them died

A little while to tell of Jesus' coming,
To give the gospel trump a certain sound;
O christian, let your loins with truth be girded,
May you at last of him in peace be found.

In a little while our sorrows will be ended,
Immortal life shall crown us in that day;
Sorrow with joy shall then no more be blended,
For God's own hand shall wipe our tears away.

This blessed hope is to my soul an anchor,
While journeying here amid this vale of tears;
A little while! the prospect seems to brighten—
Be still, my heart, and banish all thy fears.

SIGNS OF THE NEARING ADVENT OF CHRIST.

BY REV. DR. H. BONAR.

(Concluded.)

10. The increase of immorality. Like a flood it is swelling and widening in its course. It is without shame and without fear. Crimes, that our fathers knew not of, are common among the nations. Licentiousness riots fearfully, perpetrating deeds without a name, so that it is "a shame even to speak of those things that are done of them in secret." Drunkenness staggers along every street. Blasphemy pours itself forth till we shudder and close the ear against its horrid sounds. Murder has broken loose, and every day our newspapers are telling some horrible tale of bloodshed; man slaying his fellow-man, in fiendish hatred, or some more fiendish love of gain; none spared; the parent slaying his children, the child his parent, the husband the wife, the wife the husband; no sanctity of relationship is any safeguard from the poison, or the bullet, or the knife, or the more brutal hammer.

Oh, what a cry is going up to God from this land of ours, the cry of innocent blood; blood which a righteous God will yet avenge! But the picture of our spreading immorality is one not easily drawn, save by the record of facts, facts which one man scarcely ventures to whisper to another, too awful to be laid bare before the public eye. It calls for a prophet's eye to see it, a prophet's pen to record it, and a prophet's soul to weep over it "in secret places" before the Lord. Men are truly "lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God." All this is to come to pass in the last days, and to wax worse and worse till the Lord come. How vivid, then, and how numerous are the signs of the advent,—signs of whose nature, whose progress, and whose termination demonstrate irresistibly that there can be no millennium before his coming.

11. The prevalence of superficiality and formalism in religion. Form without power, a body without a soul, religion without vitality,—these are among the signs of the last days. The show of piety is widespread, but the thing itself occupies a narrow circle. There is much profession, but profession lies on the surface, and underneath all may be worldliness. Depth and solidity are wanting; the aspect of religion is unhealthy; the fresh hue of primitive times is departed; the intense vitality, which of right belongs to it, is dried up, so that, instead of its being the living source of motion to the world without, controlling, or counteracting, or impelling its currents, it lies inert and passive, at the mercy of every outward movement. It is a worldly, self-pleasing religion, adopted for fashion's sake, and used according to convenience.

Satan has now transformed himself into an angel of light, and under this fair disguise he is working with marvellous success. He is teaching us to build the tombs of our fathers, that we may rest content with the mere approbation of their principles without any imitation of their practice. He leads some astray into fatal error under the pretext of candor and the love of truth; others he saturates with the orthodoxy of the head, that they may become indifferent to the state of their heart before God. Some he persuades to deny the Bible; to others he lauds it, that he may make it a substitute for the God of the Bible. He allows us a wide range of religious feeling and sentiment, if he can only succeed in making them a substitute for God. He hinders not our being serious, earnest, solemn, if he can thereby feed the cravings of a restless, empty soul with something which may prevent us from seeking the bread of life. He permits us to denounce the world's vanity and hollow pleasures, to be weary of its unsatisfying round of folly, that he may delude us into the idea that this dissatisfaction with the world is a proof that we are religious, and thereby cause us to sit down contented when yet a great way off from our Father's house.

These outward things may be in themselves right and good, but what are they without the indwelling Spirit? What is truth without the true one? What is the perfection of church order without the vital power from above? The body is there, but the living spirit has fled.

And are not these the signs of the last days? Is it not when the virgins are slumbering that the midnight cry is to be heard, "Behold, the Bridegroom cometh;" and when the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth? Where, then, is there room for a millennium before the Advent?—Signs of Our Times.

THE TIMES IN WHICH WE LIVE.

W. J. BOSTWICK.

The events which are occurring in the world at the present time, may be looked upon by the student of prophecy with great and thrilling interest. They are to him the tokens of the dawning of a brighter day, and the realization of a grand hope—a hope which enables him to traverse life's burning sands and thorny pathways, in the face of the cold winds of adversity, and the sharp, cutting blasts of Satanic worldliness, with ever-increasing courage and strength; and while the earth rocks, and surges, and trembles in throes of coming dissolution, with the "sea and the waves thereof roaring, and men's hearts failing them with fear in looking for those things which are coming upon the earth," he lifts up his head and rejoices, for he knows that his Lord is just at the door, and with him the "glorious crown of rejoicing which fadeth not away."

Yes, we live in eventful times. The end of all things is at hand. God is about to arise and shake terribly the earth, and the desire of all nations is to come. The white winged messenger of peace has already taken his departure, and the gathering clouds of the coming tempest are appearing thickly upon the horizon, bearing upon their dark and massive fronts, written by the lightnings of God's indignation, the awful woe! woe! to the inhabitants of the earth. The muttering thunders of an insulted Jehovah can be heard in the distance amid the increasing darkness and gloom of a lost world.

Let us look out upon the world and what do we see? Discord. That principle which is so antagonistic to God's law of order. It seems as though all the antagonistic elements of the world have been brought into contact with each other. In the United States the whole country is agitated and stirred to its foundations by the great financial problem. A screw is loose somewhere, which the ablest financiers are unable to detect. The whole system is out of order, and on all sides we see the "towers of strength," the great manufacturing establishments, the cotton mills, the woolen mills, the fruit works, the various machine works, and other great industries, tottering into ruins with immense liabilities, and throwing thousands of men, women and children out of employment; the heretofore strong banking houses suspending, dragging down with them numerous other institutions. We see the soundest and most reliable business houses going into bankruptcy with nothing to pay their creditors. Capitalists are looking to the future with fear and trembling, as if in anticipation of a coming evil they cannot now see.

Again, when we look upon the moral side of the nation, we see the most abominable, the most stupendous and astounding corruption the world ever saw. The moral atmosphere is rank with the poisonous effluvia of a corrupt and rotten society. Those in whom have been placed the most important trusts, and the greatest confidence, have suddenly turned out to be the greatest thieves and rascals. Immense frauds have been unearthed in government circles, of which it is almost impossible to fathom the depths. The whole nation is stunned, confidence destroyed, and men begin to look upon each other with mistrust. Scandal has lifted its ugly head in numerous localities, and is pouring over society its fetid breath, staining and contaminating everything with which it comes in contact, and blighting the hopes and fair name of its thousands of victims.

The religious world is shocked daily by the fall of some of its most respected and exemplary ministers, who have suddenly been revealed to the world as wolves in sheep's clothing. . . . Many of the pulpits of the land are occupied by men whose god is "reason," whose religion is of the most liberal type, and who have no faith in God, and never reaches the heart; who stand up and pour into the ears of their willing listeners the oily words of damnation, the opiate of Satan, which soothes the soul into fanciful security from a coming judgment. . . .

Spiritualism, the most subtile of all the anti-christian doctrines, has assumed stupendous proportions all over the land, reaching out and clasping in its ghostly embrace multitudes of victims of all classes of society. This demoniacal influence is doing more to bow the world at the feet of the prince of darkness than anything that has ever before appeared. Its mediums throng every city of the globe, holding nightly revels with the so-called "spirits of the departed."

In Paris alone there is said to be over twenty-one hundred mediums, and in this country in the large cities, they almost, if not quite, outnumber the ministers of the gospel. This is doubtless what the apostle meant when he wrote, "Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils, speaking lies in hypocrisy; having their conscience seared with a hot iron, forbidding to marry."

To the world this is a fascinating doctrine. Satan has transformed himself into an angel of light, and is offering man a religion whose teachings are compatible with the desires of the unregenerated heart. He has laid his net well, and those who fall into it rarely ever escape from it. . . .

The increase of crime during the last ten years is truly wonderful. The most revolting crimes on record are of daily occurrence. Men, women, and even children, seem to be seized with an uncontrollable desire to commit fiendish acts. Outbursts of crime take place in all communities, sending thrills of horror through the land. Our penitentiaries and prisons are teeming with convicts. There is hardly enough room to hold the increasing throng.

All the efforts which have been made to alter this state of affairs have proved failures. Pennsylvania is terrorized by a band of ruffians known by the name of "Mollie Maguires," but which have lately been exposed as the "Ancient Order of Hibernians," and which is composed of men controlled by the Catholic church, men who have the mark of the beast upon them, and who are actuated by the most fiendish spirit—pillage, fire, and murder. This order is extensive, throughout the country, and will one day figure prominently in the coming conflict.

The red-handed Communists are massing their forces in all the large cities, evidently for a purpose which is not in conformity with law and order. This order is composed of men of all nationalities, and is controlled by the same spirit as that of the Communists of Paris. They are lawless men, incendiaries, who will some day wrap the cities of the land in flames.

On all sides we see springing up orders composed of working men of the different crafts. What means this grand gathering of working men? It is the massing of the great army for the coming conflict between capital and labor. The discontent of the working men and the numerous strikes which are occurring, is but the picket firing just before the battle.

Truly we live in troublous times, and the outlook for the future is anything but promising for the peaceable introduction of millennial glory which is to cover the earth with the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea. No! rather does it promise to usher in that blessed reign with the most stupendous and fearful judgments. The cup of man's wickedness is full to running over. Soon he will have to drink to the dregs that which he has prepared for himself. And oh! what a draught! bearing within itself the soul-destroying poison of everlasting destruction—an eternity of nothingness. Holding in suspense the bitterness of a godless, mis-spent life; the murders, the adulteries, extortions, cruelties, multiplied blasphemies, selfishness, pride, illegitimate pleasures, seductions, and multitudes of other ingredients, the active principles, the base of which is evil. . . .

But the events which are transpiring in Europe to-day, are to God's people the most important and thrilling that have ever taken place. Within the last ten years wonderful changes have taken place. The beast of Rome has lost his temporal power, and his kingdom is full of darkness. The kings that once supported him have now turned upon him and are now ready to burn him with fire. Great Babylon is shaken to her foundation, and is tottering on the verge of the great fall which is sure to come quickly. The nations of Europe have become standing armies, a mighty camping-ground. God is evidently stirring them up to prepare for the last great battle.

Even now we can hear the rumble of the coming tempest. The king of the South, Turkey—is on fire with religious enthusiasm, and is about to raise the standard of the Prophet. News out of the North and East is troubling him, and he is about to go forth with great fury to destroy and utterly make away many. Soon we shall see the tabernacle of his palaces planted between the seas, in the glorious holy mountain; yet he shall come to his end and none shall help him. Soon the great prince, Michael, shall stand up, and there shall be a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation even to this same time. Soon shall the winged words descend from heaven, borne upon the blast of the last trump, which will send a thrill of immortal delight through the soul of the saint, and quicken his mortal body with an everlasting vitality.

Cheer up, then, poor, weary, suffering pilgrim. Let us lift up our heads and rejoice. The last milestone on earth's highway is past; the race is almost run; the goal is almost reached. Soon death will be swallowed up in victory, and we shall enter into rest; that rest that has been prepared for the people of God; everlasting, unending, soul-satisfying, heavenly rest.—Sel.

MERCHANTS take care to insure their precious goods, before the ship clears the dock and leaves the river; else, what would they do? What case of mind and prospect of gain could they expect? Would it be time, when the news of a terrible sea-storm came, to run to the office, and then expect to make all safe and right? No, the merchant goes calmly there when the sun is shining and the sea is smooth. "Go, and do thou likewise," oh living but dying man, before the ship comes to the river—at once, to-day, prepare for the coming storm.

Show me Thy Way. 7

O show me now Thy way!
My pathway steps are slow and weak;
Thy help, O Lord, I fain would seek;
Be Thou my strong support and stay.—Cho.

O show me now Thy way!
Help me my duty to fulfill,
To know and do thy perfect will,
And never wander from the way.—Cho.

LOOKING.

E. MOSS.

The Bible attaches great importance to looking in the right direction, and blessed are the results which follow. Its value was realized by the Israelites when they looked at the brazen serpent, that Moses raised upon a pole. Isaiah 45: 22 tells where to look: "Look unto me and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth." If salvation is the object sought, then our look must be towards God. Paul says our light affliction worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. But when? "While we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen." The look here is blessed because directed to things eternal.

Again, Paul in his letter to the Hebrews, tells us that when properly stripped for the christian race, and while patiently running it, we must keep looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith, if we would win the prize. James 1: 25, says, "Whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer but a doer of the word, this man shall be blessed in his deed." Micah (7: 7) found it not only good to look unto the Lord, but to wait for him.

Looking to the Lord implies hope and waiting. We not only look to him for all the blessings needed in this life, but, as the object of the christian's hope, we look for his coming again to bring our reward with him, as there will be no distribution of awards until he comes again. We find that this hope was so inspiring to the apostles, as to cause them to be continually looking for his coming. Phil. 3: 20: "For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ." If we are looking for the return of the Master, as we should be, our conversation will be in heaven, or about heavenly things, as was Paul's. Again, hear Paul in Titus 2: 13: "Looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior, Jesus Christ." The benefit of looking for Christ, as well as to him, is described in Heb. 9: 28. Read also 2 Peter 3: 12, 13, 14, for the grand consummation of the christian looker.

There also comes a period in the history of the church, when, as Luke (21: 28) says, our look must be directed upward; which period I believe we are now living in, and because these things are coming to pass, our redemption draweth nigh. The patriarchs looked for a promised city and a rich inheritance—they died without seeing it, but the signs of the times lead us to believe they will soon come in possession of it.

Having now, as briefly as possible, directed the reader where to look, and what for, we feel that we ought in a few words tell you where not to look. As the christian's work and reward lies before him, it is his duty to look ahead, and not backwards. If you want an example of looking behind, remember Lot's wife. A woe was pronounced on Israel (Isa. 31: 1), because they looked upon and trusted in their horses and chariots, instead of looking to the Holy One of Israel. In Luke 9: 62, Jesus says, "No man having put his hand to the plow, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God." Every farmer knows that if he would draw a straight furrow, he must keep his eye steadily fixed upon his work. If he turns to look behind, his furrow will be crooked, and his work spoiled. So, neither can we do our work well for the Master, if our attention is diverted from it to other objects.

Dear unsaved one, however much you may loathe to look in the direction we have indicated, and in spite of your resistance, you will be compelled to look that way, and even now is being fulfilled in your hearts the declarations found in Luke 21: 26, and Heb. 10: 27. Much as the sinner may desire to avert the gaze, the word says, that "every eye shall see him, and they shall look on him whom they have pierced." Rom. 1: 7. Though now you refuse to do him homage, yet in that day, the day of his coming and wrath, "Every knee shall bow, and every tongue confess to God." Rom. 14: 11. To understand when this obeisance and confession takes place, read also the 10th and 12th verses of the same chapter. May the Lord help you, dear sinner, to look at once to Jesus, who alone can save.

CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION.

WM. SHEPHERD.

To-day, for the first time, the nation celebrates its centennial birth-day. With unusual spirit and enthusiasm, monstrous preparations have been made to make it one of the grandest days ever yet on record in the way of festivities, social gatherings, explosions of gunpowder, booming of cannon, exhibitions of fireworks, wonderful and wide displays of banners, military and civic processions, with their bands of music, national ensigns, plays and tableaux of a patriotic character. Orations will be delivered of the most eloquent and flattering style, by some of the most able orators, setting forth the glory of this country, its superiority over all other nations in the freedom of its institutions, the sovereignty of its people; that it is the poor man's government; and they will go on to say that we are emphatically a religious people, a christian nation; that we are morally and physically strong, comparing our forces and resources with other countries. The Declaration of Independence will be read, the people will applaud, and the Constitution will be declared the most admirable document ever put on paper,—the God-given bulwark and safeguard of the country (when there is no God in it); and speakers will dilate on the progress we have made through the past century in mechanics, agriculture, education, the arts and sciences, in the social, religious, and political economy, throwing all other nations in the shade in these respects; and then by parity of reasoning the speakers may say: Attaining to the grandeur and elevation we have as a nation, in so short a time, what shall we be in another hundred years hence? The people will be carried away, and give a shout, blinded to the true state of things. They go home better satisfied than ever that "this is a great country."

But what are the facts in the case. The nation, in this centennial day, is glorying in its shame. A nation that will pollute the coffers of its treasury with the enormous sum of fifty millions of dollars for the importation of intoxicating liquors for one year, and tobacco and cigars six hundred and ten millions; and for the support of rum-shops one billion five hundred thousand millions, with various other sums from no more honest sources and purposes. Money gotten in this way might with strict propriety be called "filthy lucre," and this is thrown into the treasury to be pilfered and extracted by corrupt officials.

It would seem to be useless to notice anything further that stands recorded on the dark catalogue of crimes which stands against this nation. These items alone would seem to be enough, not to speak of the exceeding pride, and the waste, and woeful extravagance, which marks especially the higher class of society, and the depression and oppression of the poor.

The fraud and corruption going on daily among the heads of the government is another proof of its declension. There is scarcely a paper we can take up, unless we see recorded some abominable thing by one of the officials. From the head of the government down to its lowest functionary, they all appear to be charged with censurable and unrighteous conduct. Indeed, the description as given at one time of the Jewish nation, would seem appropriate here. "Oh, sinful nation, a people laden with iniquity, a seed of evil doers, children that are corruptors; they have forsaken the Lord, they have provoked the Holy One of Israel unto anger, they are gone away backward. Why should ye be stricken any more? Ye will revolt more and more; the whole head is sick, and the whole heart faint. From the sole of the foot even unto the head there is no soundness in it; but wounds, and bruises, and putrifying sores. . . . Your country is [prospectively] desolate." Isa. 1: 4–7. "They are waxen fat, they shine; yea, they overpass the deeds of the wicked; they judge not the cause, the cause of the fatherless; yet they prosper, and the right of the needy do they not judge. Shall I not visit these things? saith the Lord; shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this? A wonderful [or astonishment and filthiness—margin] and horrible thing is committed in the land. The prophets prophesy falsely [not only in spiritual things, but in their centennial sermons, the preachers speak in glowing terms of this country, and the stability of the government, lauding it to the skies, and predict for it a splendid, prosperous and happy future], and the priests bear rule by their means [i. e., assuming to be the authorized exponents and messengers of the gospel, as the Jewish priests of old], and my people love to have it so; and what will ye do in the end thereof?" Jer. 5: 28–31. And if "covetousness . . . is idolatry," it is an idolatrous nation, as much so as Rome was in the days of her grandeur, under the Cæsars. By the way, this government was formed after the model of Pagan Rome; and where is Rome to-day, with all her pomp and glory? Are we not following in the same track?

Inasmuch as this nation claims to be the favored nation of God, and attribute their establishment as a distinct nation to have occurred under divine providence, still pushing their claim to the end that they are a Christian nation, he will take them on this claim, and deal with them as he did with Israel of old; and if we are to learn the future by the past, and if the same rule is to hold good to-day, O what awful judgments await this country! Now, even now, while they are making their gilded display at their great Vanity Fair in Philadelphia; while they are inviting the magnates of all nations to come and behold their glory, as Nebuchadnezzar did to see his works, and the "great Babylon" which he had built for himself (Dan. 4: 29–31); and while the people are heartily and intoxicatedly engaged in celebrating the centennial, in connection with this great show of the "works of men," can we not descry the handwriting upon the walls in legible characters—"MENE, MENE, TEKEL, UPHARSIN"? that God has about numbered the days of this nation; that they are about finished, having been "weighed in the balances and . . . found wanting"?

It is worthy of notice that the national ensign of this government is composed of a curious and very significant device—"stars and stripes"—which is all of a self-flattering character. The stripes are red and white. The first denotes royalty, or supremacy; the latter represents purity; while the stars signify exaltation and permanency. These emblematic devices are just expressive of what the nation thinks, believes, or rather more truly, what it dreams. No nation in existence to-day is so proud as this nation; and what does God say of a nation which boldly takes this position? Let us see from the words of his mouth: "For thou hast said in thine heart, I will ascend into heaven; I will exalt my throne above the stars of God . . . I will ascend above the heights of the clouds. . . . Yet thou shalt be brought down to hell, to the sides of the pit." Isa. 14: 13–15. Again—"The pride of thine heart hath deceived thee; thou that dwellest in the clefts of the rock, whose habitation is high, that saith in his heart, Who shall bring me down to the ground? [This is substantially the bold and daring challenge of "Young America."] Though thou exalt thyself as the eagle [mark, the eagle is another symbol of her nationality, which denotes elevation, lifted up]; and though thou set thy nest among the stars, thence will I bring thee down, saith the Lord." Oba. 1: 3, 4.

Again, regarding the proud and haughty Capernaum, as a fitting type of this nation: "And thou, Capernaum, which art exalted unto heaven, thou shalt be brought down to hell." Matt. 11: 23. I can see no escape from the threatened and impending ruin which hangs as a drawn sword over the nation. There can be no salvation from its political aspirants on either side, as corruption is on either hand. There is corruption in State, corruption in church, corruption in society. Turn where you will, it is in the aggregate one mass of demoralization and wickedness; hence all human efforts to save from ruin will fail. There is no "COMING MAN" sufficient to heal the breach, to stem the downward tide to destruction. There is no effectual help but in the arm of Him who is "mighty to save"; and as that will not be sought for and secured in the way that the Ninevites sought it—i. e., in the way of deep humiliation and repentance before God—we have no grounds to indulge in the faintest hope for this nation's salvation. Nothing short of the special divine interposition can stay, or remedy, the evil which is fast and wide spreading all over the land; and this interposition to save and perpetuate the nation is contingent upon the nation, as a man, coming to God and submitting upon his proud heart, until that heart is melted down in the dust, in the deepest humility, and not even deigning to look up to heaven, but crying bitterly, "GOD BE MERCIFUL TO ME A SINNER."

Seeing what is coming upon the land, let us as individuals seek a shelter from the approaching storm in the Rock of Ages. Let us secure a hiding place in Jesus until these calamities be overpast. Let us take heed to the solemn warning of the Savior, which certainly has its proper place here in these our times—"And take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and the cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares. For as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell upon the face of the whole earth. Watch ye, therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man."

Newark, N. J., July 4th, 1876.

HOLINESS PROMOTIVE OF CHRISTIAN UNION

The antagonistic spirit prevailing in the christian churches against each other is very much to be deplored. It is sad that the different branches of Christ's army should be arrayed against each other to the detriment of their own interests, and to the advantage and gratification of our common foe. Sad that we should quarrel over minor matters of faith, training and practice, while the great and noble work of leading souls to Christ, in which there is room enough for us all, is neglected. Is it not to be feared that we are more tenacious for our selfish views and notions than for the salvation of souls? The most devoted christians have long grieved over this fact and longed for more union among God's people.

To us there seem to be but two ways of disposing of this trouble; either become reckless religious, throw away all that interferes with Satan's cause, and thereby secure union on his side, if it may be called such; or else so exalt Christ and be filled with his nature and Spirit as to destroy the sins of prejudice, selfishness, narrow heartedness and self-made theology in us forever, and thereby lift us to a plane of charity that will enable us to see clearly the beam being taken out of our own eye, and call every one of God's children our brother; and though differing in church form and practice, yet coming "in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ," enabling us to work in harmony with every member of God's family.

It is often stated by those who are saying by their conduct, "I am holier than thou," that their conscience rebels against christian fellowship outside of their own ranks. Conscience is a creature of education, and is often only another name for "old Adam," "carnal mind," or bigotry; and if we are not having our conscience constantly in accord with the Bible and under the enlightening influence of the Holy Spirit, it may lead us far astray.

The cure for all this abounding evil which stands in the way of our happiness and success, is holiness permeating our whole being, filling our lives and our church services to overflowing; then it will bury denominational lines and make us one family working in peace and harmony.

At various times efforts have been made to construct a platform so as to unite all christian bodies, but up to this time every effort has proved a failure. We need never think of suiting every one's opinions and caprices. Christ said, "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me." O! that Christ, only Christ forever, were the subject of glory in every one.

As we enjoy, practice, and promote holiness, we cultivate christian union. Wherever true holiness has been lived it has had this happy tendency. A deluge of holiness in the land will sweep away stumbling blocks and lower if not destroy denominational lines and distinctions, so as to enable us to see across them, and shake hands and bid each other a hearty God-speed.—Highway of Holiness.

THIRSTING FOR GOD.

SILAS MENN.

"My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God."—PSA. 42: 2.

The hind did not crave for water more than David did for God, for that God who has life in himself, and can impart life—divine life, eternal life—to others. That soul has little of the true life that has not an intense craving after God. God's works and the blessings of Providence cannot satisfy the aspirations of the spiritual nature. God himself is necessary. The divine is essential, not only to the perfection, but the happiness of the human. Humanity without God is without a resting-place, without consolation, without hope.

If a man does not thirst after his Maker, does not sigh for communion with the great Spirit, he is not awake to his own condition, nor sensible of his own needs. Man's nature is such that earth has nothing to satisfy its desires, or meet its wants. It needs something higher than this world, something nobler, loftier, truer, more God-like. Let us then not degrade our nature by setting our affections upon, and seeking our happiness in, things that are perishing. Let us seek God, and maintain constant fellowship with him.

THE position of the christian in the world is that of a light-house keeper. He is in the midst of storms. But he is safe himself, and he knows that he is safe. He need have no fear about him. There is everything to make him sure of it. His proper mission therefore is, assured of his own safety on the Rock, to remember why he is placed there; to see that the light he is to give forth, shine brightly, steadily, and continuously; thus accomplishing the two-fold end of his mission,—grateful for light and safe himself, to be a friend and benefactor to all, like himself, upon the waters.—Ex.

THE EASTERN WAR.

As the war in Turkey is now drawing more general attention and exciting more public interest than any other subject, there will be a great interest to learn the history of the peoples and countries directly involved in it. Our readers would doubtless like to know something about Servia and Montenegro, which have declared war on Turkey.

Servia lies west of Roumania, and south of Hungary. It appears somewhat unshapely on the map, and is one hundred and eighty miles in length, and varies from one hundred to one hundred and sixty miles in width, containing about one hundred and twenty thousand square miles, with a population of one million three hundred and thirty-eight thousand, who are nearly all members of the Greek Church. They are of the Sclavonic race, and are very brave, but ignorant. They have by long and desolating wars and terrible sacrifices of blood been fortunate in escaping from Turkish tyranny, "and have their local government in their own hands," while they remain a portion of the Turkish Empire.

The story of Servian history as a nation, or that of the Serbs, "is one long tale of battle, murder, and sudden death; it is black with war and tumult, with rebellion, outrage, and retaliation." The country was first inhabited by Grecians and Gauls, and the Romans were fifty years in subduing them, when the province was called Morsia Superior.

The kingdom of Servia dates back to the ninth century, and its inhabitants early embraced the Christian faith, and became members of the Greek Church. It was the western limit of the Eastern Church, and the eastern limit of the Western Church, and therefore became the battle-field where the waves of Christian invasions of the east and west spent their fury. It also occupied the same relation to the Mohammedan invasions of the Western Church, and for centuries was the battle-field of the Crescent and the Cross.

As the Greek Empire waned, the Servian power increased, until the great army of Constantine Monomachus, in 1043, which invaded Servia, was entirely cut to pieces, when Servia became independent. The kingdom saw its brightest day during the reign of Stephen Dushan, who called himself Emperor of the Roumelians, and ruled nearly the whole of the Balkan Peninsula. After Stephen's death the Osmanlis got a footing at Galliopolis, and Roumelia fell into their hand in 1389, when the last king of Servia, Larcaris, was beheaded. A terrible struggle continued fifty years, when fifty thousand families of the Servians crossed the Danube into Hungary, who with the Hungarians fought the Turks until by a desperate battle they regained their country in 1444.

The Servians then learning that the Hungarians intended to put themselves under the control of the Pope of Rome, chose rather to put themselves under the Turks, to be defended by them. Thus they first became the passive vassals of the Porte. Of the two masters, Islam seemed preferable to the Porte. The Bosnians also, who were of the Pateyena heresy, and could not expect any mercy from Rome, voluntarily opened their fortresses to the Turks. The Turks all the time promised toleration to these peoples, but never fulfilled their promises, so that the Servians were compelled to give up their property and lives or become Mohammedans. Nearly all the leading families chose the latter, so that all the present Servians descended from the peasant class. Prince Milan, the present ruler, is the great grand-son of a peasant, and Kara Georgewitsch is a grand-son of a peasant.

In the early part of the eighteenth century Prince Eugenes triumphed over the Turks, which resulted in a large part of Servia being annexed to Austria; but this was soon followed by its being again restored to Turkey, at which the Servians revolted, and their army of twenty thousand peasants was fearfully cut up and destroyed in 1787.

After this, for more than sixty years, they suffered the most cruel and hopeless tyranny. "No Servian was allowed to carry arms, to enter a town on horseback, to pass a Turk without a salute; they had no rights and no powers; even their last privilege of electing their own bishops was taken from them, and they were compelled to perform any personal service demanded by the very lowest Turk." Shame on the professed Christian nations of Europe who have supported such an abominable government by their treasures and blood, when they were thus torturing people because they professed faith in Jesus. These peasants, when they could bear their sufferings no longer, would flee into the mountains, and bring out their women and children from their hiding places and sing prophetic songs of the downfall of the Turk, and thus kindle the flame of patriotism.

At last a deliverer appeared in the person of Kara George, or Black George. He was a guerilla chieftain; was rude, rough, and unscrupulous, but a great general. The Turks sent army after army to put him down, but he cut them to pieces, and triumphed in every point, until in 1812, he, by the support of Russia, gained the independence of his country.

When the support of Russia was withdrawn, the newly formed government fell to pieces, and George fled; and his lieutenant, Milosh Obrenovitsch, seeing it hopeless to prolong the struggle, again surrendered the Servians into the hands of the Turks, who once more made them promises of toleration and the enjoyment of their rights.

The Turk broke his word, as he had ever done, and the same class of cruelties followed—"the slaughter of infants, the outrages on women, the impaling of three hundred Christians at the citadel of Belgrade"; things which happened within the memory of readers of this article.

These outrages caused another spontaneous uprising of the people in revolt. Milosh led them. Fifteen years of varying strife ensued, when in 1830 the conditional independence of Servia was once more obtained, and Milosh was recognized by the Porte as the Prince of Servia. In 1862 occurred what was called "the meaningless and causeless" bombardment of Belgrade by the Turks. In 1868 Prince Michel was assassinated, and his nephew, Prince Milan, the present ruler, succeeded him, being then thirteen years of age.

This long series of bitter experiences of the Servians at the hands of the treacherous, cruel Turks, has produced in them an unconquerable hatred to the Moslems, and they now feel that death in battle would be preferable to another period of slavery and cold-blooded murder. They have been led into submission to the Turks every time by the deception of their promises to reform and treat them kindly, and have each time suffered the penalty of their folly, and they are now determined not to be again ensnared by their renewed promises.

Who can believe that there is one of the great Powers which, in view of all these facts, and the fact that the Turks are at the present time horribly butchering defenceless Christian men, women and children, is so depraved and possesses so little human sympathy as to counsel these Christians to submit to their tyrants and persecutors, no matter how many promises they may make; or much less help the Turks subdue them? We believe that there is not a European nation who, with the enlightenment their Christian subjects now have upon this subject of Turkish oppressions, will presume to "help" the Turk enslave and slaughter any more of the Christian people of Europe.

God has said that "he shall come to his end and none shall help him"; and we think that God's arm was never more signally manifested in this case to deprive the Sultan of all help in this his death struggle.

THE MONTENEGRINS.

As Montenegro, as well as Servia, is now at war with Turkey, a few facts connected with this country and people may be interesting to our readers. Montenegro is one of the smallest States in Europe possessing the war-making power. In 1864 its population was one hundred and ninety-six thousand. Its territory has a length of about sixty-four, and a breadth of about thirty-five English miles. It has a bleak and mountainous surface, without any fertile plains or level lands. The mountains rise precipitously, broken into vast peaks and yawning chasms, and wending among them are narrow pathways dotted with small villages.

These mountains are composed largely of black, calcareous rocks, which gave the name Montenegro to the country, which means "Black Rock."

Nature has made this country a vast fort, and its inhabitants can defend themselves like a garrison in a strong fortress. The Turks subdued Servia in 1457, Bosnia in 1463, and Herzegovina in 1467; but the Montenegrins defended themselves in the fastnesses of their mountains, and have successfully withstood the shocks of the Turkish arms until the present time. The London Times describes the Montenegrins thus: "They are of Servian race, but their unsettled, precarious, and turbulent highland life, in close proximity to hereditary enemies, has set its mark on their physiognomy. They are wild, pugnacious, and never unarmed. The shepherd's girdle is stuck full of knives and pistols, and the cultivator of the land has a rifle slung over his shoulder as he digs. The people are gathered into villages, each of which has its chief or head man, and whenever a consultation of the whole country is necessary, these chiefs meet on a meadow near Cettinie. . . . The people have always been at war with Turkey, accepting for that purpose any allies they could find. In 1712 they declared themselves the subjects of Peter the Great [of Russia], who accepted their oaths of allegiance. This protection was only nominal, but it continued to be acknowledged, and the Emperors have kept up the habit of sending presents of money, but especially religious books and episcopal vestments." On their march they carry their arms, a loaf of bread, a cheese, some garlic, brandy, an old garment, and two pairs of sandals made of rawhide. They do not seek shelter from rain or cold. In rain he wraps around his head a shawl of coarse cloth, and lies on the ground with his rifle under him. Three or four hours of rest is all they require. It is almost impossible to retain them in the reserve in time of battle; they precipitately rush into the fight. They are expert marksmen, and in battle each man attempts to hide himself behind some tree, stone, or any thing for protection, and if he cannot find this he lies flat upon the ground, firing rapidly, making terrible havoc in the closed ranks of an enemy. They are a nation of soldiers. Their bishops and priests lead the rank and file in the field of blood. In time of war the women and children take care of the flocks and fields, and every man takes his arms for the fight.

All the Christian people of the Turkish Empire understand well what it is to take up arms against the Turks, and know that it is to them victory or a terrible death.

Mark what we say: this war, in our opinion, will not be ended by any fair promises or concessions of the Turks; for the insurgents know that it would be a snare to them. The great Powers cannot take the part of the Turks, for a very large majority of their subjects are decidedly in favor of the Christians. Even the English people protest loudly against their government helping the Turk against the Christian. More than this, there is at the present time many volunteers flocking to the standard of Prince Milan, from Italy, Germany and Russia, and hundreds of thousands stand ready to go, rather than to see the crescent triumph over the cross.

Brethren in Christ, the evidences appear very strong to us that the present battles in the East are the premonitory skirmishing before the great battle of God Almighty. Let all find shelter, for the storm of Heaven's wrath is about to deluge the earth with unparalleled woes.

CONDITION OF TURKEY.

Turkey could not stand if she was not held up by the great powers of Europe. Why should they support her? One reason is, if she is moved out of Europe, some one else must take her possessions; some of which are of great importance, and if added to either of the leading governments of Europe, it would give the balance of power to the one that should receive the prize. Rather than have this take place, they have unitedly upheld Turkey, until a change must be made. It is now feared that Russia will take the coveted spoils, which will give her a great advantage over the East, and put England in an awkward position; crippling her very materially in relation to her eastern interests.

Another reason why Turkey has been upheld, is because she is "hopelessly mortgaged beyond all redemption," and if she is driven from Europe, the mortgagees would be liable to lose their Turkish loans. While Turkey held control over the Servians, Montenegrins, and other Christian subjects, she raised her interest money by heavy taxation on these subjects; hence it is for the interest of her creditors to have things remain as they were before the insurrection. It has been selfish policy that has upheld Turkey for a long time. There is but little prospect that she can be kept alive much longer. She appears to be in her death struggle. All efforts to revive her only show more clearly that all remedies are hopelessly powerless to raise her from her dying bed. She has been one of the strong enemies of Christ, and must quit her claims on Mt. Zion, and make room for the rightful heir to David's throne. We are in the neighborhood of great and glorious events. Let every saint be on the watch, lest Satan should in some way get the advantage. He is doing his best to worry and discourage the disciples of our divine Master. Keep all on the altar, looking unto Jesus for strength and support. Trust him fully, without doubts or fears, and victory is sure and everlasting.

TREMONT CAMPMEETING.

It was our privilege to spend two days at the Tremont campmeeting (Wednesday and Thursday, Aug. 2nd 3d). The ground is very pleasant. It was an excellent meeting. We think it was the very best we have ever enjoyed on that ground, so early in the week. There was a united seeking after purity of heart, and the result was blessed. A large number have laid their all at the feet of Jesus, and received in return the gift of the Holy Spirit, producing perfect love and peace, and a heart-felt readiness for the coming of Christ. Some were seeking the Lord, and one had been happily converted. We heard excellent and timely preaching. The blessing of heaven rested upon the congregations; and the saints feasted on the rich spiritual food presented. The devotional element increased daily. Many saw the importance of entire consecration to Christ, if they would be ready to meet him at his coming; and a goodly number bore witness to the power of the "cleansing stream," and "living water" provided by the Lamb of God.

THE SERIVANS.

As the war between Turkey and Servia is becoming more and more important, it is well to understand the relations of the war parties to each other. Servia came into history in the ninth century. Its greatest length north and south is about one hundred and eighty miles, and its breadth varies from one hundred to one hundred and sixty square miles. The rivers Danube and Save are its northern boundary; the river Drave separates it from Bosnia on the west; the Danube from Wallacia on the east; and on the south are Bulgaria, Roumelia, Albania, and Montenegro. Its Capital is Belgrade, at the junction of the Save with the Danube. The Servians belong to the Greek church, which is protected by the Emperor of Russia. The whole number of the Greek church is estimated at about sixty millions. It differs but little from the Roman Catholic, excepting that it denies the Pope and his infallibility.

The present war seems to be one between the Crescent and the Cross, to settle the question whether the Servians, Montenegrins, and the inhabitants of the other provinces in European Turkey, belonging to the Greek church, shall any longer pay tribute to the Mohammedans. This, of course, is a serious question, involving the interests of these two great systems of religion, one of which is supported by the Russians, the other by the Turks. It will be seen at once that Russia has a deep interest in this conflict, and cannot reasonably consent to let the Servians be crushed with Turkish cruelty much longer. It will be very chaffing to see Servia defeated, and again returned under the Mohammedan power.

The Servian population numbers about 1,338,000. The country is quite mountainous, and consequently a difficult place for the operations of an invading army. A guerrilla warfare might be carried on a long time, without any decisive results. This the Servians have done in other days.

The entire male population of European Turkey, not including the vassal States, is estimated at about five millions, about forty-three per cent. of which are Mohammedans, so that the Christians are a little more than one half. The Turks have more soldiers, and better drilled. The regular Turkish forces amount to about 80,000 infantry, 20,000 cavalry, 10,000 field artillery, 12,000 gendarmes, horse and foot, and 3,000 engineers, making in all 125,000. The reserves are said to be twice as numerous. It is thought the Servians and Montenegrins can scarcely raise 100,000 troops. They have no reserves, only as the Russians may come to their aid.

If the war is to be carried on in Servia, the Turks could not use their field artillery, and would be crippled ortherwise. There must be great sacrifice on the part of the Servians in order to support the war. This, of course, they will do, as they are struggling for life and liberty. Turkey wishes to end the war as soon as possible, but the Servians are determined, if possible, not to lay down the sword till they can wave a free banner. Up to the present time, both sides claim the victories. The fact that the Servian army is officered by Russians, and that Russia sympathizes with Servia, affords evidence that Russia will provide all needful aid, before she will allow Turkey to again prevail over the Christians. When Russia takes the war field, England cannot well keep out of the bloody strugggle, neither Germany nor Austria. The outlook is terrible. We wait the interest with deep interest.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.

The state of things in Europe is leading many to look with interest to the prophetic Scriptures, who have hitherto paid but little attention to these things. They begin to see that the signs of the times indicate that we are very near the end of the prophetic stream, and that we may soon expect the closing scene of the present dispensation. Secular papers are taking up the subject. We clip the following from the Wayne Co. (N. Y.) Alliance:

"The Eastern question is the all engrossing subject in the national councils of Europe. How shall we avert the storm and keep the balance of power? is the question asked by the English ministry. If the struggle comes on can we recover Alsace-Loraine and take revenge on Germany, is the question asked in France? Can we take the lion's share of Turkey and break the Mohammedan yoke from the necks of the Greek Christians? is asked in Russia. Germany asks can we humble our great rivals and make the German nation the leading nation on the globe? Turkey thirsts for revenge on the semi-Christian people of the East, while the Greek Christians are desirous for liberty. Turkey is weak, not being able to control her own subjects. She has lingered along down into our period of time through the jealousy of the great European powers. Russia would have annihilated Turkish rule in Europe long ago, had it not been for the jealousy of the treaty powers. England would compromise with Russia to-day and let her have Turkey, if she could have Egypt and not be interfered with about the Suez Canal. This seems to be the situation so far as the great military powers are concerned.

But above all these things there are the decrees of the one power which is over all God blessed for ever. The great God has decreed that the false prophet shall be destroyed. He rules not for the selfishness of kings, but for the good of his subjects. The prophetic periods are about to end, hence the sway of the system founded by Mohammed is nearly over. What may we look for when Turkish rule will be crushed to atoms? We may look for a universal struggle in the world for the emancipation of the minds and bodies of men. We may look for the destruction of the scarlet corruptor of the nations at the same time. We may look for the greatest commercial depression ever yet known to men. We may look for the downfall of kings and the destruction of cities. We may look for terrible battles, and for one great battle called the battle of Armageddon, which, it is thought by some, will be fought not far from Jerusalem, on the ancient field of Megiddo. We may look for displays of the power of Almighty God greater than have ever been known in modern times. We may look for the fulfillment of the truths of God's word.

Men should be prepared for a bloody time. The Bible represents a time of blood, and the destruction of men and horses, such as it is fearful to contemplate. The fowls of the air will gorge themselves on the flesh of the slain. Men are hoping for good times, but good times will come when God has made an example of sin and driven infidelity out of the earth, and caused men to know the King eternal. The settlement of the Eastern question will be a victory for God and the right. The struggle is at the door. Over one hundred thousand Christian men have taken up their weapons against the followers of the psudo prophet, and they must prevail. God will lead to victory."

What a sublime hour is the one in which we are living! almost to the time when the Son of man is to come in his glory to raise the dead, and set up the kingdom of heaven.

"O hail! happy day."

M. G.

PAPAL DESIGNS.—It is well known that the Catholics are laying large plans to get the control of this country. As far back as July, 1846, Frederic Kapp, a member of the German Legislature, is reported to have said before that body in Berlin, "At the present moment it depends only on the Catholic church of the United States to determine when it will begin its war on the government and on Protestantism."

This system will prevail till the Ancient of Days comes, as declared by the prophet Daniel. Dan. 7: 21: 22. There is no chance for a millennium before the coming of Christ.

M. G.

A FAST.—As we are dependent upon the Lord for all our blessings, success and prosperity, and as he has promised and given special aid when sought by fasting and prayer, and as his divine favor will be specially needed at our coming campmeetings, we would recommend that Friday, Aug. 11th, be observed as a day of fasting and ptayer, that the meetings this year may be the best we have ever enjoyed.

M. G.

PIUS IX.—On Saturday, June 17th, Pope Pius IX. completed the thirtieth year of his pontificate. These have been eventful years for him, for the church of which he is the head, and for Europe. He has seen, since he put on the triple crown, the revolution of 1848, and has himself been a fugitive; he has seen Italy become a united kingdom, and his own power as a temporal prince destroyed; he has seen Catholic Europe adopting liberal constitutions for the government of the nations, in spite of his protests, till at length Spain, usually obedient to his word, awkwardly accepts religious toleration; he has seen a Protestant empire rise in the heart of the continent, and his German bishops, whom he has encouraged in contumacy, driven into exile; he has seen Protestant churches springing up in all parts of the city of Rome. He has anathematized his enemies, has excommunicated refractory princes, has defied the modern world in his syllabus; but all in vain. The world moves on to a well-ordered freedom, and Pius IX., grand only in his unreasoning faith, is compelled to accept the inevitable. The modern world will not go his way, no matter how much he may command it. His reign, if the longest known in the history of the church, will be probably recorded as the most disastrous of all the reigns for the papacy.—Harper's Weekly.

JEWISH TESTIMONY.—Mr. S. F. Gratz, a converted Jew, delivered a public lecture in Philadelphia recently. His subject was "The War in the East," and he sought to prove that the decadence of Turkey and the complications vaguely known in this country as the "Eastern Question" were predicted in the Old Testament. Further than this, he argued that it was and is the intention of the Almighty to make Jerusalem the city of cities, to gather the Israelites together, and to bring about within its precints an era of peace and good will and practical regeneration for the whole world. He showed by copious scriptural quotations that many prophecies had been fulfilled; and, deducing from these facts their infallibility, proceeded to interpret some of those which still lie hidden in the future. For instance, he quoted the words: "And the sixth angel poured out his vial upon the great river Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the way of the kings of the East might be prepared" (Rev. 16: 12), to point significantly to the foundation of the British Empire in India, and held that Queen Victoria's recent assumption of the imperial title was only another step towards the working out of the prophecies contained in the Book of Revelation. His theory is that towards the last the world will be divided into ten kingdoms; then, these being shattered and dismembered, will come the kingdom of God, to endure forever. He predicted that all these events would shortly break upon the world.—Philadelphia Times.

GOD himself comes down as the God of love into the hearts of the faithful, and there sheds his love abroad through all the faculties. The understanding, the will, the affections, and all belonging to believers, are filled with the love that flows from him. The understanding loves to comprehend him, the affections to follow him, and the will to obey him.

Correspondence.

From Bro. G. W. Sederquest.

To the saints and faithful in Christ Jesus: Grace and peace be multiplied, through the knowledge of God the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ. As I am now in the province of Nova Scotia, visiting the brethren of like precious faith, and holding forth the word of life, I thought perhaps some of the saints would like to hear from me, and the prosperity of the cause in this country.

The annual conference of Nova Scotia met with the church at Bear River, June 15th, and continued over the following Sunday. Here we met a large delegation which came from the East, West, North and South, to enjoy the usual greetings, and to report the work of God among them. Truly, it was blessed to hear the saints tell of their hopes, their victories, and their determination to go through to the kingdom; their unity of faith, and co-operation in the work of spreading the glad tidings of eternal redemption at hand. Indeed, this was a gracious meeting, especially to myself. Here we met the aged, who have breasted the storms of opposition, and who have in a great measure outlived the rage of persecution. The snows of many winters have whitened their raven locks, but still they live as way-marks to glory, faithful to their heavenly mission, Behold the Bridegroom cometh.

Many familiar faces gave expression to the joy of their hearts; but we met also many strange faces, with whom we had never before rallied around the standard of our heavenly Redeemer. Truly, what hath God not done for this people? The spreading of this gracious message in this province is the result of faithful effort on the part of the few preaching brethren whose zeal for God and love for the perishing have led them forward with untiring and united action to raise the standard of truth, and proclaim the blessed news of the coming and kingdom of our blessed Master. All praise to his adorable name.

O how those who love the truth rejoice in it. They feel like a people whose claims are broken, and they are at liberty, made free by this truth. The veil of superstition has been lifted from their eyes; they can say, The darkness is past, and the true light now shineth. The coming of Jesus and the resurrection of the dead is their hope. The great and essential truths of the gospel, such as the doctrine of holiness to the Lord, entire consecration, purity of heart, etc., are not overlooked, but are set forth with practical effect.

I had thought a visit to my native province would somewhat refresh me, as I had labored hard in my home field; but here I find my mistake. I see no chance to rest. The field here is large, and few laborers, so the demand is great. Souls are precious, time is short, and I believe it is better to wear out than to rust out. Eternal life is sure to the faithful.

I expect to return to Lynn to my family in a few days, and again resume my labor in the gospel, as providence may direct. There are very many of the saints in New England that are dear to my heart; but the same Lord over all is rich in mercy, and is no respecter of persons, "but in every nation he that feareth God and worketh righteousness is accepted with him." A common salvation is provided for all, and the word of reconciliation committed to his servants. Let us be faithful to our mission, and enter into the joy of our Lord.

Victoria Beach, N. S., June 27th, 1876.

From Sr. L. B. Weaver.

Dear Ones in Jesus:—While I lie here upon my bed, suffering (extremely at the present time), I think of the dear ones who are making preparations to go to the campmeetings that are now so soon to commence. As I think of the many who will there meet to worship together, coming from all parts of the earth, I think how sweet and cheering it would be to see the dear ones, to talk face to face with them, to mingle with them in prayer and praise, and see their happy, smiling faces. As I think of these things, unable to sit up one moment, I weep (for I cannot keep the tears back); not that I feel the least rebellious feeling in my heart at my lot, but I think what privileges many enjoy, who seemingly appreciate them so little; for could any of you be placed in dear Sr. Chloe Lankton's place, or Sr. Mary Rankin's, or Sr. Emily Kelsey's, and my own also, I think you would realize more fully what blessings you are enjoying; but as the old proverb says, I think it is true: "Our blessings are not appreciated till taken from us."

Dear ones, while you meet to worship in the tented groves, in different places, do remember the weary, tired sufferers, who can never enjoy such a feast till Jesus comes; and breathe fervent petitions for us, that God will in a special manner bless us, while at home on beds of suffering. Remember us always in your prayers at home, or at meetings.

O I do wish the blessed Lord would move upon the hearts of the dear ones to come and see us, and give us a few words of cheer, a song of praise, and a prayer by our bedside. Could you know the great good it would do us, you would all of you put forth more of an effort to come and see us. Remember, while you can go out to meetings, and see those of like precious faith, we see only those who come into our presence; and it certainly seems to me that Jesus did mean something when he said, "I was sick, and ye visited me." You who have never been sick for weeks, months, and years, never can know how much good it does us to see dear ones in Jesus; to hear them talk, sing, and pray. I do hope, if it can be the will of God, that a goodly number of the dear ones will come up from campmeeting this year, and give me a few drops of consolation in my cup of severe affliction. My dear friends, Eld. G. A. Streeter, wife and daughter, are coming to see me, and are going from here to campmeeting; so that you can take their tickets (all who are desirous to come and see me), and come up on them; get one to go back on, and give to them, and it will cost you only $1.35 to come up and go back to campmeeting again. Think how much good it will do me to have you come up and see me, and speak a few words of cheer. I believe the Lord would more than make it up to you. I know I would if I had the means.

After the dear ones have been here, I live upon their visits for weeks; live it over and over in my mind. Now I do hope just as many as can will come. No matter if you have never seen me; I am one of Father's children, and brothers and sisters are never afraid of each other. I believe God will reward you for coming. I know it is hard times, as well as any of you, I think; but God has said he never would forsake the righteous; so let us rest in the Lord, believe his word, trust his promises, and soon we shall all meet in the general campmeeting. O, I long to be there. Pray for me, dear ones. Yours in hope of life soon.

No. Dana, Mass., Aug. 2nd, 1879.

From Bro. J. J. Smith.

Dear Brethren:—I rejoice in the good news that at our recent meeting of six days with the Shiloh church, about twenty persons professed a hope of salvation through Christ. A number more made a start for the kingdom. Brethren and sisters had a happy time of rejoicing from day to day. Many testified to the mercy and goodness of God. Methodists and Adventists prayed, sang, exhorted, and preached together, as one people. Sectarian prejudice fled before the melting strains of the story of Calvary, and sinners were subdued into penitential cries. There were two baptized, and four added to the church; others are waiting till the next meeting.

The ministers laboring in this meeting were Brn. Cargile and William W. Livingston. The latter was lately excluded from the Baptists for "heresy." He is out in the field as a voluntary missionary, doing a good work in winning sinners to Christ. Beside these, we had the assistance of Methodist ministers,—Thos. Payne, W. Thurman, J. A Dorr, Houtz, and Swaim. The last two named were very effective in their appeals. Bro. Swaim's earnest, persuasive, loving tenderness, will not soon be forgotten in that place. May they who have started for the kingdom grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus, is the prayer of your unworthy brother in christian labor.

Long Island, Ala., July 20th, 1876.

BRO. GEO. E. WAUGH writes from Rochester, N. Y., July 29th:—"The church here is in a very flourishing condition at present. The meetings are well attended, and a blessed spirit is manifest in them. Our prayer and conference meetings, held Tuesday and Friday evenings, are really blessed, and they seem to grow in interest every time we meet. We are praying for a revival, and we would ask your prayers in our behalf, that the Lord would pour out his Spirit upon us, and that we may see sinners coming to the Lord. Eld. Sergisson is with us, and is laboring hard to build up the church, and let the light shine out in this city. We have had some discouragements, and at one time the way looked very dark; but the Lord has made light out of the darkness, and we feel encouraged, and are determined to go on, the Lord assisting us, unto the end, holding up the banner of the cross."

Obituaries.

IN MEMORIAM.

MRS. ELIZABETH GARDNER. A mother in Israel has fallen asleep in Jesus. Elizabeth Hartshorn was born in 1794. In 1812 she married Benjamin Gardner, who, for more than forty years, was deacon of the Baptist church in Pownal, Vt., and who died a few years since. The two were united not alone by the ties of natural affection, but also by the enduring bonds of Christian love. Together they enlisted in the service of their Lord. They were baptized on the same day in May, 1822, by Elder John Leland. For more than fifty years they walked together in the service of the Lord's house, and together ministered as opportunity offered to the interests of Christ's cause in their community. Dea. Gardner's house was the house of the Lord's ministers. They were always welcome, and in all the region round about, it is safe to say, no house has extended so frequent and so cordial hospitality to them as his. Mrs. Gardner was always the light of the home. She always seemed to be at peace with herself, and she was a peacemaker among others. She was a mother indeed, a wise counsellor, slow to censure, quick to comfort; she was constant as a friend, and consistent in all her life as a christian. Her life was, in the main, sunny and happy, but sorrow was not always absent. She lost a lovely daughter in 1841, the wife of Rev. Thomas S. Rogers, now of Schuylersville, N. Y. In 1864 she was called to part with her only son, and in 1870 she lost her husband. Since that time feeble health had been her lot. But whether in health or in sickness, in joy or in sorrow, she was always strong in faith and bright in hope. During her later years she found great comfort, especially in the doctrine of the speedy advent of the Lord to reign in righteousness. She did what she could to inspire and foster like precious faith in others, and now that her life-work is ended, we confidently believe that great will be her reward in heaven. T. L. R.

BERRY. In Portsmouth, N. H., July 16th, 1876, Mrs. Sarah M., wife of S. C. Berry, aged sixty-eight.

After a lingering illness, during the last six months, of which her sufferings were intense, and almost ceaseless, her frail body rests from pain. No more will she welcome us to our childhood's home. No loving smile will greet us again there. Her chief anxiety was for the welfare of others; and her mind was ever active planning for the good of those she loved. She is torn from us; and "what is home, without a mother?" Our dear father remains in his loneliness and bitter sorrow, but not hopeless; "for if we believe that Jesus and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." It will be but "a little while," "when He shall come again," and then—

"Parted ones again shall meet,
From the bonds of sorrow free;
Crowned with mercy,—O how sweet
Will eternal friendship be!"

KIMBALL. In Cabot, Vt, June 23d, 1876, Sr. Jemima, wife of Bro. Isaac Kimball, aged seventy-eight years.

Sr. K. was indeed a mother in Israel. Her house was a pilgrim's home, and her table freely spread for all of God's children, of whatever name. For the last six years she has been partially deranged, and yet able to converse sensibly on the blessed hope. For the last few days of her life she was more sane than for the previous three years. She sweetly fell asleep without a struggle. Funeral sermon by the writer, from Rev. 14: 13.

A. GORDON.

SMITH. At Sugar Hill, N H, June 9th, after an illness of several months, Sr. Durilla Smith, wife of Bro David Smith, aged thirty-three years.

She met with a change of heart and was baptized when quite young, and has endeavored to maintain a christian life ever since. We trust she died in the Lord. May God bless the bereaved The funeral was attended by a large concourse of people, and Bro. Wheeler, the pastor of the church, preached a comforting discourse from 2 Cor 19 9. I. H. SHIPMAN.

FOREIGN NEWS.

THE EASTERN WAR.

LONDON, Aug 3. A dispatch to the Standard from Kujazevatz says that the Servians occupy strong intrenchments on the left branch of the Timok river, the capture of which would decide the fate of Kujazevatz. Ahmed Eyoab Pasha, with an army of 35 battalions and 24 pieces of artillery, reached this point on the 1st of August. He has had several severe engagements with the Servians After great losses the Turks encamped opposite Kujazevatz.

A Berlin correspondent of the Daily Telegraph says: "I hear from Belgrade that great apprehensions are entertained there that Austria will occupy Servia with a military force in the interest of European peace. My informant declares that such a course has already been determined upon. An arrangement is making to mobilize 60,000 men for this purpose. Confirmation of the report is wanting but M. Ristics, the Servian Premier, is urging an armistice in order to avoid this eventuality."

Aug. 3 A dispatch from Ragusa says that Mukhtar Pasha with the remainder of his army, variously estimated at six to nine battalions, arrived at Trebinje, having evacuated Bilek immediately after the battle of Urbisa.

Ottoman authorities here admit their defeat in that battle, and also the following losses: Two battalions of infantry and one of chasseurs were destroyed to the last man, and all the other battalions suffered. The Turks confess they lost from 1200 to 1300 men. Their real loss is probably from 5000 to 6000 men. The Montenegrins state the number of Turkish inferior officers killed as enormous. The pursuit was continued to the walls of Bilek. The correspondent adds: "My informant saw corpses lying thickly in the road before the citadel." Besides the artillery and trains the Montenegrins captured four hundred horses and an immense number of arms. All accounts show the Turks were greatly outnumbered.

The Standard's correspondent with the Northeastern Servian army report heavy fighting on the lower Timok. The Servians claim to have recaptured Isvor. The casualties are heavy; four hundred wounded are expected at Paratchui and there are seventy at Iagodina without a surgeon

Tchernajeff's army of 20,000 men is in an intrenched camp at Alexinatz and Deligrad, two hours march in the rear of their redoubts and earthworks, holding two brigades. Prince Milan and Minister Ristich are at Deligrad.

The Standard's Paris dispatch reports that nine thousand men and twelve Krupp cannon left Egypt for the Porte, and eleven thousand more men and twenty-four Krupp guns will soon be dispatched to complete the contingent which the Khedive is bound to furnish the Sultan.

PARIS, Aug. 3. The Constantinople correspondent of the Gaulois says three Sheiks of Mecca have placed 200,000 Arabian troops at the disposal of the Turkish Government, and some of these forces are already awaiting orders to start.

The Russian society of the Red Cross have sent a sanitary train with surgeons and nurses to the scene of war in Servia.

Seven hundred Catholics with a number of Turks have gone over to the Montenegrins.

BELGRADE, Aug. 3. After a fight at Pandivolo, three Turkish battalions and five hundred Circassians crossed the frontier into Servia. Gen. Howatovich, the Servian commander, feigned a retreat. The Turks followed him and occupied a village on the plain. On Tuesday the Servians attacked the Turks, taking them by surprise, and massacred the entire detachment.

New York, Aug. 4. A Vienna special, dated the 3d, says the foreign Ambassadors have at last interfered, and entered a protest against the present conduct of the campaign in Servia. Several Ambassadors have given warning to the Sublime Porte that unless the present system of enlisting volunteers as crusaders against Christians is stopped European military intervention is inevitable. As a consequence the Porte has ordered that no more volunteers be enlisted against the Servians.

A Bucharest dispatch says the Sultan is suffering from paralysis, and his abdication is expected shortly. His brother, Abdul Ahmed, desires that a regency be established.

Aug 5. The News' Berlin dispatch says that it seems certain that the project to solve the Eastern question by a conference of the Powers has been abandoned.

A dispatch from Athens to the Times' reports that the French and German Embassadors have intimated to the Porte that they will leave Constantinople to-morrow unless indemnity for the two Consuls murdered at Salonica is paid, and the sentences of the military and naval commanders are publicly read. The Porte hesitates to execute the sentence, fearing the resentment of the Mussulmans.

VIENNA, Aug. 5. The Political Correspondenz has a telegram from Constantinople which states that it becomes increasingly apparent that the illness of the Sultan is chronic. The danger of an immediate catastrophe has disappeared. The Sultan continues inaccessible to the members of the diplomatic body because his nerves are very much affected, and he must not be exposed to any excitement.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

New York Aug. 4. It was decided to-day that Hell Gate is to be exploded positively on the afternoon of Tuesday, Sep. 5th. The explosive used will consist of nitro-glycerine, dynamite and rendrock, 65,000 pounds in all. The first, which will be used in less quantity than any of the others, will serve to blast out the heaviest rocks at the bottom of the workings.

At a meeting of members of the Independent Labor party here last night, resolutions were adopted denouncing in strong terms the conduct of the heads of departments toward the workingmen on Monday last. It was also resolved to appoint a committee of one from each district to organize a grand mass meeting of all the working men of the city to wait on the heads of departments, and demand, and not as before beg for work, for the unemployed workingmen of the city.

Aug. 6. The labor question is assuming serious proportions in this city. It is estimated that there are at present 40,000 workmen of different trades idle in the city, without any prospect of speedy employment.

Members of the Beebe Plain Advent Campmeeting Association, please read this! The Campmeeting committee have just settled the accounts of the current expenses of the campmeeting, and have given their note to the bank for almost four hundred dollars for ninety days; the amount of the note being in U S. currency. About one hundred and seventy-five dollars of this is covered by accounts due the association from various sources; but the balance, about two hundred and twenty-five dollars, is wholly unprovided for, and must be made up by the association within ninety days; and one hundred additional must be raised as interest on the land by the first of January, 1877, beside the expense of the act of incorporation. We urge upon all the members and friends of the association the necessity of raising at least the $225 at once, by sending what they can to the Treasurer, Eld. C. L. Percival, Massawippi P. O., whether it be one hundred dollars or one hundred cents, or even less, as any sum, if it be the widow's mite, will be thankfully received. We want this money by Oct. 15th, 1876.

Brethren and friends, please respond to this heartily and promptly. The value of those converted and saved at that campmeeting is more than a compensation for all the expense of fitting up the grounds. Please do not wait, but if you have not the money by you, write to the Treasurer, and say what you will give as soon as possible, that he may be able to know how to provide in season for the deficiency.

L. C. MCKINSTRY, Sec. B. P. A. C. M. A.

THE WOLFBORO CAMPMEETING will commence Saturday, Aug. 12th, and hold over Sunday, Aug. 20th. Board will be furnished on the ground at 80 cents per day. Ample hotel and boarding-house accommodation in the immediate vicinity of the grounds, at reasonable charges.

A reduction of about one half fare has been made by the following railroads: Worcester, Nashua and Rochester; Boston and Maine; Eastern and branches; Portland and Rochester; and the Maine Central. Also Steamer Mt. Washington; Lady of the Lake; and Portland and Bangor steamboat Co. Tickets good from August 10th to Sept 5th inclusive.

The Boston and Maine R. R. will not issue campmeeting tickets to Wolfboro; but persons wishing to attend the meeting, can purchase at all stations on their road campmeeting tickets to Alton Bay. (Have their baggage checked to Wolfboro.) And when they arrive at Alton Bay, go on board steamer Mt. Washington, and purchase a campmeeting ticket to Wolfboro, which will be 70 cts. and return. Passengers by this route can attend both meetings, as the tickets are good from Aug. 10th to Sept. 5th, which covers the time of both meetings. Take the 8.45 or 12 o'clock train from Boston, as the 3.30 does not connect with boats.

JASPER STONE, for the Committee.

THE LAKE VIEW CAMPMEETING, Magog, P. Q., Canada, will be held, as per vote of conference, immediately after the Alton Bay meeting, to commence Sept. 2nd, and continue over two Sabbaths. The business of the conference will be attended to during the meeting, at such times as will least interfere with the regular services of the campmeeting; and we trust an effort will be made to wisely harmonize our campmeeting and other interests, so as best to subserve the interests of the cause of God among us. We expect able ministers to be present to preach the word, and trust the Lord of the harvest will send so many, and such ones, as will be for the best. Ministers will have free passage through the beautiful Lake Memphramagog from Newport, Vt., and return; all others half fare, as also on all the lines of the Passumpsic, and on other roads, of which more hereafter.

Let all come who can, especially those interested in the cause of our coming Savior. Come early. Provide yourselves with bedding, straw ticks, etc., and shelter will be provided. Board and horse keeping to be had at reasonable rates.

C. P. DOW, for the Committee.

Connecticut Campmeeting.

The Lord willing, the Connecticut Campmeeting will commence on the ground, near Plainville, Saturday, Sept. 2nd, and continue over Sunday, the 10th. Last year we had no boarding table and no free board, and the result was so satisfactory every way, that we shall adopt the same method this year. Provisions will be furnished at reasonable rates, as before. We are having calls for places to pitch tents in the first circle, and wish all who had tents in this circle last year, would write the Secretary immediately whether they intend to occupy their places this year. If they are not occupied by Tuesday noon, Sept 5th, the committee will feel at liberty to use the ground. Write before you forget it, and save us trouble. We have one or two tents, 14 x 14, to rent. Price $5 00. Those coming by R. R. will find conveyance from Plainville to the campground, as usual. Bring tents, bedding, and come early to the meeting. Pray that those who preach the word may be inspired with the Spirit which discerns this time, and take heed to the sure word of prophecy. Its light is greatly needed now The rest, to prophets made dim by distance, is at our door. Quite a burden and care rest upon those who arrange for the meeting, and unless we get a little foretaste of the earnest of coming glory, and the saints of God are quickened, and sinners moved to repent, the effort will be likely to result in a crop of thrifty and well-cultivated tares. To avoid this, if you have talked hard, hold a grudge, or wronged any one, right it before coming to campmeeting. If you have neglected prayer, reading the Bible, or family worship, resume at once; do not wait till the influence of a campmeeting compels you with shame to confess it. Serve God daily. The thunder shower turns parched gulleys and valleys into water courses; but the passing of the cloud leaves them dry as before. Live by faith; watch and pray always (Luke 21: 36). Behold the Judge stands at the door. (James 5: 9.

Special Notice to Conn. Brethren.

For the general comfort of those attending our campmeeting, some improvements are needed on the camp-ground. It has been decided to make a sufficient number of new seats with backs, to accommodate five hundred persons. The lumber will be delivered on the ground cut up, and each part fitted ready to put together. There is some other work necessary to be done on the ground, and if our brethren generally will come or send a man, and give us one day's work, it will greatly lighten the burden and reduce the expense. To this end, we invite you to come to the camp ground in good season, Wednesday, August 23d (or if stormy the next fair day) Joiners' tools are wanted to build the seats; and axes, hoes, rakes, and crowbars to do the other work. Let every man bring tools of some kind with him, and not be dependent on his neighbor. Brethren, please don't forget to respond to this invitation

For the Committee, O. D. WOODRUFF.

Mechanic Falls Campmeeting.

The Lord willing, there will be a Second Advent Campmeeting at Mechanic Falls, Me., to commence Saturday, Sept. 2nd, and continue over the two following Sundays. Bro. J. S. Moulton will have charge of the boarding tent, where good board and family groceries can be obtained at reasonable rates. Board can be had for horses at the camp-ground stable, or in pastures in the vicinity. The fare on the Grand Trunk road will be one half the usual rates from all stations between Island Pond and Portland, and also on the Portland and Ogdensburg, between Baldwin and Portland. All going over this road will find tickets at Baldwin. The Portland and Rochester roads will probably give the same rates of fare. The G. T. trains will stop at the G. T. and P. and R. transfer station, to take passengers who come to that depot over the P. and R road. The Maine Mission tent will be on the ground as usual, affording good shelter in stormy weather, and good lodging room at night for those not otherwise provided for; but all such should bring comfortable bed covering, if possible.

Tickets over the G. T. road good from Aug. 30th to Sept. 11th.

R. R. YORK, for the Committee.

THE R. I. CAMPMEETING, at Coventry Centre, R. I., on the H. P. and Fishkill R. R., will commence Wednesday, Sept. 6th, and close Friday, the 15th. To those in the business circles of life, that are anxiously looking for the return of former prosperity, with fearful forebodings of the future; and those that are watching coming events, waiting the promised return of the Savior, in like manner as he went away to give life and immortality to the faithful, this meeting will be one of unusual interest. Preachers will be expected to show from the Bible the first named class, the position they occupy, as plainly as did Noah's preaching the antediluvians, and the absolute necessity of getting ready to meet the things soon coming on the earth; and cause the second class to lift up their head, and rejoice that their redemption draweth nigh. The signs of the times are as unmistakable omens of the final doom of man, as the putting forth of the buds of the fig tree are of the approach of summer. Being obliged to reduce our expenses to meet liabilities, that we owe no man, free boarders, not active spiritual laborers, will be expected to labor in any position assigned them, to save expense of former meetings. By this arrangement, we do not exclude our aged sisters, who with anxiety have cared for and made happy the home of him whom the woe has been upon if he preach not the word. Come, every one of you, and know that the Lord provides for the Marthas as well as the Marys Those willing to volunteer their services to reduce the expense of the meeting, will please write J. P. Hazard, Greene, R I., that there be no confusion at the commencement of the meeting, or unnecessary trouble in hiring help. Board 80 cts. per day. Horse keeping 75 cts. per day, ample room being provided on both sides of the road for horses and carriages. No teams or carriages will be allowed to stand within the limits of the highway. Railroad fare reduced as usual. By order of the committee,

J. P. HAZARD.

CAMPMEETING.—Lovers of the appearing of our blessed Master, please come to the banks of that beautiful lake in Mosherville, Hillsdale Co., Mich., and let us have a joyful feast. Come in the spirit of the Master, who went about doing good, and let us see if we cannot at this annual camp and conference meeting of Michigan, see great good done for the Lord in the salvation of perishing humanity. Come if you can on Friday, Aug. 18th, so that you may be able to render assistance in erecting the large tent on the 19th. The meeting will hold over two Sundays. Let every member make it a positive point to be in attendance. Bro. F. H. Berrick and others are expected to be present. By order of Board, CHESTER D. BERRY, Sec. pro tem.

HYMNS OF THE ADVENT.

For a few weeks I propose to give, through the columns of the Crisis, some choice hymns relating to the second advent of Jesus, selected from various sources, and arranged by revisions and additions, when necessary, which may be of use to the waiting church. Some of them are published in part in our "Jubilee Harp," and others do not appear in any of our publications. Some may be found in part also in the "Baptist Praise Book," an excellent work just published.

L. C. McKinstry.

WHEN CHRIST CAME DOWN.—No. 1.

When Christ came down on earth of old,
He took our nature poor and low;
He wore no form of angel mould,
But shared our weakness and our wo.

He bore the mocker's cruel scorn;
Was spit upon and buffeted;
And braids of cruel, piercing thorn,
The wicked wove to crown his head.

Upon the cross he, suffering, hung;
Each nerve a road for pain's hot feet;
"Eloi" from his lips was wrung;—
And Satan's triumph seemed complete.

But when he cometh back once more—
As come he will in majesty—
The wicked throngs shall flee before
The glory "every eye shall see."

Then he shall set his "great white throne,"
And gather all the sons of men;
Each standing for himself alone,
To meet his awful, piercing ken.

No crown of thorns shall deck that brow,—
The meed of mocking, wicked men,
Who in contemptuous mockery bow,—
But his own royal diadem.

No purple robe shall then adorn
That sacred form, nor sceptre-reed—
Brittle—his kingly claim shall scorn,
Nor his robes be the gambler's greed.

Nor shall men dare to spit upon
The holy, vengeful Son of God;
But every gaze of his shall warn
Men to beware of his "iron rod."

But, robed in regal majesty,
That "iron rod" his ruling power,
He shall the King of Salem be,
And all his enemies shall cower.

His realm, the gift of God shall be;
His throne, his father David's right
Is his; who love his face to see,
Shall reign with him in glory bright

Oh, Son of God, with glory crowned;
Ordained to judge the quick and dead;
And Son of man, so pitying found,
To all the tears thy people shed;—

Be with us in that awful hour;
And by thy crown, and by thy grave,
And all thy love, and all thy power,
In that great day of judgment save.

CHRISTIANITY IN JAPAN.

H. TAMRA.

Hoping that this article will call the attention of all those readers who have been and are interested in the cause of Christianity, and in introducing it into the Japanese empire; I venture to offer to the public a few remarks on the necessity and useful means of effecting this noble and important undertaking. In the view I take in the discussion of this subject, I may be mistaken, and be accused of being impudent or officious, but even in this case, I shall reap the benefit of discovering my wrong view.

It is well known that the Japanese, as a nation, are very active and intelligent, and eager to improve themselves as much as possible, and to stand on equal footing with the European nations; but, if I mistake not, there are many, very many who have an entirely wrong idea of what civilization is, and how it is secured. They seem to think that civilization consists chiefly in the introduction and construction of gigantic machinery, or the building of railroads and telegraphs. They appreciate the merits of education, but their education begins and ends with a mere book knowledge. The plan of life of almost all Japanese, with whom I am personally acquainted, and of almost all those whom I know by reputation, are turned in this direction. Of those who came to the United States as students, some intend to study agriculture, others the ship-building, others jurisprudence, others chemistry or geology; others manufacturing, or the business of a similar nature; but few have I seen, as yet, who turned their attention to the study of moral science, and desire to build a stronghold of morality in the islands of Japan.

Of all Japanese friends, I know one, and only one, who has been educated as a christian minister, and whose name is very frequently mentioned in "Missionary Herald." The others simply grapple with their specialities of the worldly concern, without previously receiving a broad, general culture of the mind. It is for this reason, that there are so few Japanese graduates in American colleges. By saying this, I do not mean that the physical civilization is useless, and I believe no sensible person will ever think so. Railroads are good, telegraphs useful, sciences excellent, and we must have all these things, but without the advancement of sound morality, they would be no more valuable than a basket of chips. "Seek first the kingdom of God" is a golden rule, and whoever first observes and follows this divine injunction, will never fail to acquire afterwards all other things which are of secondary importance.

The civilization which every nation needs to secure, must always be secured in the same way. If we cast our eyes upon the civilized nations of the present age, we shall find that they are all christians. But we must not think that they adopted Christianity, after having become civilized; but that those nations which believed in Christianity have thereby been civilized. They first adopted religion, and then advanced rapidly in civilization. The civilization of the ancient Greeks and Romans was merely accidental; perhaps being caused by the favorable situation for commerce, which they occupied. That it was accidental, is clearly seen from the short duration of its existence.

The true civilization which is based on Christianity, so far as it remains pure, unbiased by prejudices, and unruffled by selfishness, will continue to exist and progress as long as time itself. Nevertheless, that a nation at the dawn of its civilization is tempted to seek after physical and superficial improvement is not strange at all; but it is a natural tendency. As the child seems to admire the beauty of the color of a thing more deeply than that of its shape, however tasteful the latter may be; so the material part of human progress which can be perceived directly by the senses is apt first to invite the attention of a rising nation. But now it is the time, for a country like Japan, to hear the still small voice whispering to her that there is a higher degree of civiliza- than merely building of railroads. I hope the time will soon come when all the people of Japan will rejoice in hearing the glad tidings of salvation, and fill the country with the shouts of unceasing jubilee.

It may puzzle some persons to explain why the Japanese, who are very quick to perceive the excellence of some foreign customs, and do not hesitate to adopt them if they are found to be beneficial, or sometimes even if they appear useless, are so slow in embracing Christianity, in spite of the assiduous and untiring efforts of the missionaries and other christians to convert them. Their difficulty to solve this problem will be increased, if they find that most of the Japanese admit that Christianity is good, yet still they dislike to embrace it. Deep reflection and thorough investigation, however, will lead them to come to the following conclusion: the reason why Christianity is not welcomed is not because it is mysterious, for the Japanese are fond of strange things; for example, the flashing of messages by means of the telegraphic lines is as mysterious as anything, yet it is now extensively practiced; not because it seems unnecessary or dangerous, for they always admit its usefulness; but because their hearts have been hardened by their old prejudices and haughty feelings. They suppose that they would not be considered smart unless they find some faults with the Bible and hesitate to believe it.

The whole nation, in regard to their religious views, may be divided into two classes. The one, which is more or less educated, and has a knowledge of the doctrine of Confucius, is composed mostly of atheists, whose disbelief of the existence of any heathen god has led them to deny also the existence of the true God. The other, composed largely of the ignorant, is exceedingly superstitious, and firm supporters of polytheism. The believers of Pagan gods are so strongly prejudiced in favor of their own religion, that they think all other religions are untrue. Thus both of the two classes, or all people, stand in opposition to Christianity and to each other, and their biased hearts are impervious, so to speak, to the gospel. Those alone have been converted, who happened to be the exceptions from these great masses of the prejudiced persons; and indeed they are very few. The missionaries have been quite efficient in their work, but thus far they have accomplished comparatively little, for the reason above mentioned. Now the best way, or one of the best ways to carry out well the work of evangelizing the people, at least for the present, is, in my opinion, the use of an indirect means. Among others that which is most subservient to this end is, I think, the establishment of a in Japan, wholly independent of the government's control, and managed exclusively by the Christian Trustees. No one would fail to discern the benefit of establishing such a school. As has been said, since the prevailing prejudices are withholding the people from associating with christians, and attending their religious exercises, there is no other means more useful and more effectual for the purpose of gathering the people where Christianity can be taught, than the building of a christian institution. Moreover, those who are thereby brought in contact with christians, are mostly young people, whose hearts are not likely so hardened and obstinate as those of old folks. Here we see another advantage, and have a chance to hope for the melioration of the rising generation. All that is necessary to be taught or that can be taught, for the present, is the principle of Christianity and not the form of the profession or religious ceremonies. Good examples and precepts offered in connection with school-lessons, by influential christian teachers, can have a greater influence upon the minds of the pupils than any worshiping assembly convened solely and expressly for the purpose of converting them.

Most of the Japanese look with a scornful eye upon the peculiar form (so it seems to them) of praying to God, and of performing religious observances, but if they be first taught the principle of religion, then they will gladly accept any form of worship. Again, many a man attempts to convert unbelievers by first narrating a list of the miracles wrought by Christ. If there be any such person in Japan, his attempt would be as unavailing as that to seek for a living fish on a tree, and his failure be as inevitable as the ruin of a paper boat launched on water. On the other hand, what difficulty is there in believing the miracles, if the truth of the Bible be first shown independent of them, as it can be?

We know that many Japanese are very anxious to learn the English language, and to get as good teachers, and to attend as good schools as they can find. This activity of their minds can be taken advantage of in assembling them together and teaching them the gospel of Christ, if an excellent institution be established, and made accessible to them all. Thus it is evident that this plan, if executed successfully, will serve as the people's pathway to the christian life, and as the instrumentality to make them true and intelligent christians. Some may object by saying that this is a too roundabout way to introduce religion. To this objection I reply simply by quoting an old familiar maxim, "The farthest way round is the nearest way home." Facts and experience convince us more conclusively than any verbal reasoning on this point. To preach the gospel to the Japanese exactly in the same way as to the Americans will produce an effect little greater than that of sprinkling a cup of water to extinguish a burning house. Another objection may be raised, that the Japanese government has already built many schools all over the empire, and therefore that the addition of another will not do much good. If what is proposed to be built were a small, primary school, perhaps it would be almost useless; but if a large institution, like Tokis University, which is the largest school in Japan, be organized by benevolent christians in a populous city, other than Tokis, the work which can be done for the advancement of religion and humanity will be too great to be measured. Since all government schools (Tokis University included) are designed mainly to give a scientific instruction, and since the culture of mental and moral powers is comparatively neglected, I have thought for some time that the need of an institution to raise the moral standard ought to be felt by some Japanese instructors. But to my joy and surprise, I have lately heard that some American christians are contdmplating to do something of the kind to gratify the want of the Japanese. Blessed be God, who has sent to this world such benevolent and philanthropic individuals to save thirty-five million souls, that are struggling in the darkness of sins. May they be successful in their sacred enterprise is the earnest prayer of a humble Japanese.

EXPERIENCE.

GEO. A. STREETER.

Experience brings to us what cannot be obtained from any other source. In short, it gives us knowledge of facts that we can gain in no other way. How much talk has been made about that of which persons knew nothing. I ask, how can any one give advice to another, when they are ignorant of the very things they are trying to teach? How many times I have heard some one say, in remarking of others, "I would never do as such an one does." I have asked them, Were you ever under such circumstances as they are placed in? "No, I never was." Then how do you know what you would do? I often hear it said that sinners are good judges of Christianity. Now I want to know how a man can judge of Christianity, when he never was a Christian himself? Can any reader of the Crisis tell?

What business have I to find fault with our worthy Editors, when I know nothing of the duties of an Editor? And this class are the ones that find fault. I have heard preachers give parents quite a lecture on the way of bringing up their children, when they never had any to bring up! When a man has reared one child or more to the age of sixteen and twenty years, and with all the observation he has got, he then may know how to give advice to others who have not had this experience, and not till then. "Prove all things," says the apostle; then we may speak out freely. Know what you are talking about, then talk; otherwise, one had better keep still.

A great deal of trouble has been made by people talking concerning that they knew nothing about. This will stand good in everything. A remark is made about a Bro. or a Sr., that they are backsliding; when, after all, it turns out that they were living as well, under the extremely trying circumstances in which they were placed, as those who were talking. May God help us all to be sure that we understand what we are talking about, by having had an experience in it. I am aware one can learn a good deal about some things by observation, but not in everything. One ought to look upon everything with as much charity as possible.

I have thought much on these things. Much more might be said; but I leave it for the reader to carry out his conclusions. God bless both reader and writer, is the prayer of your Bro. in Christ.

MIRTHFUL PREACHING.

WM. SHELDON.

When ministers make special efforts to display witticism to arouse mirthfulness on the part of their hearers, they demean themselves, and make their message diminutive. Why should the ambassadors of Christ try to imitate mirth-making lecturers, to gratify a carnal relish for "fun," by awakening laughter, instead of dealing with serious subjects seriously? Why not seek more to please God, by sobriety, than to please men by producing levity contrary to the instructions given in the Bible? It is true that men love "fun" in any and every form; but is that any excuse why we should gratify that propensity under a cloak of religion? Men love various sins; shall we therefore seek to gratify that relish by throwing around it a sanctimonious garb?

To reach the hearts of men aright, it is necessary to calmly reason out the truths of God, or candidly exhort men to submit to the will of God, instead of catering to a feeling of jesting to please people. Men love jesting, it is true, but shall we therefore mix it in with the gospel? Men may be better pleased with us if we will only forget that we are ministers of Christ, and become ministers of mirth, mixing a little gospel with it, just to take the curse off; but will it please the Lord? In what discourse did Christ stir up the mirthfulness of his hearers? When did the apostles vie with each other in dealing out laughable witticisms, to make the people feel that it was "almost as good as a theatre?" Shall we not have a reform in this matter?

AN EXPERIENCE OF MERCY.

SR. J. C. THORP.

Dear Friends in Christ:—I wish to speak a word for the Master. I will say of the Lord, he is my refuge and my fortress; in him will I trust. O how sweet, how precious, is the name of Jesus. To say, I believe that we have a prayer-hearing God, does not express what I feel; for I KNOW from long experience that his word is truth. I KNOW that my Redeemer liveth. I KNOW that his promises are sure. I KNOW in whom I trust; and if I should fail to speak of his care for me, I should feel that my silence would be as a consuming fire in my veins; for I desire that all should know how God has been with me in the day of trouble.

It is now about twenty-one months since I was suddenly and completely prostrated by a complication of diseases, one of which was an abscess of the liver, with others not less dangerous. The best medical advice was sought; and I believe all that human means could do was done for my relief; but from the first my attending physician gave me very little encouragement, as he candidly told me that my case was very nearly hopeless. What I suffered God only knows, but I felt that he who called me to pass through the furnace of fire was able to keep me from the power of death; and in all the intensity of my suffering I felt that he was near, and that I could rest on that sweet promise—"Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, believing, I will do it." From the first of my sickness, my family offered daily prayer for me, in the name of Him whose word is sure; and when I could not speak, I could feel at all times that he regarded the unspoken prayer of the heart, offered in faith; and I will say to his praise, that I never for one moment felt forsaken of him. Bless his holy name.

In the month of March last the doctor left me, with the assurance that nothing more could be done for me, as my lungs had become much affected, and that human power could avail me nothing. At this time the prayers of many christians were offered for me, by faith in Him in whom is all power. It was soon after the doctor left me that, as I lay one night awake with God, the awful thought came into my mind, Was God able or willing to save me from death? if so, why did he leave me to suffer so long? Then came the question, Why trust him longer? The thought gave me a shock, and I felt to say with all the power of my being, "He is faithful that promised"; "though he slay me, yet will I trust in him"; and sank to sleep with an earnest prayer that God would remember me, and that I might not lose my trust in him. When I awoke, some very precious words were in my mind, and I felt a sweet confidence that, though death stood waiting to snatch me, He who conquered death was with me, and in him was my trust; and though he might not grant my prayer for life, yet I could say, He doeth all things well. His will be done.

From that very hour I have gained in health. I will bless the Lord at all times; his praise shall continually be in my mouth. I am now (July 10th) so far recovered as to be able to see to my work, and to do a little work myself; and I am gaining every day, and I fully believe that I am altogether healed.

SAVIOR, COME.

WM. SHEPHERD.

A new version and reversion of Moody and Sankey's hymn, "Come to the Savior." The first is, "Come to the Savior"; this is "Savior, come." The first is essentially important—coming to Christ—that we may be endowed with his grace and Spirit, which puts the cry in the heart, "Come (quickly) Lord Jesus." A soul really "in Christ" must desire his return, and long to "see him as he is."

Come, thou my Savior, come, come away;
Bring in the joyful, happy, happy day;
Let not the glad, the bright hour delay—
Come, and gather us home.

Long we have waited and watched for thee,
Sighed for redemption, prayed to be free;
Thy bright appearing now we would see—
Do not delay, but come.

I am so glad that my Savior is near,
In clouds of glory soon to appear;
And when he comes, he will dry every tear
Of his dear children who mourn.

Joyful, joyful, will the meeting be,
When we in glory the Savior shall see;
And his dear children shall roam pure and free
In their fair Eden home.

WICKEDNESS WILL OUT.

Yes, conscience will tell it. Conscience is loyal to truth, when not perverted, as is sometimes the case. If you dare trust her with secrets that will not bear the light, you need not complain if she betrays that trust. She is always at hand, and makes a true record of the transaction. She will try to restrain you from the act of wrong doing, and because you do not listen to her admonition she will sooner or later publish it to the world. How was it with the sons of Jacob? Twenty years rolled away after their murderous assult upon Joseph, when they vainly supposed the record had died out and would never come to light. But that all-seeing Providence, that neither slumbereth nor sleepeth, would no longer allow the dark deed to be covered up. And it came to pass that Joseph knew his brethren but they knew not him; yet conscience knew them, and their guilty deed, and forced from them the confession, "We are verily guilty concerning our brother, in that we saw his anguish when he besought us, and we would not hear; therefore is this distress come upon us."

An unseen fire consumes him who has an outraged conscience. In the midst of his laughter his heart is pierced with pain. Belshazzar like, he sees the hand writing on the wall. Conscience is the betrayer of hidden secrets and unspoken sins. God seems to have determined that the misgivings and apprehensions, the fearful forebodings, of the remorseful mind shall sooner or later force the offender to confess his guilt and publish his own crimes. Death-bed confessions often attest this.

No vigor of intellect, no strength of nerve, no foresworn purpose of secrecy, is able or sufficient to withstand the pressure of an incensed conscience, when once it is awakened. For when God commands it to speak, it will not keep silence, but will utter its voice in thunder tones, to the confusion of the workers of bold iniquity. Nothing can suppress or surpass the inward murmurings of condemnation which the terrified mind feels when bleeding, writhing, under the inflictions of an accusing conscience. Men can put on no splendor but conscience will not rend off; they can enter no solitude where it will not follow them; it will make them quake on the pillow of dark night, and will whisper in their dreams, "Thou art the man." God speaks and conscience repeats his condemnation.

The providence of God will tell the secret deeds of sinning men. His omniscient eye is ever upon the ways of men. There is no darkness, nor shadow of death, where workers of iniquity may hide from his vision. In a thousand unexpected, unknown ways, he can bring to light the guilt of evil doers. Men seem to be sometimes unaccountably infatuated in the commission of what they think secret sins. Saul spared the best of the herds and flocks of doomed Amaleck only to low and bleat out his transgression. God can see in the darkness as in the light, and he so governs circumstances that murder and crimes of revolting character will out in spite of the cunning of their perpetrators, and justice will be avenged on them. —Journal of Industry.

THE PRESENT AN EVIDENCE OF THE FUTURE.

THOS. FITZSIMONS.

We think that the present world-wide distress and perplexity, depression of business, and agitated state of all the governments of the earth, is a very good evidence of what prophecy declares the end shall be. It certainly looks very preparatory to it. It is an old maxim, that "coming events cast their shadows before." If things are to resume and get better, why do they not do it? Why do they manifestly get worse? The United States never were, in many respects, in so highly a favored condition as at present. Money is abundant, public health is good, the crops are good, no foreign war, no disturbing international questions, and yet the entire nation, from all Maine to California, is under some ban and paralysis.

We ask some of our worldly logicians, who are so fond of ridiculing Adventists, and making jest of their belief, to solve this enigma, and give an explanation. They may be able thus to put their valuable time and attention to some practical purpose.

Phil., Pa.

TO THE WEAK AND FEEBLE ONES.

L. M. BRITTON.

A few months ago, while visiting the sick and aged, endeavoring to comfort and encourage them, and receiving in my own soul a rich blessing, these words came forcibly to my mind—"Comfort the feeble-minded, support the weak, be patient toward all men." And with it the thought, That's my work, I accept it, and it is to that class I wish to speak in the few lines I may write.

Dear, weary and trembling one, you perhaps are cast down, almost discouraged, with many cares, sore trials, and hardly know what course to take in these hard and trying times. Things around you all go wrong, as it seems to you, while sick, and so tired. Influences against you are powerful, and may be your nervous head is almost distracted. The children don't do as you would like; husband finds fault, wife is fretful and discontented, neighbors trespass, the church is cold, the world is so wicked, with no hope that things will ever be any better. Perhaps you get a moment's relief by singing, "Here is no rest," and sighing for Jesus to come and end it all, if that can be called a relief. You say you are trying to do the best you can; mean to be faithful; and you do so want Jesus to come, which to you is an evidence that you are right; and inquire, Is there a better way? I answer, yes. I know from the word; and let us believe that, from the testimony of hundreds, and from my own experience.

Are you a wife? Is your husband absent? Are you expecting his return soon? You know not just when (which is our position as a people). You love him and respect his judgment, and all his financial arrangements. You are in perfect sympathy with him just so far as you understand; and you feel that he knows better about his business affairs than you. So you have full confidence that he will do the very best he knows how for the good of the family. He has written to you that he has in his own mind appointed a time when he will surely return. You believe it. Your affections are so fully set upon him, and your confidence so perfect in him, that you believe every word he says; and you have the utmost confidence that he loves you, even more, and having loved, he will love to the end. From the past favors he has bestowed, you believe he will freely do more.

Now what would be the language of your heart to him? While you might write that your fond desires would bring him back, your love embrace him now, yet, in connection would you not say, "Stay until that day appointed by you; and while I search all your communications to ascertain if you reveal the exact point of time, I will remain true and faithful, and cheerfully suffer on amid cares, afflictions, and poverty even, improving every moment to the physical wants and mental culture of the family; teach them to love and respect you, and be in readiness at any time to welcome you. You say you are coming quickly, and my whole soul responds, Even so, come, my Lord; I am rejoicing, even in suffering, in your love. So true love, on my part, can wait patiently, even amid all my privations. So I'll be happy. I am with you in spirit; I am in harmony with you in your work. We are in union. We are one. Our life-covenant can never be broken;—and so on, until many pages might be written.

Or, would this be the language of your heart? I am so tired and weary living without you. Come home speedily; delay not. I am poor and sick. My surroundings are so unpleasant. I am thinking of that beautiful garment, that splendid mansion, you promised me. I want to see those near and dear friends, that are coming with you. Again and again have I been disappointed.

A neighbor perhaps comes in to cheer and comfort, and fearing, may be, that you are thinking more of the gifts than the Giver, puts the question directly, Do you love your husband? You answer, I think I do; I hope so; but I must confess it often causes anxious thought whether I am really his or not. Other lovers may come along, and I leave him, should he not come soon. Which language would inspire the most confidence in that husband's heart? You need not answer, but ponder it well.

And so dear, waiting, weary one, I want to tell you, you may be happy in the love of your absent Lord, if you so love him that you are in union and perfect harmony with him in his work, just so far as you understand; and what you do not understand, he does; and it is all right. So you may perfectly rest in his love. What! methinks I hear you say, perfect rest here? I have just been singing, "Here is no rest." Yes, weary one; what does Jesus say? Come unto me, and I will give you rest. Will you go to him and receive it? He says he will give you rest. O accept it. It is his gift. Every good and perfect gift cometh from above. O take his yoke, and ye shall find rest. Rest from trial and suffering? No, dear one, rest in trial and suffering. Rest for my aching head and weary limbs? No, that rest is the promised rest, when Jesus comes, when this mortal shall have put on immortality. Jesus says, "Ye shall find rest to your souls." It is soul rest. Not only perfect rest, but "perfect peace," if you meet the condition, and that is faith. O, do not one of you dream that by your own efforts or faithfulness you can obtain it; but remember, "according to your faith," so it is unto you. Then why not, weak and feeble one, be strong in accepting the strength which God supplies through his beloved Son? Why not rest sweetly in the arms of Jesus? Why carry so many cares and burdens, when your blessed Savior cares for you, and offers to carry them so freely?

Dear, tired one, go at once, and by a full consecration, an unreserved surrender, yield yourself to be fully the Lord's, at any cost; and accept Christ as your strength, your helper, your all; not in word only, but by actual experience. Put yourself in an attitude where God can bless, by yielding to the voice of the Spirit, and child-like faith will spring up in your soul, according to the working of his mighty power. You may never be able to tell how you believe, but it will be knowledge to you. Instead of doubting, you believe God. Instead of being overcome, you are an overcomer. You are now ready to be offered; ready for translation; ready and willing to suffer with Jesus; and can cheerfully say from the heart, Amen to all of God's providential arrangements. May God bless you all with this richer experience, is my prayer.

Westboro, Mass., July 24th, 1876.

A FIRE-PROOF SUIT INVENTED BY A SWEDE.

A few days since an exhibition of the Oestberg fire extinguishing apparatus took place on the Linden strasse in Berlin in the presence of the Emperor, the Empress, the Crown Prince, the Grand Duke of Baden, the Swedish Minister, the Ministers of war, and other distinguished persons. The inventor, who is a Swede named Oestberg, and Messrs. Brandt and Nawrocki, who had charge of the exhibition, were presented to the Empress before the experiment took place.

Capt. Ahlstrom appeared in a very peculiar costume, made of the Oestberg invention, aod walked into an immense fire made of wood saturated with petroleum. The heat of the fire was so intense that no one else could come within eighty paces without being burnt or scorched. The Captain, however, walked around in the glowing pile perfectly undisturbed, leaning on the burning wood, and finally quietly seated himself on the coals. He remained in the fire for fifteen minutes, and on his coming out, every one pressed round him to see how much he had been injured. He was unharmed, and in spite of the Emperor's asseveration that he had seen enough of so dangerous an experiment, Capt. Ahlstrom went again into the fiery oven.

On finally emerging, he took off the suit, and appeared clothed in red flannel. The Emperor said, "One must see this to form any conception of it." He then asked Messrs. Brandt and Nawrocki about the patent in Prussia, and when informed that the application for a patent had been refused, expressed great surprise.—Kolnische Zeitung.

THE WEDDING GARMENT.—At the royal marriage of Sultan Mahmoud, a few years ago, every guest invited to the wedding had made expressly for him, at the expense of the Sultan, a wedding garment. No one, however dignified his station, was permitted to enter into the presence-chamber of that sovereign without a change of raiment. This was formerly the universal custom in the East. But inasmuch as these garments were very costly, and some of the guests might plead poverty, and thus appear unclad in the guest-chamber of the king, the cost was defrayed at the Sultan Mahmoud's expense. To each guest was presented a suit of wedding garments. Had any, therefore, appeared befoie this absolute sovereign without the wedding garment, the Sultan would have deemed his dignity insulted, and his munificent gifts despised. The question then, "Friend, how camest thou in hither not having on a wedding garment?" Matt. 22: 12, explains the speechless condition of the man. The wedding robe was ready, not at the expense of the invited one, but at the cost of the king. He had simply to obey the requirements of the Eastern State —put on the garment, appear before the king, and do homage to him for his rich habit. His refusal to comply with this reasonable custom, and presuming, notwithstanding, to thrust himself into the presence of royalty, was an avowal that he denied his authority to rule over him, and despised his power. Hence he was bound hand and foot and cast out.—Ex.

HOME AND HEALTH.

OVERWORK.

It is by no means the case that all persons are in danger of working beyond their proper strength. Many are in far greater danger of doing less than they should, rather than of going beyond what they are able to to do. And those who constitute this very numerous class, are always ready to appropriate whatever may be said by way of caution to those who labor beyond their strength. Yet there are some who should be addressed on this point, and for such these words are written.

We do not, however, address all who work beyond their strength. Those who spend all their energies in the mad pursuit of wealth, grasping all that they can reach, and keeping all that they once get, are persons that can be spared without loss to their fellow-men. The pursuit of wealth is their greatest pleasure, and their chief good. Mammon is their god. For his service they will sacrifice everything else. To attempt to check such men, is labor lost. They must have riches, though they perish in the effort to obtain them. The world is not the better for their living in it; and if they do not live out half their days, there will be few to mourn their loss. The same may be said of all those whose aim in life is their own self-ends. If men will live for no higher objects than such as these, their self-destruction by unremitting toil is no occasion for general lamentation.

But there are men who live in the world to make it better. They do not seek in every act to benefit themselves, but to do some good, and that where it is most needed, to those around them. They live, not to see how much they can get out of others, but to see how much they can do to benefit and bless mankind. They do not belong to that class who say, "The world owes me a living," for these are the drones, the bloodsuckers, and the sharks among mankiud. But they belong rather to that noble class who, though free from all, have made themselves the servants of all, and who consider themselves debtors to their fellow-men. These are the men and women who live not in vain; for their paths are strewn all the way with good deeds. And were there a thousand times as many such, the world would be the better for it. To belong to this class it is not necessary to possess great talents, nor to do deeds that shall give you renown among men. By far the greater part of all the good done in the world is done in a quiet and unobtrusive manner, that brings no fame to the one who does it. But it is all written in God's book, and will one day be brought to the light.

It is to this class that a few words should be spoken. Some of these are ministers of the gospel, some are physicians, some are merchants, and many are engaged in the labors of the farm or the household. You may honor God and do good to men in all these fields of action. As you have noble motives to incite you to diligence, it is not necessary that I should urge you to be active, and to work with patient, untiring diligence. A different kind of counsel is needed in your case. Do not destroy yourself by overwork. You cannot do all that is suffering to be done, even though you labor till you drop down. Be careful to secure rest; not that you may indulge in sloth, but that you may renew your energies for the great work before you. Let no day pass without in some way doing something to benefit mankind. But remember that if you are broken in health yourself, you must become a tax upon others instead of helping those who need help. Those who wisely use their strength will accomplish the most in the end. By all means work while God gives you life, but do it wisely and prudently in his fear. With broken health, our work cannot be well done.—Health Reformer.

ADVICE.

The following lines were written by an invalid lady to her young nephew, on leaving the home of his childhood for school among strangers.

Will you permit me, dear sir, to write you a few lines, offering as an apology the deep interest I feel in your welfare. It is an important period of your life. You are now forming your character. The course you pursue will affect your present, as well as future happiness. One false step may fasten a stain upon your character, which time cannot eradicate, and plant a thorn in your flesh which will embitter all your days. To the young, the world holds out many flattering prospects, and promises much more than it can give. The young, aspiring, ambitious boy, like you, who has never left the home of his infancy, can know but little of the allurements, temptations, and deceitfulness of this vain world. You are a social being, formed for society, which you must have; but it is of the greatest importance that you be wise in the choice of your companions. You must and will be influenced by the company you are in. See then that their influence be good. Never frequent the company of the profane, or the low and vulgar, whose minds have been poisoned by bad company, or pernicious reading. They will corrupt your mind, and lead you astray.

Beware of the first step towards gambling. It at first appears innocent, but has ruined its thousands. Never be guilty of Sabbath breaking. It is the first step towards ruin. Do you say this advice is not neeedful for you? that you can take care of yourself? Let me tell you that many have fallen, that were older than you, and with more fixed principle, because they did not resist the first temptation. Above all, let me entreat you to take an interest in Him who alone is able to keep you from falling into temptation, and to guide you through the dangerous paths of youth in safety. You have heard much upon the subject of religion, and seen many that possessed much, whose course you have reason to censure. But remember that God says: "Cease ye from man, whose breath is in his nostrils; for what is he to be accounted of." He is at best frail, and liable to err. God, in whose hand your breath is, deserves and demands your best affections, and he only can satisfy the demands of your life, and fit you for enjoyment here, and hereafter. Earth, nor ought that it contains, can do this. The great company of those who will enter the New Jerusalem will, I believe, be made up of those who sought God in their youth, whose lives were spent in his service. Do you not mean to be of that happy number? I know you do. Procrastinate no longer, but listen to the gentle influences of the Spirit, and if the way seems dark, and your own strength insufficient, go to the Savior and trust him. He will give you strength and life, for he has promised that those who seek him early shall find him. You will need his grace to sustain you in the trials of life; his presence to go with you, should you be called to pass the dark valley of the shadow of death, and his righteousness to present you blameless before the throne of God.

That you may read with patience these lines and profit by them, is the prayer of one that loves you, and desires your present as well as future happiness.—Sel. by E. P. A.

WARNING TO PARENTS AND ALL.

There is a gang of assumed professional characters who go under the name or title of "lawyers," "doctors," etc. These characters generally have an office in our large cities. These professional rascals will start out in quest of their game. Innocent girls without parents, or widows' daughters, or friendless, homeless, innocent girls, are the particular objects of these girl destroyers. The object of these characters is to secure their game without the parents or friends discovering the real object of their business, saying they are packing medicine, or copying, or something of the kind.

Parents and friends of humanity, beware of these men that glitter with gold, diamonds, and costly array, to pick up young and innocent girls. Parents, know where your daughters are, and what they are about. It is an evil day; and this new game of the devil is drawing thousands of innocent girls into houses assigned for them. A word to the wise is sufficient. Sound the alarm!

HYMNS OF THE ADVENT.—No. 2.

I give this week a valuable one, from the pen of the gifted Bonar, charged with a fervid yearning—a strong, impassioned utterance. L. C. McKINSTRY.

COME, LORD! AND TARRY NOT.

Come, Lord! and tarry not,
Bring the long-looked-for day;
Oh! why these years of waiting here,
These ages of delay?

Come! for the good are few,
They lift the voice in vain;
Faith waxes fainter on the earth,
And love is on the wane.

Come! for love waxes cold,
Its steps are faint and slow;
Faith now is lost in unbelief;
Hope's lamp burns dim and low.

Come! for creation groans,
Impatient of thy stay;
Worn out with these long years of ill—
These ages of delay.

Come! and make all things new;
Build up this ruined earth;
Restore our faded paradise—
Creation's second birth.

Come! and begin thy reign
Of everlasting peace;
Come! take the kingdom to thyself,
Great King of Righteousness.

THE PROPHET'S WARNING.

W. J. BOSTWICK.

"Behold, the Judge standeth before the door."—JAMES 5: 9.

When He who knoweth "the end from the beginning" drew aside the veil that separates the past from the future, and permitted his holy prophets to gaze down the long vista of time, even unto the consummation of all things, and revealed to their wondering eyes the judgments he had purposed to bring upon a lost and ruined world, when the fulness of time had come, they, filled with the spirit of infallible prophecy, and as with the voice of an angel, gave forth a cry of alarm and warning which has, in trumpet tones, come rolling down the revolving centuries of time, until now, in these last days, it seems to fill the whole earth, calling upon all men everywhere to repent, to flee from the wrath to come, and to prepare for the great day of God Almighty.

But it was not to the men of the last generation only that the warning was sent, but to all the world; "for we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad." Therefore, it was heard throughout the land of Judea; it reverberated throughout the halls and palaces of the tyrants of Egypt; it resounded over the mountains and plains of Macedonia and Grecia; its tones were heard amidst the thrones and tribunals of the despots of Rome; its sound went ringing over the deserts of Arabia, Persia, and Tartary, clear down to the utmost confines of China and India; yea, it has been heard amidst the islands of the sea, and from the regions of everlasting snows to the burning sands of Africa.

It is, however, in these last times especially that it comes with such force, for these be the days of vengeance; for the evidence of the coming judgment gathers thick on the horizon, and the shadow of the storm-clouds of God's wrath are already being cast upon the earth, announcing in thunder tones—"Behold! the Judge standeth before the door."

But what were the scenes that presented themselves to the vision of the prophets? (When we say prophets, we mean all who prophesied from Isaiah to John the Revelator.) They saw all the lines of man's evil doings converging to this one point; all the streams of man's wickedness come pouring down from the past ages, increasing in volume as they move forward, filled with the filth and abomination, the sighs and the groans of many generations, and emptying themselves into the ocean of wrath. They saw that the wickedness of man had become like a great mountain, which almost filled the earth. They looked upon a sin-burdened and dying world, peopled with a God-defying, pleasure-loving, faithless generation. They saw that every imagination of the thoughts of man's heart was only evil continually. They saw the black smoke of idolatrous incense ascending from almost every individual altar; and almost every heart bowed in worshipful adoration of the god of this world. They looked, and saw the sword of God's vengeance suspended in the air, and the embattlements of heaven peopled with the armor-clad hosts of the Lamb, all ready to follow their great Leader unto the possession of this kingdom. They looked, and beheld Michael, the great prince, stand with his flaming sword, ready at the word of command to go forth to battle.

They looked, and saw, rolling up in awful volume from the depths of the bottomless pit, the black smoke of Satan's wrath, lit up with the lurid glare of satanic defiance, peopled with millions of lost angels, hissing out the accumulated hate of ages. They looked, and beheld a great commotion among the nations of the earth; a great preparation, a mighty preparation, such as the world never before saw;—a preparation for war; men beating their plowshares into swords, and their pruning-hooks into spears; the glistening of bayonets, the running to and fro of armed hosts, the mounting of cannon and other implements of destruction, the hurried movements of ships of war laden with death-dealing missiles. They looked, and saw, pouring down from the regions of ice and snow, the hosts of Gog, clad in all kinds of armor, and armed with all kinds of weapons; coming up from amidst the cities, towns, palaces, fields and workshops of Europe the vast armies of the last days, led by the frog-like spirits of malice and hate; rolling up from the far-off borders of Asia, coming up and covering the earth like a vast cloud of locusts, with the fire of fanaticism in their eyes, bearing aloft the flaming banners of him who had planted the tabernacle of his palaces upon the glorious holy mountain; gathering strength as they go, come the heathen hordes. They looked, and beheld the clash of arms, the roll of the smoke of battle, the angry flash of the death-dealing artillery, the surging to and fro of the armed masses, the looks of hate, the death throe, the heaps of slain, the rivers of blood, the great earthquake, the crumbling cities, the blackened sun, the blood-like moon, the falling stars, the sign of the Son of man, the mourning nations, the departing heavens, the flaming elements, the melting mountains, the mighty hail, and the glorious appearing of the once despised, rejected, hated, crucified Redeemer, but now the awful Judge.

Thus, then, we see the cause of the warning which God had given through his holy prophets to the world. God is a just God. He does not destroy his enemies without first giving them warning and space to repent. He is not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance. He warned the world that then was of the coming flood, through his servant Noah, long before it came to pass. He warned the Israelites of their coming destruction as a nation, and their dispersion among the Gentiles, many years before its accomplishment. He was willing to withhold the fire from Sodom, could there be but ten righteous persons found therein. So, also, do we see in this case his merciful kindness and justice exhibited in laying before the eyes of man, through his holy prophets, all the terrible judgments he had purposed to bring upon the world in the last days. He has set before them blessing and cursing, so that they might choose for themselves, but has urged and pleaded with them to choose the former.

But has the warning been heeded? Do we see, on all sides, men making preparation to escape the judgment of that great day? Do we see them making haste to kiss the Son, lest he be angry with them? Do we see them striving to enter in at the strait gate, to walk in the narrow way that leads unto life? Nay, verily. But few have taken heed. But few have flown to the rock of safety. They are like a small oasis in a vast desert. They stand like a fruitful tree in a barren field. They are like a scattered flock of sheep in a vast wilderness, wherein are prowling wolves and beasts of prey. A blood-bought band, only waiting for the glad summons which is to call them to the enjoyments of an everlasting life with Him whose name they bear. Blessed are they, for they shall escape all these things which are coming upon the earth. Before the outpouring of God's wrath takes place, they will have taken their flight to realms of bliss; they will have hidden themselves in their chambers, there to remain until the indignation be overpast. Otherwise it has fallen upon sealed ears, sealed and stamped with the stamp of the prince of this world, and which will only be broken by the sound of the last trump; a blast that will cause the scales to fall from their eyes, and reveal to their horrified sight an undone soul; a blast that will liberate a remorseful conscience from its thraldom and bring up before their vivified memories in solemn procession all the deeds of a misspent life, thus showing them what they are and what they might have been.

As it was in the days of Noah, so it is now. The people of the world are buying, selling, building, marrying, as if this was to be their everlasting home. Right in the face of the coming judgments, we see the professed followers of Christ sitting under the shadow of the cross, clasping the world in their embrace. We see men and women standing upon the banks of the bloody stream that flows along the border of the kingdom of God, as if about to cross, fondly looking back at some worldly idol. We see men and women walking along the brink of eternity, reeking with the filth of the world, regardless of the coming besom of destruction which will sweep them all away. We see the man with the distillery, the manufacturer of the deadly drug which slays its thousands yearly, walk in stately majesty down the aisle of his church, while the air resounds with the wail and cry of the widows and orphans of his own making. We see the millionaire, as he sits beneath the droppings of the pulpit, with pharisaical expression of countenance; while just beyond his palatial mansion lies a poor, sick, starving saint of God. We see the young man and young woman come up to the sacrament table on the Sabbath day, and on Monday night they are whirling in the giddy mazes of the dance of death. Well might the prophet say—"Who hath believed our report, and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed," after looking upon a scene like this.

This is no overdrawn picture. We believe the world will be called upon to witness just such scenes as these in the near future. We believe there are men living to-day who will seal the truth of God's justice by being partakers of these judgments. We believe there are persons who are sitting in fancied security under their own vine and fig-trees today, who will shortly rise up and call upon the rocks and mountains to fall upon them and hide them "from the face of Him that sitteth on the the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb." We believe there are men to-day, who are wearing out their brain and muscle in rearing up edifices of luxury and grandeur, every brick and every stone of which has written upon its face extortion; who are only piling up fuel for the great burning day of the world. We believe there are men to-day who are, as scientists, statesmen, soldiers and politicians, struggling and battling in order to gain the highest peak of fame and worldly honor, only to fall back into endless obscurity.

We believe there are men and women today, earnestly engaged in sowing the seeds of a strictly moral life—a life of self-righteousness, only to reap, in that day, a harvest of everlasting contempt. O ye who are purifying yourselves behind the altars of Universalism, Materialism, Rationalism and Spiritualism, how will you appear in that great disrobing day? O ye who devise iniquity and evil upon your beds, and when the morning light is come practice it, because it is in the power of your hands, where will you stand in that great and awful day of reckoning? O ye that rise up early in the morning that ye may follow strong drink, and that continue until night, until wine inflame you, what position will you occupy in that great day of mourning? O ye false teachers, that call evil good, that put darkness for light, that put bitter for sweet, and cause the people to err, what account will you be able to render as to your stewardship when the Master comes?

O, then, if these things be so (and who can say they are not?), "what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness, looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens, being on fire, shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat." Then let him who stole steal no more; let him who blasphemed blaspheme no more; let him who defrauded defraud no more; let him who is unclean be so no more. "But put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ," and thus escape the judgments of the great day of the Lord, which is just upon us. Therefore, "whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." For soon it will be said, "He that is unjust, let him be unjust still; and he which is filthy, let him be filthy still; and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still; and he that is holy, let him be holy still."

8 Till He Come.

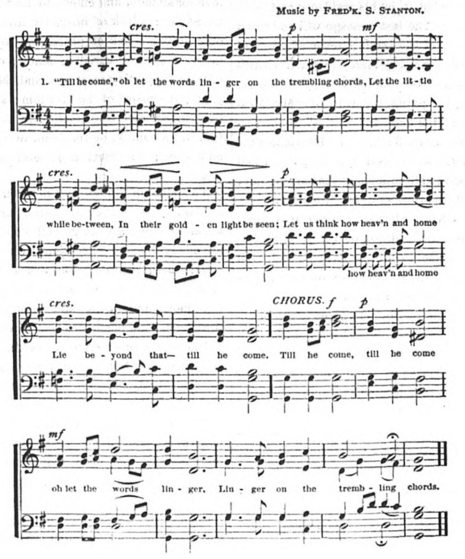
Music by FRED'K. S. STANTON.



2 When the weary ones we love
To the silent land remove,
Though the earth seems poor and waste
All our life, joy overcast,—
Hush! be ev'ry murmur dumb;
It is only—"Till He come."—Chorus.

3 Clouds and conflicts round us press;
Would we have one sorrow less?
All the sharpness of the cross,
All that tells the world is loss,
Death, and darkness, and the tomb,
Only whisper—"Till He come."—Chorus.

HEBREWS 11: 1.

J. H. WOOD.

"Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, and the evidence of things not seen."—HEB. 11: 1.

Substance is reality, and to the christian, who believes the promises of God, they are blessed realities; and as he or she grasps them by a living faith, they become a blessed substance; and we can feel that not one of them shall fail, but will all be fulfilled at the proper time. It was this faith that stimulated the prophets and patriarchs of old. They did not expect to get everything in this life; neither did they expect their reward at death, as many do now. They believed God would fulfill his word; and this faith and hope stimulated them through all the weary years and pilgrimage of life, and stood by them in the hour of death; for the apostle says, "These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth." And so we, as these mentioned in this chapter, are strangers and pilgrims on the earth; and the same promises that were made to them are ours, if we will accept them, and exercise a living faith in them. But we are living in a time when there are comparatively few that have such faith in God. When we think of Abel, Enoch, Noah and Abraham, who took a single declaration from God, and believed it, and acted accordingly, when it involved many years of toil and sacrifice, and when they had to stand alone, as it were; we are led to exclaim, "Lord, increase our faith."

Look at the record of these faithful men. The apostle selects some of them, and gives us the results of what they have accomplished through faith; and then asks the question, "And what shall I more say? for the time would fail me to tell of Gideon, and of Barak, and of Samson, and of Jephtha; of David also, and Samuel, and of the prophets; who through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions, quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, out of weakness were made strong, waxed valiant in fight, turned to flight the armies of the aliens." And in the 35th to the 38th verses gives a long list of sore trials to which they were subject who exercised faith in God, and tried to serve and obey him; and as though to impress upon our minds that death was not the ushering in of the future life, or the fulfillment of the promises to them, he says, "And these all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise; God having provided some better things for us, that they without us should not be made perfect."

O what a record is this, and how it speaks to our conscience. Shame on us, that we are so slow to believe, and have so little faith, for we are not under the law, but under grace. We have the gospel of the grace of God. God has manifested himself unto us by his Son; as Paul says: "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in times past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds." Heb. 1: 1, 2. And, "He that believeth on the Son of God, hath the witness in himself; he that believeth not God hath made him a liar; because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son. And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son." 1 John 5: 10, 11.

Let us, then, be more in earnest in our work, and keep pressing forward in the pilgrimage toward the promised land; and when we get weary, and begin to faint in our minds, let us think of that rebuke of the apostle, "Ye have not resisted unto blood, striving against sin. And ye have forgotten the exhortation which speaketh unto you as unto children, My son, despise not thou the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him." Heb. 12: 4, 5.

The struggle will soon be over. We are coming down into the times spoken of by the Revelator, when he says: "And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged; and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldest destroy them that destroy the earth." Rev. 11: 18.

Blessed be God, the promises are sure, and we with the prophets and patriarchs, if faithful, will be rewarded in the kingdom "under the whole heaven." For Paul says: "If we be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise."

Boston, Mass.

SIGNS OF THE LAST DAYS.

The progress and prevalence of even the grossest forms of wickedness, in different places, and among divers classes, are facts frightful to ponder. Every paper is laden with the record of such. Dishonesty, licentiousness, violence, murder, they do not meet us as exceptional instances; they make the staple of the news of the day; they load and darken the columns of all journals, till one trembles almost to take up the morning paper; is afraid to have it read in the family, and lays it down with a sense of heart sickness, a saddening impression of the ineffectiveness of our means of public, moral and religious instruction, a keen apprehension of what is to be expected in future.

It is not the rich and luxurious, alone, among whom such evidences of viciousness abound. It is not those who are avowedly worldly and godless in their life. Mechanics, merchants, teachers, physicians, lawyers, ministers of the gospel, men high in social rank and in political influence, women as well as men, not only the young, but the aged, in well-nigh equal measure, the refined and cultivated as well as the coarse,—all seem to be smitten with the foul contagion, and suddenly to break out with the vile and hateful leprosy of sin. Not crimes of dishonesty alone are common; but the murder of wives, of husbands, of children, of the most confiding and affectionate friend, a horrible lustfulness, the most flagrant and fiendish violations of faith,—all seem as common as the blossoming of trees, and are coming to be spoken of as familiarly and frequently, and with nearly as little apparent concern, as are the most ordinary and trivial facts.

No one, we think, can feel that in this descriptive outline the case is at all overstated; that any slightest exaggeration of the truth is intended or allowed. The same impression must be made upon all whose eyes and ears are measurably open to what is publicly passing around them. A sudden death can hardly anywhere occur without exciting suspicion of foul means. Elopements and domestic infidelities are so common as hardly to excite any remark, unless perhaps a ribald jest. And no sense of strangeness is awakened in the public mind by the story of even a parricide or a wife murder.—Selected.

THE SOUL'S ORIGIN.

WM. SHELDON.

If the soul of man is really a personality, distinct from the body, and immortal in its nature, what is its origin? We propound the question, firstly, with reference to the first man, Adam; and, secondly, with reference to his posterity.

1. If Adam's soul was a personality, whether of deific, angelic, or other human nature, it was either pre-existent, or formed at the time of the formation of the body.

2. If it was a pre-existent and immortal personality, it must have been an intellectual being, and therefore an accountable being, to be held responsible for its acts; and this involves the conclusion that it either lost its intellectual power when connected with the body, or else carried it into the body. If its intellectual power was lost in coming into the body, it also ceased to be an accountable being, and therefore cannot be held responsible for sin, nor be rewarded for righteousness, and consequently is not in danger of damnation, nor entitled to salvation; besides, the body is thereby made the intellectual and responsible person; hence, if there is any consciousness in death, it must be on the part of the body, and not on the part of the soul. But if it retained its consciousness when connected with the body, being still an intellectual personality, it follows that the body is not an intellectual being, and therefore not an accountable personality, or else there are two distinct intellectual and accountable beings in partnership. Then the query arises, Do they invariably commit the same sins, and repent at the same time, or may one remain holy while the other sins, and finally one be saved while the other is damned? Which was responsible for the sin of eating the forbidden apple? If the soul, why did the Lord say, "Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree, of which I commanded thee, saying, Thou shalt not eat of it, . . . unto dust shalt thou return"? Gen. 3: 17–19. If the soul was the sinner, why visit the calamity thereby incurred upon the body, allowing the real sinner to escape it? Just think of a man with two intellects! Facts oppose the idea. Then, if there is but one intellectual and responsible personality in man, that must be the one that God will hereafter judge, when the sea shall disgorge her dead to be "jndged" (Rev. 20: 13); and surely those "dead" ones in the sea cannot be immortal souls, for they could not die, even if confined in the bottom of the sea. As God will judge only the accountable man, and as that is one that can die, and be deposited in the sea, it is certain that the intellectual man is the material man.

3. If Adam's soul was a distinct personality, and was formed at the time the body was made, which was the "first man?" Was the soul "of the earth, earthy"? If not, we have no record of its creation. If it was, it cannot be immortal, and therefore must die. To assume that there was a distinct creation for the soul, proves nothing. To insist that "the breath of life" which was breathed into Adam, was a soul, is to assume more than can be proven; besides, if the assumption were correct, the argument would give an immortal soul to the beasts, as well as to Adam, for they, too, are said to have "the breath of life" (Gen. 6: 17), or "lives," both in our version, and in the original. If this is not the origin of the soul, where shall we find it? When Adam transgressed, he was driven away from the tree of life, lest he should "eat and live forever" (Gen. 3: 22), showing that he lacked the deathless nature. But passing from Adam to his posterity, we ask the origin of their souls, if they are distinct personalities.

1. If they are pre-existent spirit-men, venerable with age, why have we forgotten our centuries of pleasure in another world? And why were we sent to this world to be imprisoned in immortality? What comfort is there in boasting of generations of life in a foreign clime, of which we have not the faintest recollection? It is all speculation, in opposition to reason and revelation.

2. If our souls are not pre-existent personalities, but are created by the Lord, as fast as children are born into the world, God is made to endorse adultery by a direct miracle, in every case of illegitimate birth, as well as that horrible institution of polygamy.

3. If souls are neither pre-existent, nor distinct personalities created at birth, they must be transmitted; and as mortality cannot transmit immortality, this proves the soul mortal, but does not prove it a separate personality. If immortality could propagate its species in the body, why not also out of the body, perpetually?

Pythagoras, a heathen philosopher, appears to have been the first advocate of the theory of the soul's pre-existence; and he also coupled with it the theory of soul-transmigration; that is, that after the death of the body, the soul might pass into some beast, or bird, or some other human body. And these two theories should still be yoked together, for they have one origin.

Socrates, another heathen philosopher, proclaimed the soul's immortality, and thus gives it the control over the body: "Nature requires that the soul command, and the body obey." After death, they assigned the soul another world in the bowels of the earth. Socrates affirmed: "It is an ancient tradition that our souls go to the other world, and return from that to this;" and they were rowed over the river by a spectral ferryman. What right we have to steal the heathen view of a spirit man, and a spirit home for him to live in, and move that home off to the skies, and thus slight the time-honored ferryman, we cannot tell. Let us take the whole, or else abandon the whole, and come back to the Bible view of future life by virtue of a resurrection from the dead.

"If a man die, shall he live again?" Great question, and philosophy cannot answer it, but inspiration can: "Thy dead men shall live; together with my dead body shall they arise." God says: "I will redeem them from death." "As in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." God "shall swallow up death in victory." Then "there shall be no more death."

A CRISIS IMPENDING.

That men are becoming terribly perplexed, is not a matter of speculation, but a fact. In every land there is a gloomy foreboding of impending evil, and all classes are anxious about the results.

Not only are there indications of war on a gigantic scale, which may engulf the whole political world, but there seem to be indications that the financial system, by which nations have been supported, is to be terribly shaken if not entirely uprooted. All eyes are now turned towards the Mohammedan government, which is at present trying to struggle through its financial embarrassment; but they will not be able, for the mene, mene, tekel is written on the walls of that government. But that power is not the only one that is laboring under financial embarrassment. From every country we hear the cry of "hard times." In many places business is nearly or quite suspended, thousands of men and women are out of employment, and from the capitalist to the humblest laborer there is a gloomy foreboding of harder times yet to come.

If we turn our attention to examine the moral condition of the world we find it in no better state. There is a rapid progress in sin. Wickedness of every kind is prevalent, and corresponds with Paul's description of the last days. Paul, when speaking of the last days, in the third chapter of second Timothy, says, "This know, also, that in the last days perilous times shall come; for men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemous, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those who are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof."

How truly Paul has described the moral corruption of the present age. Are not men lovers of themselves? Are they not covetous? Are they not boasters? Are they not proud? Are they not blasphemers? Are they not disobedient to parents? Are they not unholy? and so on to the end of the chapter? Yes, it certainly is true, too true, we are living in perilous times.

Now the question naturally arises, Will there be any change for the better before this present mundane system shall give place to that world that shall blossom like the rose. I think there will not be any permanent change, although I am not a prophet or the son of a prophet; but looking, as I try to do, from a Biblical standpoint, it seems to me we are living in a time when men will "grow worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived."

I know many have talked and are still talking about a glorious age when all shall know the Lord from the least to the greatest, and that in that age peace shall be declared from the rivers to the ends of the earth. But this seems to be a fancy idea, having no foundation in the word of God; for the Scripture tells us that there will be two classes on the earth when Jesus comes the second time to judge men according to the deeds done in the body, namely, good and bad.

Now, if there are to be good and bad people, it is evident that some are not to know the Lord, for to know the Lord is to be changed from bad to good; hence if all were to know the Lord, all would be good; but that will never be in this present age. The impending crisis is the coming of the absent One, who said if he went "away he would come again." His advent is due, and his church, with longing eyes, scan the heavenly horizon for the first signs of his appearing. They have waited long, but still they wait. Oh, God! how long shall thy church thine absence mourn? When will thy train the heavens pierce? When, oh when, wilt thou gather to thyself thy own?

Sinner, the Lord is coming. Are you ready? Have you made your peace with him? If you have not, wait no longer. Get ready, get ready! and do it now.—Biblical Messenger.

THE KINGDOM.

The writer listened recently to a sermon from the text, "But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." In many respects it was an excellent sermon, although very little was said about the kingdom which Jesus refers to in the text.

The kingdom dwelt upon by the minister in his sermon was God's present government over all his creatures, but the kingdom our Savior had reference to was in the future, "When the Son of man shall come in his glory," and shall sit upon the throne of his glory, and when he shall say to the assembled nations on his right hand, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

This is the kingdom we are instructed by our Savior to seek, for he was sent especially to preach it. It is a kingdom still in the future. The dying thief understood it to be in the future, when he said, "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." The apostle Paul understood it to be in the future when he said, I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick [living] and the dead, at his appearing and his kingdom." Jesus was speaking of the future, when he said to his disciples, "I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me, that ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel."

This gospel of the kingdom was the theme of our Savior's preaching; it was the theme of the preaching of the apostles, and should be the theme of every minister of the gospel in the present day. It is a kingdom that is sure to be set up and established on the earth when the Son of man comes in his glory. The glory of this kingdom is to exceed that of every other that has ever ruled the earth. The least among the saints who are to inherit this kingdom will enjoy higher honors than can now be conferred upon any mortal man. The time appointed for securing an entrance into this kingdom may soon expire, and then it will be that "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven," for "many will seek to enter in, and shall not be able, when once the Master of the house is risen up, and hath shut to the door."—Samuel Work, in Beverly Visitor.

THE SLANDERER.

SILAS HENN.

"He that uttereth a slander, is a fool."—PROV. 10: 18.

Slander, though a sin forbidden in the word of God, is one into which many professors of religion fall. The character of not a few good men is thereby taken away, and their usefulness is much hindered. The pleasures of social life are also embittered; their cup of joy is mingled with sorrow. And the more fully a man is consecrated to God, the louder may the tongue of slander be heard against him. Bacon says, "The worthiest persons are frequently attacked by slanders, as we generally find that to be the best fruit which the birds have been pecking at." If christians would not lend an ear to slander, slanderers would soon be ashamed of their dirty business.

Archbishop Leighton observes, "Calumny would soon starve and die of itself, if nobody took it in and gave it lodging." Peter the Great had a very happy method of rebuking slander. If he heard any one traducing the character of a neighbor, he would stop him by the remark, "Well, now, but has he not a bright side? Come, tell me what you have noticed excellent in him. It is easy to splash mud, but I would rather help a man to keep his coat clean." This method generally adopted, and thousands of slanderers would be put to silence. "Slanderers," says one writer, "are like flies, that leap over all a man's good parts to light only upon his sores." And the wise man declares the slanderer to be a fool. His folly shall one day be revealed. The reproach which he tried to fix upon the character of the object of his hatred shall be wiped away, and the light which he tried to obscure shall shine.

ONE of the things we need in these days of trial is ever flowing love to God. The felt assurance of his love will do more to infuse courage and strength than any thing else. If the Lord has torn up your nest so that you may fly, he will not let you fall. Look up, and be strong.

THE VOICE IN THE WILDERNESS.

"The voice of him that crieth in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make straight in the desert a highway for our God."—Isa. 40: 3.

Many of the prophetic sayings are very beautiful in their interpretation and application when rightly understood. Many of them are drawn from very interesting circumstances, which are made illustrative of the facts foretold, and the beauty and adaptation of the passage is not seen when the circumstances of the figure are not known.

We suppose that the illustrating events embraced in the passage under consideration are these: In ancient times kings and emperors were in the habit, at certain times, of leaving their capitals, and visiting distant cities and provinces of their dominion, attended by the royal family and high officers of state. These royal parties always put on the glorious equipage and official insignia of nobility belonging to the dignity of their highness. A messenger or class of messengers were sent out under royal commission, whose duty it was to proclaim or "cry" to the citizens who were to be visited by the ruler of their country, to make certain preparations for the advent and reception of their king and his attendants. All the people who did not give heed to this official proclamation and attend to the specific duties it enjoined, and were therefore not found in readiness to give the king a suitable reception on his appearing in their presence, were called before him to be punished according to his sentence.

The particular duties required of the subjects by those proclamations varied according to the will of the kings, the habits of the nations, and the general customs of the ages when they were made. In many cases the messengers were commissioned to demand of the people that they prepare and cast up a royal highway, over which the kingly party should pass in glorious procession. These kingly pathways were frequently required to be made "straight," so that the people could see the approaching glory of coming royalty at a great distance, and prolonged and united shouts were to rend the heavens at the same time. These State roads were often required to be graded thoroughly, by cutting down the mountains and hills and filling up the valleys, very much as we now grade railroads. The rough and stony places were made smooth, so that the royal chariots should not be "overthrown in stony places."

The ancient kings of Russia were in the habit of requiring that the royal pathway be swept, and no feet were allowed to mar the smooth surface before the imprint of the feet of the imperial livery should be made.

The State messengers were required to notify all the people that their king would appear in their midst about such a time, and that he required them upon their peril to be prepared, so that when his trumpeter should give the significant sound of his approach, they should, without delay, appear upon the line, having cast off their garments worn in the fields, kitchens, and shops, and robed themselves in suitable garments to appear in the presence of the lord of their country, and welcome him as the chiefest among the sons of men. All who refused or neglected to manifest their respect for and loyalty to the king, by complying with the requirements given in the proclamation, were reckoned as disloyal subjects, and punished accordingly.

It appears from the passage quoted, and many parallels, that the Lord has taken these circumstances to illustrate the advents of the King of glory from heaven to earth, as its legal and rightfully honored Ruler. As Jesus Christ makes his royal journey from the seat of God's universal government to the earth twice (for he is to come "a second time"), the passages presenting this illustration generally and very properly present both his first and second advent in connection; both being appropriately foreshadowed by the ssme earthly events. For this reason the predictions, presenting the instrumentalities and proclamation connected with the first advent, also present those of the second advent; the first being, in a sense, typical of the second.

John the Baptist and his disciples, as a class, were the authorized instrumentality to make the first proclamation to the people to prepare for the speedy coming of their King. This message must be repeated before he shall come the second time, when "all flesh shall see" his glory "together."

A few chosen witnesses saw the glory at the first coming on the mount of transfiguration, but "all flesh shall see it" at the second coming, for "every eye shall see him." The prophet expresses the nature of the "cry," blending the first and second parts together thus: "O Jerusalem, that bringest good tidings, lift up thy voice with strength; lift it up, be not afraid; say unto the cities of Judah ['into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not.' Matt. 10: 5], Behold your God! behold, the Lord God will come with strong hand, and his arm shall rule for him; behold, his reward is with him, and his work before him." Isa. 40: 9, 10. Here we get decidedly the first and second editions of the "cry;" the first confined to the cities of Judah, the last to be published in "all the world for a witness to all nations [the first to only one nation], and then shall the end ['end of the world'] come."

Christ did not bring his "reward" with him at his first advent, but he came to instruct his people how to labor in his vineyard, and promised that he would come "a second time" to reward them for their faithful labor. It follows therefore that as God raised up a class of messengers to herald the first coming of Christ, as the ancient kings notified the people of their approach, so a class of messengers must be raised up to herald to the people the second advent of Christ.

He came the first time and offered in his message to become the king of one nation; he will come the second time and offer in the second message (which must be preached "in all the world for a witness to all nations") to become the king of all nations. The first nation to whom the offer was made rejected it, and refused to prepare to receive the king when he came with acclamations and honor, as the proclamation required; and for this offence they were cut off and destroyed as a nation. So it will be with the Gentile nations, if they reject the proclamation or "gospel of the kingdom" sent to them, they must be cut off by the last great battle and judgments of the last day. As both of the classes sent of God to proclaim the two messages of Christ's advents were represented by Elias, so they are both properly called Elias.

When Christ and the disciples were coming down from the mount of transfiguration, he charged them to tell the vision to no man until the Son of man be risen again from the dead. They evidently supposed that his resurrection would take place at the general resurrection, and that just before the resurrection Elias would come, as the prophets had foretold; and they were at a loss to know how that rising from the dead could take place immediately and Elias not have come already. Christ did not intimate that they were in error upon the point, but confirmed it by saying, "Elias truly [as you have been taught] shall first [before the resurrection] come, and restore all things." Matt. 17: 11. That resurrection did not take place at the first coming of Christ, but will come to pass at his second coming; therefore, according to Christ's statement, Elias "truly" shall come and restore all things, as a preparatory work for the second coming of Christ at the general resurrection of the dead.

Christ also taught them at the same time that John the Baptist (and those he represented) was Elias, teaching that the messengers of whom Elias was the prototype should come at two points, both to proclaim the speedy coming of the great King, and to prepare a people to joyfully anticipate the grand event, and receive him with demonstrations of loyalty and honor. We also learn from John's testimony that he was not the Elias in the full and complete sense of the predictions, for when messengers sent to inquire of him what prophetic office he filled, they said, "Art thou Elias? And he saith, I am not." They quoted from Malachi 4: 5, and he evidently answered according to the sense of that passage, and said, "I am not." He could not say, I and my disciples are sent to make the predicted proclamation just before the great and dreadful day of the Lord should come, but he came to herald the coming of the day of love and good-will to all men. But John did say to those messengers, "I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness;" quoting from Isa. 40: 3.

Matthew and Jesus both say that the one crying in the wilderness, predicted by Isaiah, is Elias, and was John the Baptist, (see Matt. 3: 1–5: 17: 12, 13), while John says to the question "Art thou Elias?" meaning the one predicted by Malachi, "I am not." Therefore if all these witnesses tell the truth, the Elias spoken of by Isaiah and the one predicted by Malachi cannot in every sense be the same. While John was the Elisha foretold by Isaiah, he was "not" the one predicted by Malachi. Jesus said, "Elias shall [in the future] come," and that he "is [at present] already come," clearly intimating that there are two comings foretold; one at that time and one in the future.

This agrees perfectly with Isaiah; for the message from God is first carried to Jerusalem, the place of God's habitation, where the holy people dwelt; and the second was to be sent into the "wilderness," or "desert," where the heathen dwelt."

As John introduced the gospel which was to be carried among the Gentiles, he beautifully typified it by his residence and habits of life. The last message will end when "the glory of the Lord is revealed, and all flesh shall see it together." Malachi clearly presents the two messages, but defines the messengers, giving the title of "My Messenger" to the first, and "Elias" to the second. See chap. 3: 1, 4–5. He applies the first to the Jews, as a typical people, and the second to all nations, at the burning day, when all the proud shall be burned up.

If the King Eternal is about to appear, then the second edition of the great proclamation is due to all the nations, and God will make it the specific duty of his servants to do the work of Elias, as described in all the wonderful instructions given in the Scriptures to that class. The hearts of the children must be turned back to the fathers, so that the children of the fathers, or the last generation, may receive the apostolic faith, hope, and charity.

The primitive standard of christian holiness—separation from the world, and purity of worship—must be raised. A people must be led out by the evidences given in the message to look for Christ's coming in his glory, with his heavenly attendants, as the people anciently looked for their kings.

We believe the servants of Christ are now called to do this awfully responsible work. The subject is sublimely grand and infinitely important. We cry out from the depths of our heart, Who is sufficient for these things?

MEN FOR THE HOUR.

When great events are about to transpire, brave men and true are needed for standard bearers, who are willing to support the right at any cost. Men who hold no bribes; who seek not the applause of others, but only their best welfare, regardless of the frowns of the rich, fashionable, and proud; men who support principles instead of parties; and who dare expose the vile; to protect the innocent. Men of true courage and character, who can be trusted in all situations, with no fears that they will be turned from the right by need or greed. Such men lived when this century began; some such are now living, but they are a small minority. In the front ranks of this class of men stand the Bible heroes, and their successors, who were willing to risk their all for the right. Such men were Noah and Lot, Moses and Elijah, Joseph and Daniel; the men in the fiery furnace of the Babylonian king, Paul and Peter, James and John, and a host of martyrs, who sealed with blood their noble honesty, christian integrity, and love for Jesus. Such men have been in all ages the admiration of the pure and good. They have been "the salt of the earth," "the light of the world." They are yet to shine forth as the sun, in the kingdom of God. They were needed for the times in which they lived. Their example gave courage to the weak and timid, and led them on to victory.

We have now come to a period when such men are needed as were required to make martyrs. Men who are crucified to the world; who are alike dead to its censure or its praise; who are ready to "buy the truth" at any price, and will not sell it to save reputation, friends, or even life; men who are as true and honest in the dark, as when watched by the multitude; men whose word is as good as their bond; who are willing to stand alone for the right, rather than be with the popular crowd in the wrong; who are as heedless of the finger of scorn from the enemies of the cross, as of the changes of the wind; men who are ready to follow anywhere the Lord leads, and have no fears about the consequences; whose highest ambition is to please Him who died to give them life eternal.

The hour in which we are living demands such men, to go forth and proclaim the grandest of all great events—the second coming of the Son of the Highest. Men with clean hearts, and all aglow with love for his appearing; who are ready to meet him any moment; who care as little for the honors and pleasures of the world, as for the husks eaten by the prodigal son; new men, whose bodies are temples filled with the Holy Spirit; whose motives and words proceed from a pure heart; whose eyes are single, and their bodies full of light; daily living free from condemnation; clothed with "the whole armor of God," ready every moment to obey any command from the Captain of their salvation.

Such men are needed to meet the embattled legions of the powers of darkness, who are now preparing for the final conflict with the disciples of the crucified King. The victory and triumph will be glorious and certain to all the saints. Let us be ready to take any place among the christian soldiers that may please our all-conquering Deliverer. Then, when he comes, we shall hear him say, "Well done." "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

SOMETHING LACKING.

So far as we can learn, there is a general feeling among our Brn. and Srs., that something is lacking. By this statement is meant, that prayer and conference meetings, Sunday meetings, and even campmeetings, are lacking in vital interest. There is a lack of love for sinners, and efforts to lead them to the Savior; a lack of brotherly love, felt in other days; a lack of peace and joy in the heart; a lack of christian union; of liberality in supporting meetings, and those who preach the gospel of the kingdom; a lack of holy living and conversation in every-day life, in the family, on the farm, in the shop and store; in short, a general spiritual dearth.

This state of things has not come about suddenly, but little by little, until the amount is truly alarming. Of course there are many blessed exceptions, who are becoming more and more like Jesus; but this is not true of the majority. Said one of our most prominent and best received preachers, I am persuaded that three-fourths of those who profess to be looking for the coming of the Son of man, are not ready for the event. If this is true, as we have reason to believe, it is a sad fact. Those who were all alive in the service of Christ, ten, twenty and thirty years ago, are now dull, formal, and even indifferent. They may be wide awake and very earnest in the defense of some disputed doctrinal point, the belief of which does not affect their christian character, while at the same time, they fret and scold in their families; have hatred and variance in their hearts; also evil imaginations, pride and covetousness, and other evil things, which defile the hearts of men.

The inquiry is pressed home, What is the cause of this declension? It cannot be because they have given up their belief in the truth that has made us a peculiar people, for they never believed it more firmly, or were more ready for its defense. Then what is the cause of this luke-warmness? Why is there so much dullness in divine things? Why so little interest in the salvation of the perishing? Why so little brotherly union? Why so many divisions? Why is so little accomplished with such soul-stirring truths as are in possession of those looking for the coming of the Holy One? We think there is a plain, positive answer; and that is, a lack of the Holy Spirit in the hearts of professors of religion. Why is there a lack of this, when the Lord is so exceedingly willing to give it to those who ask? There can be but one answer. It results from a lack of consecration to Christ. Whoever will submit all to Jesus, with a readiness to obey him in everything, as was done by thousands in 1843–4, will find the same peace, love, and joy; the same keeping power and assurance; the same lively, blessed meetings, and christian union now as then. The vital force of christianity is in the Holy Spirit. When that is grieved away, then comes the lack now so keenly felt. It may be humiliating to acknowledge these things, but let us humble ourselves in the dust before the Lord; ask pardon for all past failures, and now consecrate all to him, and the gift of power will return, through the Holy Spirit, and with it a feeling of complete readiness to meet Jesus at his coming.

WHAT IS A PROPHETIC WAR?

A prophetic war is one foretold, its history being given in advance of its occurrence. A specific prediction of such a war would require a description of the combatants, the nature of the strife, and its results.

Many writers and preachers take the position that the present war in the East is a prophetic war. It certainly is a war of great dimensions, and portends very wide-spread results, if we are allowed to judge by the breadth and darkness of its shadow. It is stirring the heart of humanity through Christendom with a more alarming pulse than has been felt for ages. It grows out of a diplomatic question—"The Eastern Question"—which has produced more "perplexity" among the Roman nations, for more than a hundred years, than any other national question. It certainly occupies as important a place in the history of the present age, as it regards its past perplexities and its prospective results, as any question which has disturbed society for a thousand years, and therefore demands a place in the prophetic history of the ages.

God, true to the great principles of his government, has given it a very prominent place on the last page of the inspired calendar. In giving a description of this war, God said of one of the combatants—the "king of the North," or Turkey—"He shall go forth with great fury to destroy, and utterly to make away many; and he shall plant the tabernacles of his palace between the seas in the glorious holy mountain; yet he shall come to his end, and none shall help him." Dan. 11: 44, 45. The passage expresses distinctly two positions of this king or kingdom in its last struggle. During the first, he will become fiercely enraged on account of menacing manifestations of some powers east and north of him. These menaces, as explained by Newton and others, will be of a religious nature, which will cause the enraged government to carry on a savage warfare against a religious enemy; that is, against a people whose opposition will grow out of religious controversies. The idea is also expressed that this king will so far triumph as to be able to seriously afflict his enemy by destroying property and life; for it says, "He shall go forth [march his armies] into the enemies' country, with great fury to destroy [to burn and waste property] and [in addition to wasting property] utterly to make away many"; that is, will slaughter the people with a determination to utterly exterminate the class, so as to end the religious controversy. These are the ideas learned men long ago said the passage expressed.

How wonderfully these prophetic utterances agree with the circumstances producing the present war, and its progress in the first part.

The Turks have certainly manifested "great fury" thus far in the campaign, and that fury is exhibited just as foretold; not so much in battle, as in the destruction of property and the indiscriminate butchery of all classes of christians. If all the Turks designed in the war was to put down the rebellion, they would only attempt to subdue the enemy's army; but when they butcher men without arms, and women and children, for no reason only because they are Christians, it proves beyond a question that they attempt to exterminate them, and thus end a long religious controversy.

That this is true as to Turkish fury and design will appear from the following recent news, which is only a sample of many cases: "There are horrible scenes at Batok; seven thousand bodies have been lying there since May 12th, rotting; no crime invented by Turkish ferocity has been left uncommitted. There is urgent need of assistance for starving families."

Again, that the Turks are "going forth with great fury to destroy" property, as well as Christians, is proved by our last news, which is as follows: "London, Aug. 7. A dispatch from Semlin to-day says that Gurgusvoatz is in flames, and the Turks are burning and destroying everything in their way."

It seems to us that God's word was never more literally and impressively fulfilled than are these prophetic announcements, in the causes and progress of the present Eastern war. If we are correct in our understanding of these sublime foreshadowings of inspiration, we shall see additional victories of the Turks, and more relentless butchery of Christians, and reckless destruction of their property, until the people of Europe will rush with great indignation, and grind under their iron heel the venemous monster which long ago crept from Mecha's cave, and for many centuries has poisoned the life-blood of the nations.

The clouds are now black and the thunder portentous; but cheer up, ye saints, for beyond the storm is the eternal calm. After the bitterness of earth's last mingled cup comes the new wine of the kingdom; after the "last clash of arms" comes the eternal jubilee. Amen.

SPRINGFIELD CAMPMEETING.

Once more we find ourselves on Springfield camp-ground. It is a consecrated place, and by many the most hallowed spot on earth. We must confess, that to us there is no other piece of land so dear as the "Tabernacle ground," where the Lord has yearly blest us most graciously. We imagine we can hear many say Amen to this statement.

We feel thankful for another privilege of greeting the friends of Jesus in this tented grove, and expect it will be the best meeting of all. There are no other associations on earth so heavenly as those experienced by true christians; and no other place where they are better enjoyed than in the leafy shade of the summer camp-ground. Here we meet tried and true friends, with whom we have spent happy hours in other days, in prayer and praise, rejoicing in our blessed hope, and whom we soon expect to greet in the paradise of God, and enjoy their agreeable society for ever and ever. The very thought of this is enough to fill one with rapture.

We found more on the ground than we have ever seen before so early. Some have been here three weeks. Several new tents and houses are up already; and the prospect indicates a large as well as a good meeting. At this time (Friday morning, Aug. 11th), we have already had some precious meetings. They are held every evening. We can truly say it is good to be here.

BUSINESS PROSPECTS.

The world's business prospects are very gloomy. No bright beams are shining on the pathway of rich men. Says the Boston Journal:

"The worriment and anxiety of the capitalists and merchants of New York in relation to their loss of trade, if we are to accept the representations of their newspapers, is really pitiable."

Stagnation has taken possession of business matters; the wheels of commerce are moving very slowly; ships are floating in idleness at their wharves, and their owners sitting under dark financial clouds that threaten a destruction tempest. They know not which way to turn for safety. They begin to feel the predicted "woe." Strong fears have taken hold of them, and a trembling foreboding concerning coming events. This looks like one of the special last-day signs, foretold by Jesus. If so, stronger evidences, of the same kind, will soon appear. Wave after wave of distress may be expected, as we approach the grand hour of consummation, provided we are as near the end as other signs and prophecies now indicate. Those who are not ready for the appearing of Christ have no time to lose, if they intend to be prepared for his coming. Submit to him at once, lest no other opportunity be given. Delay not. None can afford to lose eternal life for the sake of a brief, selfish gratification in this world. Come, give up all to Jesus, and be ready for his coming· Let no idol come between you and him. Throw aside every weight, and all besetting sins, and he will receive and bless most graciously. Do nothing, say nothing, think nothing, that you would avoid in his presence. Keep "unspotted from the world," and soon we may expect to be in our heavenly home.

DOES THIS APPLY TO YOU?

It is a well-known law, that the power of resistance increases in proportion to its exercise. Also, every time we yield to a bad habit, the power of resistance is weakened, and the habit strengthened. The will power can be cultivated by exercise as truly as the memory. When persons have once resisted a certain degree of religious feeling, they can overcome the same easier the second time, in consequence of the law of habit. Hence it follows, that every time one resists the calls of heavenly mercy, they are only preparing themselves to turn away the next invitation with greater ease, until they become indifferent to all entreaties made to lead them to seek salvation through Christ.

The following puts this point in a clear light:

"When Mr. Spurgeon preached the other day, in the west-end of London, he summed up the things his audience had got over. Some of you, he said, have got over the prayers of faithful Sabbath-school teachers who used to weep over you, and come to the house and talk to you. You resisted all their entreaties, and got over their influence. And you have got over your mother's tears and prayers, and she, perhaps, sleeps in the grave to-day; you have got over the tears and prayers of your father and of your minister, who has prayed with you and wept with you—a godly, faithful minister, there was a time when his sermons got right hold of you, but you have got over them now, and his sermons make no impression on you; you have been through special meetings and they have made no impression on you, they have not touched you."

Dear reader, where are you in this series of resistance? Stop, and look at the matter candidly. Eternal interests are involved. All other things are of small moment, compared with that of salvation.

THE ITALIAN INFIDELITY.

Those who have been looking for the conversion of the world before the coming of Christ, have thought that when the Pope should lose his temporal power, and the Italians were freed from the yoke of Papal bondage, that they would become truly christian. But such is not the case. It is true there are a few disciples of Jesus, as in other countries, but the many are turning away from every thing that has the semblance of Christianity. One writing from Italy says:

"Alas! the works of Renan and Strauss have done their work too well. One and another free-thinking society arose, the members of which bury their dead without the intervention of priest or pastor. Blatant irreligion, in hybrid forms, covers the land. Men in exalted positions are not slow to utter forth their impieties. Doubtless there are members of our home legislatures who have no faith in the unseen, but the tone of surrounding society prevents its expression. It is otherwise in the Italian Parliament. There men are not ashamed to rise in their places and scout the very thought of a living and personal God.

Indeed, it is this phase of things which fills the minds of experienced evangelists, particularly that of Gavazzi, with alarm for the future. For Popery there is no fear. It has lost all hold on the intelligence of the country. When challenged to discussion, the priests either beat a timely retreat or are easily discomfited, even in the judgment of their adherents. But to meet the varied forms of rampant unbelief requires thoughtful preparation."

When infidelity becomes thus firmly rooted, it is difficult to secure its removal. Like Canada thistles, infidel sentiments spread rapidly. The natural heart is adapted for their growth.

The Italians have seen all they wish of religion in the Roman Catholic church. They have been so long deluded with the counterfeit, they have decided there is no genuine. In this way Satan secures multitudes for his army of rebellion. The final conflict is rapidly approaching. Let every christian continue clad in "the whole armor of God," that he may stand at last among the conquerors.

THE COVENTRY CENTRE CAMPMEETING.

I wish to give a few words of advice to those who are coming to Coventry Centre Campmeeting. Those who cannot stay all through the meeting had better not come at the beginning; come late enough so as to stay to the close, for the last part is generally the best. If those who have tents take them down and leave before the close, it makes it lonesome for others who stay, and detracts from the interest of the meeting. Let all come at the beginning, and stay through, if possible.

Let every family have a tent, or a number of families club together and make one; we are bothered sometimes to make room for families in the big tents, because we want the room for evening meetings; but let none stay away who are not able to make a tent; we will find a place for you. It will not cost much to make a tent, cotton cloth is so cheap. The size of a tent 11 by 13 feet, 9 feet centre posts, 4 feet wall, makes a very convenient one for two families. It will take eighty-four yards of sheeting, at the cost of about $8. Tent poles for frames can be had on the ground, if wanted.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

I have published two thousand copies of my second serial of "The Significance of the Great Prophetic Symbols of Daniel and John" for distribution among those interested in prophecy. I design to have a quantity on the camp-grounds of Springfield and Alton Bay, at the Crisis stand. Let every minister call and receive a copy, and all others who desire light and truth. This is a tract of 48 pages, and is free to all who want light. Those of our brethren who feel the importance of publishing the great facts on prophecy in tract form, proving the immediate coming of Christ, will please correspond with the writer, at Newton Upper Falls, Mass.

These tracts can be had at the Crisis Office, 144 Hanover St., Boston. Time is short. Let all arouse to immediate action.

L. T. Cunningham.

Correspondence.

From Bro. Jas. Spence.

Dear Brethren of the same blessed hope:—Thinking that a few lines from one who is in entire sympathy with the doctrine taught in the Crisis would be acceptable, especially from such a distance; and as I am writing to the Office, I avail myself of the opportunity of saying a few words to you all. And first of all, I cannot help thinking that you ought to be very thankful for having such a vehicle of thought as the Crisis. I have had the pleasure of its perusal for the last four or five months only, and without any exception, I consider it the best paper for stirring one up, and its lessons of comfort, instruction and reproof are most edifying. Both my wife and myself have learned to value and appreciate it; and I am convinced that we shall do so still more, as the varied lessons of experience from its numerous contributors cannot fail to be a help, comfort and blessing to all; indeed we, who are so isolated and shut out from those truths which are so prominent a feature of your association, regard it as a real boon; but to be able to sit in some of your churches, and listen to sermons that you are quite used to, may never be our privilege.

Pray for us, who have not the great privilege of christian fellowship; that we may witness for Jesus in such a way, that those around us may be led to inquire the cause of our singular joy, upright walk, and firm faith. We do love the Lord Jesus; but we feel that we do not live up to our privileges; but thanks be to our Lord, our hearts have been warmed, aye, made hot, by the Crisis. I have been a believer in the entire mortality of man for the last six years; and every day confirms me more and more in these truths. I am sorry to have to say, that the christians here are as averse to this truth as in America; and the result is that I cannot get a hearing; but when I do, and can get people to go into the subject, they invariably are convinced of their error. I could do a great work, had I the means of getting supplies of really good tracts and pamphlets on these topics; as I am only stationed in one place for three or four years at a time. I have a good opportunity of spreading the truth, and should any of the brethren have the inclination and the means of helping on this work in this vast empire (East India), I shall be rejoiced to put myself in communication with them; and should any be desirous of increasing the circulation of the Crisis and Young Pilgrim, by sending to me a few copies for free distribution to parties likely to become subscribers, I shall be glad to receive them in bulk, and forward them to those who are likely to become subscribers; and as there is no difficulty in remitting subscriptions for the same, I hope that before the end of the year both Crisis and Young Pilgrim will not be strangers in many parts of India.

I must now come to a close with a request that you will all constantly remember us in your prayers, that we may grow in grace, and in the knowledge and love of God, and of our Savior Jesus Christ; for which you shall have our sincere thanks.

Rangoon, Burmah, 12th May, 1876.

From Bro. W. P. Kelch.

Dear Brethren:—I am a man of fifty-two summers, and in my young days brought up in the orthodox faith, to view it all as apostolic doctrine; but as I came to years of maturity, and learned that it was not all divine, I knew there was a screw loose somewhere. The machinery did not work smoothly, and in harmony. Time passed on until a year ago last spring, when I believe I heard the pure, unadulterated gospel preached by one, who is called out here an "Adventist." Yes, Jesus is coming again. Jesus, precious name, oh how sweet!

I have often imagined to myself how happy and full of love Peter, James and John were at the time the Savior took these three chosen ones up on to the top of Mount Tabor. There was presented to them a vision which, for earthly beauty, is without a parallel to this day, and will be until the coming of Jesus. They knew not what to say, or what to do. A voice from the most excellent glory said, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." I can say of a truth, that I have felt a small sprinkle of that very same glory. How blessed it is to read the Scriptures with unveiled eyes. They tell us about the resurrection of Jesus, and what we shall be. They tell us "this same Jesus," who was taken up into heaven, "shall so come in like manner" as he went into heaven. Praise his holy name.

Round Grove, Kan., July 16th, 1876.

From Sr. J. A. Southworth.

Dear Editors:—I feel it my duty to say a word for your encouragement. I have been a constant reader of the Crisis for over ten years, and my interest still increases. It is manna to my soul, and I have passed many pleasant hours in perusing its pages, so full of truth and cheering hopes. The letters from week to week, coming from the scattered few of God's chosen, are read with interest. I love to hear from the brethren and sisters in Christ. They cheer me with words of joy, and the hope of soon seeing our coming King. Every thing seems to signal the day at hand. Let us watch and be steadfast, firm in the faith. I meet with opposition from every side. Is this not a fulfillment of the prophecy where men shall say, "Where is the promise of his coming?" I am glad the Crisis has so great a circulation. May it continue to do good till Christ appears; when I hope to enter, with all the followers of our dear Savior, into that rest prepared for the people of God.

Volinia, Mich.

Bro. H. Salisbury, Fishkill Landing, N. Y., Aug. 4th, writes:—"The Crisis is just what I need to instruct me in the walks of life. I feel as though there is none like it. I receive it on Fridays, and never stop reading, scarcely, till I have perused it all through. I have but lately seen the light, but, thank God, it was the means of my conversion. Previous to that, I thought I was a christian, but to my utter astonishment I found I was leaning upon my own self-righteousness, until, through the instrumentalities of Bro. D. N. Smith, lately of Newburgh, and the goodness of God, I was led to see my perilous condition. Since then, I have been endeavoring to spread the glad tidings of the soon coming kingdom; but I find that in general the people are adverse to this belief, and spurn with contempt the advocates of such a doctrine; but I believe God has given me a work to do in the proclamation of these blessed truths. And as he has given me moral courage, since I believed, to present these truths, my prayer is that he will still continue to give me grace and strength so to do until I fall asleep in him, or until He that is to come will come. My prayers often ascend to the throne of grace in supplication, that the bountiful blessings of God might rest upon your labors, and all who are endeavoring to serve God in spirit and in truth."

THE CANADA CAMPMEETING INTERESTS.

It is well known that there at present two campmeetings in the Province of Quebec—at Magog and Beebe Plain. Steps were taken at the late Beebe Plain meeting to harmonize our campmeeting interests, and Eld. C. P. Dow was invited by the Beebe Plain committee, who also invited all the original members of the Magog Campmeeting committee, who were at our campmeetings, to make whatever statement he had to make of what he wished us to do, or was willing himself to do, with reference to the Magog meeting. After listening to his statement, it was voted that he be requested to confer with the friends of the Magog meeting who had subscribed, and others, to see what they are willing to do with reference to discontinuing that meeting, or otherwise, as might be thought best, and to report to us at that campmeeting to commence Sept. 2nd.

It was therefore agreed that all the friends of the Beebe Plain meeting, who can do so, attend the meeting at Magog, when the report of Eld. Dow will be listened to, and an effort be made to harmonize all our friends with reference to the campmeeting interests of Canada. Harmony is desirable and necessary, and we hope it will be effected in such a way, by prudence and wisdom, as to subserve those interests in the best possible way.

It was understood also that the Conference be re-organized, although we claim no jurisdiction over it in such a way as to embrace Northern Vt. and N. H. in its limits, and otherwise so arrange as to make it a success, and give general satisfaction. Let all pray that these interests may be attended to with the right and judgment that our soon coming King may approve and bless.

Some in the vicinity of the Beebe Plain meeting are constantly being converted. Last Sabbath three more started for the kingdom, and before this meets the eye of the reader will doubtless have been baptized with others. The meetings on the ground held once in four weeks are prospering, from six hundred to twelve hundred attending, and the Spirit of the Lord helping to preach the word and bringing conviction to the unsaved. To God be all the glory.

Alarming Sins.—If I were called to point out the most alarming sins of to-day—those which are most deceitful in their influence, and the most soul-destroying in their ultimate effects—I would mention the love of money on the part of men, and the love of display on the part of women. While open vice sends its thousands, these fashionable and favored indulgences send their ten thousands to perdition. They sear the conscience, incrust the soul with an impenetrable shell of worldliness, debauch the affections from every high and heavenly object, and make man or woman the worshipers of self.—Dr. Crosby.

Connecticut Campmeeting.

The Lord willing, the Connecticut Campmeeting will commence on the ground, near Plainville, Saturday, Sept. 2nd, and continue over Sunday, the 10th. Last year we had no boarding table and no free board, and the result was so satisfactory every way, that we shall adopt the same method this year. Provisions will be furnished at reasonable rates, as before. We are having calls for places to pitch tents in the first circle, and wish all who had tents in this circle last year, would write the Secretary immediately whether they intend to occupy their places this year. If they are not occupied by Tuesday noon, Sept. 5th, the committee will feel at liberty to use the ground. Write before you forget it, and save us trouble. We have one or two tents, 14×14, to rent. Price $5.00. Those coming by R. R. will find conveyance from Plainville to the campground, as usual. Bring tents, bedding, and come early to the meeting. Pray that those who preach the word may be inspired with the Spirit which discerns this time, and take heed to the sure word of prophecy. Its light is greatly needed now. The rest, to prophets made dim by distance, is at our door. Quite a burden and care rest upon those who arrange for the meeting, and unless we get a little foretaste of the earnest of coming glory, and the saints of God are quickened, and sinners moved to repent, the effort will be likely to result in a crop of thrifty and well-cultivated tares. To avoid this, if you have talked hard, hold a grudge, or wronged any one, right it before coming to campmeeting. If you have neglected prayer, reading the Bible, or family worship, resume at once; do not wait till the influence of a campmeeting compels you with shame to confess it. Serve God daily. The thunder shower turns parched gulleys and valleys into water courses; but the passing of the cloud leaves them dry as before. Live by faith; watch and pray always (Luke 21: 36). Behold the Judge stands at the door. (James 5: 9.

Special Notice to Conn. Brethren.

For the general comfort of those attending our campmeeting, some improvements are needed on the camp-ground. It has been decided to make a sufficient number of new seats with backs, to accommodate five hundred persons. The lumber will be delivered on the ground cut up, and each part fitted ready to put together. There is some other work necessary to be done on the ground, and if our brethren generally will come or send a man, and give us one day's work, it will greatly lighten the burden and reduce the expense. To this end, we invite you to come to the camp ground in good season, Wednesday, August 23d (or if stormy the next fair day.) Joiners' tools are wanted to build the seats; and axes, hoes, rakes, and crowbars to do the other work. Let every man bring tools of some kind with him, and not be dependent on his neighbor. Brethren, please don't forget to respond to this invitation.

For the Committee, O. D. Woodruff.

The R. I. Campmeeting, at Coventry Centre, R. I., on the H. P. and Fishkill R. R., will commence Wednesday, Sept. 6th, and close Friday, the 15th. To those in the business circles of life, that are anxiously looking for the return of former prosperity, with fearful forebodings of the future; and those that are watching coming events, waiting the promised return of the Savior, in like manner as he went away to give life and immortality to the faithful, this meeting will be one of unusual interest. Preachers will be expected to show from the Bible the first named class, the position they occupy, as plainly as did Noah's preaching the antediluvians, and the absolute necessity of getting ready to meet the things soon coming on the earth; and cause the second class to lift up their head, and rejoice that their redemption draweth nigh. The signs of the times are as unmistakable omens of the final doom of man, as the putting forth of the buds of the fig tree are of the approach of summer. Being obliged to reduce our expenses to meet liabilities, that we owe no man, free boarders, not active spiritual laborers, will be expected to labor in any position assigned them, to save expense of former meetings. By this arrangement, we do not exclude our aged sisters, who with anxiety have cared for and made happy the home of him whom the woe has been upon if he preach not the word. Come, every one of you, and know that the Lord provides for the Marthas as well as the Marys. Those willing to volunteer their services to reduce the expense of the meeting, will please write J. P. Hazard, Greene, R. I., that there be no confusion at the commencement of the meeting, or unnecessary trouble in hiring help. Board 80 cts. per day. Horse keeping 75 cts. per day, ample room being provided on both sides of the road for horses and carriages. No teams or carriages will be allowed to stand within the limits of the highway. Railroad fare reduced as usual. By order of the committee,

J. P. Hazard.

FAITH'S ANSWER.—1 Thess. 4: 14.

HELEN F. BENJAMIN.

The sun has gone down o'er the mountain,
The cool, grateful evening is nigh;
The robin in yonder green tree-top,
Is singing her sweet lullaby—
Lullaby to her four little birdlings,
While mother-heart swells with delight;
They are safe in their wee, breeze-rocked cradle,
But where are my birdlings to-night?

Where are they? Go ask the great Spoiler,
Who, one by one, stole them away;
My life-storm has shattered the home-nest,
My life's sorrows darkened its day.
Sing on, mother-bird, in the gloaming,
Make vocal the fast fading light;
I've no song to sing to my birdies,
No birdies to sing to to-night.

I list to the children's gay voices,
I watch their light forms at their play,
Till the last ones have tired of their pastime,
And gone on their glad homeward way;
Till the stars are all out in their beauty,
Far away in the heavenly dome;
And I think, with a passionate yearning,
"Oh! when will my children come home?"

Now, darkness has fallen around me,
All is still save the whip-poor-will's cry,
And the far-away voice of some singer,
Telling how, "in the sweet bye and bye
We shall meet"—oh, most heart-cheering promise,
"We shall meet on that beautiful shore";
And I join in the hymn of rejoicing—
God help me, I'll murmur no more.

Far better the grave for my loved ones,
Than here, amidst sorrow and pain;
From their long, dreamless slumber, I would not Recall them, to suffer again.
But soon, when the voice of the angel
Shall waken the dead from the tomb,
We shall meet in the bright land of promise,—
Then, then will my children come home.

SANCTIFICATION.

S. K. TAYLOR.

"But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption."—1 Cor. 1: 30.

There are mentioned in this verse four steps from sin to glory.

1. Wisdom. "The fear of the Lord, that is wisdom; and to depart from evil is understanding." Job 28: 28. The first step is choice. "Length of days is in her right hand; and in her left hand riches and honor. Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace." Prov. 3: 13-18. And many a man and woman who has corrupted and enervated body and mind by disobeying God will acknowledge that in fearing the Lord, and departing from evil, is length of days, riches, and honor.

2. Righteousness. But if a man depart from evil he is not free from sin. We cannot, after we have soiled a white garment until we are ashamed to wear it, make it clean by making up our mind to keep out of the dirt and soil it no more. If we protect it ever so carefully from the falling dust, and keep it from contact with what defiles, having once soiled it, it remains dirty as ever. And so the sinner, although he may sin no more, is just as filthy as ever until he is cleansed from sin.

No man can cleanse himself and be pleasing in the sight of a sin-abhorring God. His deeds of selfishness, pride, emulation, and his secret faults, will not do it. How can he make amends for outward sin and inward corruption? How can he cover his filth with the dirty, tattered garments he only can make? "Our righteousness is as filthy rags." But when a man deliberately and determinedly chooses to serve the Lord, in his obedience the Lord will pardon sin and impart his strength, for his mercy's sake. There is a garment whole and clean—the righteousness of Christ; and with this he may be clothed, and stand before God complete, justified, righteous.

Then he is to keep with all diligence his heart, from which the scarlet sins have been effaced. It is white as snow; he must keep it so.

Righteousness, means, first, justification; second, exact rectitude. The first is our relation to God. The other our relation to our fellow beings. The righteous man is not only righteous through Jesus' atonement, but righteous in worldly business or pleasure. Not only pure in heart, but pure in daily life. He believes in God's mercy to undeserving man, to him in particular; and tries to imitate it by being merciful to others who need mercy without deserving it. He is willing to pay what a thing is worth, and wants no more. He will return borrowed articles, in good time and good condition. He will measure corn or cloth correctly, if the buyer's back is towards him; and when he sells an article he will not unduly praise it in order that he may dispose of it.

3. Sanctification. Sanctification is simply a separation from common to holy purposes. The vessels, and altar, and candlesticks which were used in the service of God by the Jews anciently, were sanctified. The people did not take them to eat and drink with, or to sit upon, or cook with, or to work by when convenience called for them, and at the hour of worship carry them to the temple. They were in the temple always, and when God wanted them used, in worshipping or serving him, they were ready. And when the child of God is sanctified, he is set apart for God only to use.

The devil cannot use him. If Satan wants to get some one to rehearse nonsense, or peddle scandal, or suggest fancies or speculative theories, and so weaken, or divide and distract, or bewilder and scatter the flock, he must employ some one that is unsanctified.

Man cannot use him. If selfish, godless men want to abase or exalt anybody, or advance schemes, or get money, or influence, or popularity, they select their agents and runners from another class.

Self does not control him. Taste, and inclination, and affinity, and ambition, are subjected to the Highest. "The lust of the eye, the lust of the flesh, and the pride of life" are mortified.

God worketh in him both to will and to do of his good pleasure; and the world, the flesh, and the devil, though they may flatter, and crave, and flaunt before his eyes all the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them, cannot persuade or hire him to do their pleasure. He is sanctified through the truth. God's word is truth, and its teachings outweigh all else.

When God has done all he can for us,—accepted, forgiven, adopted, strengthened, helped,—he requires something in return. After salvation comes religion. After righteousness is sanctification. "This is the will of God, even your sanctification."—1 Thess. 4: 3. When any one gives himself to the Lord, the Spirit beareth witness with his spirit that he is a child of God. "As many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." Rom. 8: 14. Sometimes, then, he is overwhelmed with joy, and in various ways manifests the blessing received; and others, seeing the fruit of the Spirit's joy, long for similar ecstasy, and fast and pray for it, but do not get it.

Jesus promised that when he sent the Holy Spirit from heaven to earth, it should reprove the world of sin, of righteousness, and of a judgment to come. That is the first work of the Spirit, and he that will be led by the Spirit is next shown what the Lord would have him do; and if he follows the Spirit, its fruits will be produced. Faith is one; and he will have faith unto salvation. "By grace are ye saved, through faith, and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God." Eph. 2: 8. God gives it by giving his Spirit to produce it. And whoever wants love, joy, peace, long-suffering, and other indispensable graces, has only to do as the Lord by his Spirit and word directs. The "Spirit and the word agree."

Turn to the fifty-eighth of Isaiah, and you will read of a people that tried to find the Lord and failed; who sorrowed and fasted to make their voice heard on high, but the Lord took no knowledge. He told them what to do, and promised, if they followed his directions, their light should "break forth as the morning"—the morning light creeps on with gradual loveliness—and their health should spring forth speedily.

There are many panting after sanctification, and selfishly longing for God to pour his blessings into their hearts, who are so full of carnality that there is no space for God to fill. To such the Lord would say: "Deal thy bread to the hungry," and "bring the poor that are cast out to thy house"—not send them to the poor-house; "when thou seest the naked, . . . cover him," and do not be ashamed to own your poor or degraded relation; "take away from the midst of thee the yoke, the putting forth of the finger,"—shaming and pointing out the faults of other sinners,—"and speaking vanity;" "draw out thy soul [or life] to the hungry," that is, give to the needy, even if it take a little from your life's pleasure or ease; "and satisfy the afflicted soul;"—in short, live for God and sinful, suffering humanity: "then shall thy darkness be as the noonday, and the Lord shall guide thee continually, and satisfy thy soul in drouth, and make fat thy bones; and thou shalt be as a watered garden,"—a watered garden is fruitful—"and as a spring of water whose waters fail not."

The one who gives himself to God may not be instantly transported from midnight darkness to noonday glory. There is no promise of it. In the morning the dark shadows flee away, and almost imperceptibly the sky lightens; we see objects dimly, then more clearly, then distinctly, and gradually the gloom and chilliness give way to warmth and brightness, till the sun is in the zenith flooding the world with glory, and darkness seems impossible. So the sanctified soul, though there may be in his experience no startling change, will lose condemnation and despondency and doubts; and freedom, and confidence, and faith, and rest will increase as he is led by the Spirit; and the approving smile of God is upon him, until "hope shall change to glad fruition, faith to sight, and prayer to praise," when Jesus brings "redemption;" which is the last item of the text, and the best of all.—Bible Echo.

STAND UP FOR YOUR MINISTER.

The song of the churches has been, "Stand up for Jesus." That is well; a precious motto. But the Master is not here bodily, that we should stand up in his defense. Nor would he need human help. He is divine, has all power on earth and in heaven. It is then his truth which his followers should defend. It is the teachings, the principles, or doctrines of Christ, that men must "stand up" for in this world. And yet, there is one way in which a church may in these days "stand up for Jesus" most emphatically; a way that is often lost sight of. I refer to the need of standing up for the minister. Here is a chance for many a church we wot of, to carry out the spirit of that hymn they have adopted. In standing up for their pastor they might appropriate those blessed words, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." But many churches, which have slighted or misused him that was sent unto them, might well take those other words to themselves, "Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me." Stand up, then, for your minister. We need not say, whether right or wrong; yet, if in the wrong, stand up for him in the right to a proper chance for examination, and answer to objections. But should a church stand up for their pastor even though it should be proved that he were less perfect than an angel? The question need hardly be answered, for if a church have a pastor at all, he must be from among human creatures.

There is at the present time a nervous state of unrest in many of our churches. There is a fickleness—a desire for novelty. This condition of things in the churches renders the pastoral relation uncertain and precarious. The "new broom" wears out quite too soon; and it is forgotten that there is a mode of renewing it without exchanging it for a new article. If the church thus finding itself uneasy would try the experiment of staying up the hands of the minister already on the ground, they might find themselves surprised at the result of their encouragement on the work of their brother in the ministry. The church that watereth in this respect, is watered also itself.

A church may fail to stand up through the inefficiency of its appointed officers. The deacons, who have it in their power to help or hinder, and who are the representatives of the church, must stand up for their pastor, and, like Aaron and Hur, stay up its hands. Otherwise, what can he do? The officers must sustain him, or he will suffer. When the distant murmur of complaint, like the muttering thunder beyond the horizon, begins to sound on the ear, then let the officers of the church stand their ground. If the minister be at fault, he may not know it, and likely would be glad to be set right. Who shall now be his helper and counsel, if not the deacons? It is their bounden duty now to befriend him. Should they neglect him at such a moment, who can tell the possible results? A prevention is in such a case far better than a cure, after the wave of complaint has once well started. At such a moment the minister will feel alone, unless the officers of the church come to his aid. It is their duty to be better acquainted with the minister, in respect to character, than others. Now if the pastor is in the right, they should defend him from evil report—stand between him and calumny. There are a thousand forms in which prejudicial influences, rumors, suspicions, may arise on the part of the people. They will often misunderstand, misapprehend, misinterpret, the motives of the solitary minister. Stand up for him, O ye who are set apart for this very purpose. Stand not afar off; the disciples on one account forsook their Lord and fled. "Stand up for Jesus," and in order to do this you will often need to "stand up for your minister."—Chicago Advance.

THE DAY-STAR.

Beautiful Star of day, arise!
Show thy glory in the skies!
Let us now salvation see—
Life and immortality.

Beautiful Star of hope, appear!
We know thy coming draweth near,
For we long have looked for thee—
Star of immortality.

Beautiful Star, O quickly come,
And take thy faithful children home;
Long they've wished to see thy face,
Give them now this heavenly grace.

POPULAR AMUSEMENTS.

The attention of the religious press has been called to the subject of amusements, and much has been written on the question as to what modes it may best assume, and to what extent this idea of mere diversion may be safely carried. It seems difficult to define or state the proper method of recreation. It may possibly be claimed there should be no method about it. The very idea of method takes away its true character. This aspect of the subject must be left to the discrimination and judgment of each individual. There are, however, some things which are obviously out of character, and in bad taste for professors of religion. Nor are these so trivial and unimportant as some persons imagine. The judgment of the Christian church has been clear and decided on the subject. Among the Methodists, it has been held from the beginning, that we should avoid the evil of "taking such diversions as cannot be used in the name of the Lord Jesus," and also "singing those songs or reading those books which do not tend to the knowledge or love of God. The last general conference prohibited by specific regulation the following: "Dancing, playing at games of chance, attending theatres, horse-racing, circuses, dancing parties, or patronizing dancing schools, or taking such other amusements as are obviously of misleading or questionable moral tendency, or disobedience to the order and discipline of the church." It is to be regretted that such legislation was necessary. One would have supposed that the moral sense of christians would have dictated the impropriety of all such things.

We are not alone in this matter of formal denunciation of what cold-hearted professors designate "innocent amusements." The general assembly of the Presbyterian church, uses the folloping pointed language: "The theatre we have always considered as a school of immorality. With respect to dancing, we think it necessary to observe that, however plausible it may appear to some, it is perhaps not the less dangerous on account of that plausibility. It steals away precious time, dissipates religious impressions, and hardens the heart." Bishop McIlvaine, of the Protestant Episcopal Church, speaks thus decidedly of these matters. "Let me now turn to two objects, in which there is no difficulty of discrimination—the theatre and the dance. The only line I would draw in regard to these is that of entire exclusion."

Even our Roman Catholic friends have spoken out in regard to this great evil. In these circumstances we owe it to the cause of Christianity to bear a strong, decided, and constant testimony against an evil which is so wide-spread, and so destructive to vital godliness. Our advice is "touch not, taste not, handle not." The whole thing will be found to be "unclean" and damageing. Those who would keep their garments unspotted by the world, should "abstain from the very appearance of evil." Life is too short for diversions, and the interests it involves are too great for amusements. Let us "watch and be sober." "The end of all things is at hand."—Advocate of Christian Holiness.

MINISTERS ON STILTS.

WM. SHELDON.

When boys wish to appear bigger than they really are, they sometimes get on to stilts, and tower above their fellows; but after all this display, they are only boys on stilts, and are really no bigger than they were before, and not half so potent, and in more danger of falling, and getting hurt. So it is with some ministers who wish to soar above their capabilities. They will mount the stilts of literature, not to exhibit Christ, but to display self, and their fancied talent, and make a sickly show of learning that Paul would not disgrace the gospel with. Under the pretense of feeding the sheep, they pitch their "fodder" on to the roofs of the sheds, where the sheep can't reach it, and really think they have done a work that nobody else could do; and so they have, and one that nobody else ought to do; for this practice, long continued, would starve the flock.

Ho! ye stilted ministers, stop this display! Try no longer to make yourselves big, but rather seek a baptism of humility, and then your thirst to display so much "excellency of speech," will be exchanged for a desire to profit the people, by simplifying yourself to their capacity of comprehension. Words are worthless, only so far as they convey thoughts. Come down to "the common people" as your Master did, and all can comprehend you. Exhibit Christ, and not self.

Satan Repulsed.—Luther says, "Once upon a time the devil came to me and said, 'Martin Luther, you are a great sinner, and you will be damned.'

'Stop! stop!' said I, 'one thing at a time. I am a great sinner, it is true, though you have no right to tell me of it. I confess it. What next?'

'Therefore you will be damned!'

'That is not good reasoning. It is true I am a great sinner; but it is written, "Christ Jesus came to save sinners," therefore I shall be saved. Now go your way.'

So I cut the devil off with his own sword, and he went away mourning because he could not cast me down by calling me a sinner."

True religion has its seat in the heart.

APPLICATION AND CONTENTMENT.

A celebrated modern writer says, "Take care of the minutes and the hours will take care of themselves." This is an admirable remark, and might be very seasonably recollected, when we begin to be "weary in well-doing," from the thought of having too much to do. The present moment is all we have to do with in any sense; the past is irrevocable, the future uncertain; nor is it fair to burden one moment with the trouble of the next. Sufficient unto the moment is the trouble thereof. If we had to walk a hundred miles, we still should have to set but one step at a time, and this process continued would infallibly bring us to our journey's end. Fatigue generally begins, and is always increased, by calculating in a minute the exertion of hours.

Thus, in looking forward to future life, let us recollect that we have not to sustain all its toil, to endure its sufferings, or encounter all its crosses at once. One moment comes laden with its own little burdens, then flies, and is succeded by another no heavier than the last. If one could be borne so can another and another.

Even looking forward to a single day, the spirit may sometimes be faint from an anticipation of the duties, the labors, the trials to temper and patience that may be expected. Now this is unjustly laying the burden of many thousand moments upon one. Let any one resolve to always do right now, leaving then to do as it can, and if he were to live to the age of Methuselah, he would never live to do wrong. But the common error is to resolve to act right after breakfast, or after dinner, or to-morrow morning, the next time; but now, just now, this once, we must go on the same as ever. It is easy, for instance, for the most ill-tempered person to resolve that the next time he is provoked he will not let his temper overcome him; but the victory would be to subdue temper on the present provocation. If, without taking up the burden of the future, we would always make the single effort at the present moment, while there would be, at any time, very little to do, yet, by this simple process, continued from day to day, everything would at last be done.

It seems easier to do right to-morrow than to-day, merely because we forget that when to-morrow comes, then will be now. Thus life passes with many, with resolutions for the future which the present never fulfills. It is not thus with those who "by patient continuance in well-doing, seek for glory, honor, and immortality." Day by day, minute by miuute, they execute the appointed task, to which the requisite measure of time and strength is proportioned; and thus, having worked while it is called day, they at length "rest from their labors, and their works follow them." Let us, then, whatever our hands find to do, do it with all our might, recollecting that now is the proper and accepted time.—Selected.

SPREAD THE TRUTH.

The things so long ago foretold
By God's appointed seers,
Are now fulfilling every day—
The glorious advent nears.

Then speed thee far and near with light
On the prophetic word;
Go tell the people all the signs
Proclaim the coming Lord.

Oh, scatter like the forest leaves,
With loud and warning voice,
That sinners may forsake their sins,
And make the Lord their choice.

And quickly haste to cheer the hearts
Of saints that droop and sigh,
And tell them that most surely now
"Redemption draweth nigh."

Thy mission shall not fruitless be,
For God will own and bless
The means to spread his truth, and souls
Shall wake to righteousness.
Prophetic Times.

A "HALF" CHRISTIAN.

So far as we can learn, there were none in the apostles' days and the primitive church. Perhaps there was no demand for them, and there is no expression of our Savior's which would indicate that there ought to be any. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." The christian was expected to give himself to Christ, to be his forever, to take up his cross and follow Christ. This seems to be the fundamental principle of Bible religion, and it controlled the heart and life, made the disciples a distinctive people, and there was nothing they would not do or suffer for Christ. The name itself had a great meaning—"I am a christian." Persecution, stripes, death might be the consequence, but this made no difference, as they were under oath to Christ, and were one with him and in him. The "half" christian was unknown.

In later years, there appears to be a great many in the church, and some of the old-fashioned kind fear that they are becoming too numerous. They are quiet, generally unobtrusive, and rather popular, and, we doubt, not are sincere in their religion, so far as it goes. They do not wish to be lost, and they long to have heaven after they have had as much of this world as they can obtain. About this they are sincere. Those ugly words, mammon, covetousness, the world, sin, have a very unpleasant meaning to them, as also the words repentance, cross-bearing, living unto God. But by the help of some modern writers and fashionable preachers, they succeed in modernizing their meaning, and everything becomes smooth, easy and pleasing, and on the Sabbath one would suppose they thought themselves the best christians in the world. They make religion so easy, smooth, and attractive, that it must win their hearts, and they love it; it is such an improvement on old-fashioned Presbyterianism, Methodism, Episcopacy, and Puritanism.

The "half" christian reads and believes the Bible, but how, it is not so easy to determine. He does not go very deeply into the precepts, but as as he wishes for heaven hereafter, he looks for the promises, and his faith looks for blessings, not for duties; for joy, not for holiness; for what will suit him, not for what would please his Lord and Master; and his repentance takes hold of the sins and infirmities of his brethren, deeply afflicting his soul at times, but never deeply moving him to confession and grief and reform for his own sins. Somehow he makes the Bible a "half" Bible for himself.

The "half" christian likes the Sabbath. He likes the church, he must be considered a christian, and here he feels more as if he were going to heaven. The singing is elevating, charming, it is about heaven; and if the prayer is to suit his modernized, improved fancy, and if it has in it too much confession of sin, and a fresh and solemn dedication of heart and life and estate to the service of God, he has only to wait awhile, lose that "half," and when the prayer goes up for heaven, begin again and say "Amen." The half christian, it is supposed, half prays, half hears, and half heeds the solemn, earnest sermon, unless it be a charmingly modernized one from a half christian preacher.

It is noticed that there is no "half" in him, or about his store, his farm, his politics—anywhere or anything but his religion. In fact, there is a noble whole-heartedness in him about many things which pertain to himself. As the demand of the church for "half" christians is fully supplied, Ezek. 18: 31, is commended to their consideration, and the commandment "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart."—Banner of Holiness.

THE RUMSELLER AT THE CENTENNIAL EXHIBITION.

Imagine a rumseller at the Centennial Exhibition making a speech in this style: "This thing you see here, ladies and gentlemen, is the product of American skill and industry. He was once a man—may say, gentleman. He stood erect, moved with jubilant feet, had a countenance beaming with intelligence, a mind of vast power, and a character without reproach. He was a loving child, a loyal husband, a splendid citizen before he came into my laboratory. I have worked him over. I touched his clear eyes with crimson, and made his nose as red and irregular as a lump of coral. I embroidered his cheeks with rum buds and brandy blossoms. I cracked his voice and crooked his form. I stained his character and scattered his mind. Look, ladies and gentlemen, at this miracle of mechanism. A fit of mania a potu is coming on. See the artistic contortions of his face. His form seems like the embodiment of a guilty conscience. Every vein is a viper, every artery is an adder, each hair is a scorpion. His blood is like liquid fire. No matter what a man's religious belief is, he believes in hell when he has the delirium tremens. He sees the devils then. Don't go too near him, dear friends; a lighted cigar in contact with his breath might result in spontaneous combustion.

You ask me why I do this kind of work. Because it pays. I do it according to law. Men go to the legislature to protect me in my licensed trade. It does not require much brains nor much money to do this work. Why, ladies and gentlemen, you can see plenty of specimens of my work, and of the work of men in my calling, in the poor-houses, prisons, and mad-houses all over the land."—Temperance Album.

WANDERING ONE, COME HOME!

Those words were spoken to me on the twenty-sixth day of June, without hearing the voice of man. As I stood on Beebe Plain campmeeting ground, looking to the depot, about two o'clock, P. M., I saw a young man walking on to the ground. As he passed by, it seemed as if God spoke through him in the looks he gave me, saying, "Wandering one, come home. There is but little time for you." Though he spoke not, yet his looks spoke louder than words could have spoken. It filled my heart with sorrow and sadness. I passed on for two days, but could stand no longer.

I had to go to him after meeting that evening, and unfold the secrets of my heart to him. I could get no rest. He told me the simple story of Jesus, and pointed me to the Lamb of God, and said, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and he will save you. That night passed away, but sorrow did not leave. Morning came, and brought no joy with it. My proud heart would not yield. Evening came, and found me still in sorrow. We walked away together a little distance in the beautiful grove, and khelt down, and he prayed as I never heard man pray before. It seemed as though the windows of heaven were opened, and God's blessing was resting on him. I was still weeping. All I could say was, "God have mercy on me." Sometimes, I am almost persuaded to give up all; then come up the cares of life, and my heart is too proud to yield.

Oh, what shall I do in that day when the Lord shall come to make up his jewels? Shall I among them stand? No, no, not unless I repent of every sin, and forsake them all. But says one, Jesus died to save sinners. Yes, he died for me, the greatest of them all. How long, oh, how long shall I go on weeping, before I find rest to my weary soul? Will some one tell me what to do? I am almost in despair. I am in such distress of mind and body that it makes me weak and feeble,; for the last thought when I lie down to rest at night, and the first when I awake in the morning, are those words—"Wandering one, come home."

A Wanderer.

[Pray for the "wandering one." We would say to him, Why not "come home"? Jesus kindly invites you. Come now. Trust all in his hands. Carry the burden no longer. Lay it at the feet of Jesus. He will most gladly take the load, and give you rest. Hear him: "Come unto me, all ye that labor, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Believe him, and accept him as your Savior. M. G.

HINTS ON PREACHING.

If a minister, through the blessing of God, would be powerful in converting men, let him abandon the idea of preaching for the mere purpose of preaching. Let him prepare and preach his discourses with a straight aim. Prettiness is not in place in the pulpit; certainly not in a revival. It is not the highest ideal of a sermon that it is precise, and dignified, and offends nobody's taste. Foster complained of Blair that he kept his thoughts so long standing to be dressed, that they were chilled through before leaving his hands. Sermons may be elaborated until they are spoiled. They may be so "perfect" as to be perfectly worthless. Tholuck would call these literary properties "dried sweetmeats in a glass jar." Such sermons are good enough to lay away as embalmed beauties, but they are totally unfit to be preached to a living congregation. Souls never cry out under them.

When ministers are full of the Holy Ghost they do not preach thus. The moment they are in earnest they preach in any way rather than this. And many a revival has been checked, and prematurely brought to a close, by not preaching plain and homely and solemn truths in a weighty and downright earnest manner. How few of us preach as if standing on the brink of eternity, with a God-given message for death-doomed sinners.—Selected.

At all times presence of mind is valuable. In time of repose it will enable us to say and do whatever is most befitting the occasion that presents itself; while in time of trial it may protect, and in time of danger preserve.

THE HONEST QUAKER.

This story—good to read in these days of business avarice—is told of Nantucket a generation ago:—

It was a very severe winter, and the harbor had been frozen over four weeks. The coal in store had been exhausted, and there was much suffering from lack of fuel. Even the fences had been torn down and burnt to eke out the scanty supply of wood. To the great delight of the townspeople the ice broke up one fine morning, and a schooner, laden with coal, was seen approaching. There was much excitement, and before the craft was moored a coal dealer boarded her and eagerly addressed the honest Quaker skipper, Captain Gifford.

"Wal, Cap'en," said he, "you've about hit it this cruise. I guess I'll hev to take y'ur hul cargo. S'pose you'll want more'n the usual seven dollars a ton. Wal, I like to do the squar' thing by a friend, and I'll give you twelve dollars a ton for it."

"Friend," said Captain Gifford, "thee can have one ton of my coal, if thee likes, for eight dollars, but only one ton; all must have a chance."

Just then one of the richest men in the place joined them, saying: "I want ten tons of your coal, at your own price. Name it. I have suffered long enough for once."

He received the same answer, and so did all—one ton for each family, and eight dollars was the price of each ton. No love of gain, no solicitation, no regard for individuals, could move honest Capt. Gifford.—Sel.

THE UNRULY MEMBER.

The tongue is called in the Bible "an unruly member." Our own experience accords perfectly with the statement, and observations on the tongues of others have satisfied us of the fact. We think the following rules, if carefully followed, will be found of great use in taming that which has not yet been perfectly tamed.

1. Never use your tongue in speaking anything but truth. The God of truth, who made the tongue, die not intend it for any other use. It will not work well in falsehood, it will run in such inconsistencies as to detect itself. To use the organ for publishing falsehood, is as incongruous as the use of the eye for hearing, or the ear for smelling.

2. Do not use your tongue too much. is a kind of waste-gate to let off the thoughts as they collect and expand the mind; but if the waste-gate is always open, the water will soon run shallow. Many people use their tongues too much. Shut the gate, and let streams of thought flow in till the mind is full, and then you may let off with some effect.

3. Never let the stream of passion move the tongue. Some people when they are about to put this member in motion hoist the wrong gate—they let out passion instead of reason. The tongue then makes a great noise—disturbs the quiet of the neighbors, exhausts the person's strength, but does no good. The whirlwind has ceased, but what is the benefit?

4. Look into the pond and see if there is water enough to move the wheel to any purpose before you open the gate; or, plainly, think before you speak.

5. Never put the tongue in motion while your respondent has his in motion. The two streams will meet, and the reaction will be so great the words of neither will reach the other, but come back in a blinding sprinkle upon himself.

6. See that your tongue is hung true before using it. Some tongues we have observed are so hung that they sometimes equivocate considerably. Let the owners of such turn the screw of conscience until the tongue moves true.

7. Expect that others will use their tongues for what you do yours. Some claim the privilege of reporting all the news, and charge others not to do so. Your neighbor will not allow you to monopolize the business. If you have anything to be kept secret, keep it to yourself.—Ladies' Repository.

HOME AND HEALTH.

CONVERSATION ABOUT TOBACCO.

"Mother, how much tobacco does it take to make a sermon?"

"What do you mean, my son?"

"Why, I mean, how much tobacco does father chew, and how many cigars does he smoke, while he is making a sermon?"

"Well, the tobacco and the cigars don't make the sermons, do they?"

"I don't know but they do—they help along, at any rate; for I heard father tell Mr. Morris, the minister who preached for him last Sunday, that he could never write well without a good cigar. So I thought the tobacco makes the sermons, or the best part of them."

"My son, I am shocked to hear you talk so!"

"Well, mother, I was only telling what father said, and what it made me think. He said a prime cigar was a great solace (whatever that is); and he said, besides, it drove away the blues—put him into a happy frame of mind, and stimulated his brain, so he could work better. I've been thinking, if I had something to stimulate my brain I could study better; and the next time I have one of those knotty questions in arithmetic to work out, I will get a cigar, and see if it won't help me along. You know you often tell me if I follow my father's example I will not go very far astray; and now I would like a few cigars to make my brain work well, so that I can stand at the head of my class."

"I hope I shall never see my son with a cigar in his mouth; it would be the first step to ruin."

"You don't think father is ruined, do you? And he has taken a good many steps since he took the first cigar."

"I think, my son, your father would be better without cigars, or tobacco in any shape; but he formed the habit when he was young, and now it is hard to break it off."

"But father says, 'We are to blame for forming bad habits, and it is a sin to continue in them. I heard him say that in the pulpit not long ago. There is old Tom Jenkins, who drinks hard. I suppose he would find it rather hard to leave off drinking whisky. But father says, 'It is no excuse for a man, when he gets drunk, to say he is in the habit of getting drunk.' He says, 'People should exercise resolution and moral courage to break off bad habits.'"

"But my son, smokihg tobacco is not quite like drinking whisky and getting drunk."

"No, I know that mother; but I was going on to say that, if smoking was a bad habit, father would have given up long ago. If he could write as well, and do as much good, without using tobacco, he would not spend so much for it. When I want to buy a little candy, or a bit of spruce gum, father tells me I had better practise the grace of self-denial, and save my money for the missionary-box. I heard Deacon Tomkins say his cigars cost him three hundred dollars a year; for he uses none but the very best, and they are all imported. He told father so the other day, when they were smoking together in the study after dinner, and I was trying to get my arithmetic lesson. Now, mother, do you think my father, and the deacon, and a whole host of ministers and elders, and temperance lecturers, and lots of good people would spend so much money to keep themselves in bad habits? Why, just the sum that Deacon Tompkins spends on cigars would support a missionary in the West for a whole year. Please, mother, give me a little money to get some cigars."

"My son, you may talk the matter over to your father. Ask him if he thinks it will improve your habits and your health to smoke. I think he will tell you that it will only do you harm."—Christian Herald.

WHAT I LOST BY SIGNING THE PLEDGE.

I have been thinking about the losses I have met with since I signed the total abstinence pledge. There isn't a man that has lost more by stopping drink than I have. Wait a bit, and I will tell you what I mean. There was a job of work to be done in the shop, and the boss called for me.

"Give it to Spencer," said he; "he's the best hand in the shop."

Well, I told my wife, and she said—

"Why, John! he used to call you the worst. You've lost your bad name, have'nt you?"

"That's a fact, wife," said I. "And it isn't all I've lost in the last sixteen months either. I had poverty and wretchedness, and I've lost them. I had an old ragged coat, and a 'shocking' bad hat, and some waterproof boots that let the wet out at the toe as fast as they took it in at the heel. I've lost them. I had a red face, a trembling hand, and a pair of shaky legs, that gave me an awkward tumble now and then. I've lost those. I had a habit of cursing and swearing, and I've got rid of that. I had an aching head sometimes, and a heavy heart, and, worse than all the rest, a guilty conscience. Thank God, I've lost them all."

Then I told my wife what she had lost.

"And you had trouble and sorrow, and a poor, wretched home, and plenty of heart-aches, for you had a miserable drunkard for a husband. Mary, thank the Lord for all that you and I have lost since I signed the pledge."—Tenn. Agitator.

THE SECRET OF HAPPINESS.

The most common error of men and women is looking for happiness outside of useful work. It has never yet been found, when thus sought; and never will be, while the world stands; and the sooner this truth is learned, the better for every one. If you doubt the proposition, glance around among your friends and acquaintances, and select those who appear to have the most enjoyment in life. Are they idlers, and pleasure seekers, or the earnest workers? We know your answer.

Of all the miserable human beings it has been our fortune, or misfortune to know, they were the most wretched who had retired from useful employments, in order to enjoy themselves. Why, the slave at his enforced labor, or the hungry toiler for bread, were supremely happy in comparison.

Earnestly would we press upon the young minds the truth we have stated. It lies at the foundation of all well-doing, and well-being. It gives tranquility and pleasure to the youth just stepping across the threshold of rational life, as well as to the man whose years are beginning to rest upon his stooping shoulders. Be ever engaged in useful work, if you would be happy. This is the great seeret.—Arcana.

Good Eyesight.—There are many causes which tend to impair the healthy vigor and radiant beauty of the eye. Among these causes are the following: Insufficient sleep, severe study, writing and reading by gas-light, reading in bed, painting the eye-lids, ill-health. We see the fires of alcohol in the eyes as well as on the nose of the drunkard. All kinds of excesses are sure to be reflected in that delicate and sensitive organ, the eye. No person can violate the physical laws and escape the penalty. Nature is arbitrary in her legislation, and makes no exceptions in the measure of her punishments. If the king gets drunk, he will have redness of eyes notwithstanding the royal blood in his veins. If the beggar keeps good hours, and obeys the physical laws, she will have clear and handsome eyes, brighter than the diamonds flashing in the queen's coronet. It is a physiological fact that plain food, abundant rest, and a cheerful temper, are the principal aids in the staff of health, and that good health insures good eyesight. —Exchange.

Cure for Hydrophobia.—It is said, on the authority of the British Medical Journal, that Dr. Grzyvala of Krivoe Ozero, Podolia, has discovered a cure for hydrophobia. The remedy consists of an infusion of the leaves of Xanthium Spinosum, a plant very common in our North Atlantic States, popularly called clotweed. Dr. Grzyvala discovered this remedy during the Crimean war, and has had an opportunity to apply it in upwards of one hundred cases, and invariably with complete success.—Boston Globe.

Tobacco Boys.—Tobacco-boys will make tobacco-men, with tobacco-teeth, tobacco-breath, tobacco-pockets, and a general tobacco smell; and what is worse, they will have tobacco appetites, which will crave tobacco enough in their lifetime to feed them, to buy a small farm, and to educate a small family. They will, moreover, spit tobacco all along their way through life, to the annoyance of their neighbors, and the displeasure of their wives and families.—Ex.

Diet.—The leading requirement in regard to diet, it may be stated, is simplicity. All mere stimulants, and gross or highly concentrated food, which overtax the digestive organs, should be avoided. So should all spices, condiments, and seasonings, which supply no nutrition, and cannot be assimilated. In addition, the food should be well masticated, taken at regular intervals, and moderate in quantity.

The CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

THE GOOD TIME COMING.

Bless God, the time is coming, when Jesus Christ will reign,
When from the realms of glory he will return again;
He'll come to meet his people, who've waited long for him,
O how those eyes will brighten, that with watching have grown dim.

CHORUS.

Yes, in clouds of dazzling splendor, He's coming by and by;
O be ready, friends, to meet Him, for the time is drawing nigh.

How sweet to be with Jesus, that blessed Lamb of God,
And walk with him those golden streets, no sinful feet have trod;
We then shall be immortal, and clothed in purest white,
And wear a crown of glory, ever beautiful and bright.

And then with saints and angels, through an eternal day,
We will praise our blessed Jesus, and his precious voice obey;
There we shall roam forever, with loved ones by our side,
And the blessed holy Jesus will be our constant guide.

DANGERS OF THE HOUR.

O. D. WOODRUFF.

Not the least important and telling omen of the times is the opposition of that kind of science which is training armies of blaspheming scoffers to defy the God of heaven, and, if possible, to crush out the influence of the Bible in the earth. No evidence of the Lord's coming is more decisive and clear than this. It utters no uncertain sound. It is the voice of unbelief. With the Bible at its feet, it laughs at the prophetic route, traversed by Scripture, and ransacks creation for weapons to blot out inspiration. It digs to the bottoms of the mountains, climbs to the tops thereof, and probes the depths of the sea. It compels all nature to do its bidding, and the ease with which the task is accomplished, emboldens it to throw down the gauntlet to christianity, and start for the origin of man. Setting aside the declaration, "And the Lord formed man" (Gen. 2: 7), it disappears in the measureless past. We have not long to wait. Going back a few millions of ages, the chief apostle returns with a trophy. He makes a discovery, which does credit to his efforts, and honor to his theory, a community of "Tadpoles." By dextrous management, frogs are produced, then apes, and now, having begun to lose their fear of respectability, and their discoverer perceiving in them traces of his own image, he announces audibly, success!

It is unfortunate for the theory, that frogs and toads, enjoying the light of this new gospel of the nineteenth century, decline to endorse the example of their predecessors; and their sombre chorus, as it breaks the stillness of night, is a stinging rebuke to the author of this shameless insult to the God of the Bible. To men whose lofty aspirations sink to a level like this, the word of God is but a compilation of self contradictions; food only for ignorant novices and silly dupes. They would have us to believe that their conclusions admit of no variableness, neither shadow of turning. Their name is legion, and their investigations as confused as the tongues of the builders of Babel.

Says one writer: "Only a few years ago, geology demonstrated as a fixed fact, that the centre of the earth was a liquid, molten, mass of fire; of late, however, this same geology has demonstrated that there is no central fire at all; the centre of the earth is and must be solid. Mathematics and physics prove this now, and the same means proved to former teachers just the opposite." "Not long ago, geology said that granite was once in a molten state, and we were stupid if we could not see it. But of late, they have discovered that granite was never molten at all; and from its very structure could not have been." "Geologists have told us that innumerable ages and excessive heat were required to produce the chalk formations. Deep sea dredgings of late show that the process is now going on at the bottom of the sea." So conflicting are the theories of these teachers, that their discoveries are rediscovered and lost again. Conclusions made to be remodeled; theories established and renewed, and laws fixed and reconstructed. They differ scores of millions of years as to the beginning of the earth's existence, and yet these enormous discrepancies seem not to annoy them, nor the world at large, near so much as the evidence that the end of all things is at hand.

These champions of the fables of the last days are greatly indebted to a lukewarm church for success. That form of christianity, which pretends to represent the life and teachings of Jesus of Nazareth, and proffers its gifts to be seen of men; bestows ragged scrip and coppers for charitable purposes; and dollars and eagles for the exhibition of health-destroying fashions; which throng feasts and pleasure gatherings, and leaves the prayer meeting to die of neglect; which maintains a system of religion so excessively extravagant and proud, that the poor are either driven out, or compelled to frame all sorts of excuses to put off their creditors, in order to pay their dues at this unhallowed altar of shame, need not be startled that infidelity knocks for admission, corrupts even the pulpit, and finds its way to the bes seats in the synagogue.

God is hardly known among those whose glittering pretensions and hollow professions have bogotten a universal cry for reform, reaching even to the innermost courts of sanctuaries. That people whose worship is mammon, not God; whose power is money, not faith; discover no symptoms of alarm at the situation.

Robbery and treachery in high places, financial prostration, distress, perplexity, and astonishment everywhere, leave no room to doubt that human depravity is yet far from being harmonized into bliss and peace. To allay apprehension, the dreamer's of a world's conversion use free applications of peace and safety. These kind friends have greatly weakened confidence in the word of God, but have changed not a whit its solemn, solid truth. That book of books, whose truthful utterances have been literally confirmed by the events of ages, is taken in hand for repairs by those, against whose glowing visions it breathes its earnest protest, and by fastening upon it figurative, allegorical, and spiritual interpretations; they have won for the sacred volume a fame, which ranks it with violins and hand-organs, nodody knows what tune next.

Attempts to make the Bible do their bidding, seem to fail before the rolling tide of iniquity, now sweeping swiftly on. They see christendom bristling with guns and iron clads, and rapidly multiplying implements of war. Committees on ways and means for reform are springing up every where. The odor of corruption has become so offensive, that thieves, liars, murderers, oppressors of the fatherless and the widow, drunkards, and rumsellers, catch up the cry as it passes, and shout "reform." Sin trying to purge itself with evil! God who has provided a fountain for sin and uncleanness, and a Bible to show the way to it, are neglected for more modern methods, conveniently arranged, with fewer crosses and less sacrifices.

The constantly increasing and warlike attitude of the great powers is ominous, as the disturbance at a prominent prophetic point now no larger than the hand, holds the gaze of those who sit upon thrones, and challenges their skill to preserve the peace. The present generation is being rapidly borne into a chaos of wickedness, and increasing confusion, to be interrupted only by the day of judgment, and perdition of ungodly men. The picture is not a barren ideality. Earth's harvest of evil is ripe for destruction. Jehovah is speaking in the heavens above, and in the earth beneath. Stormy winds, roaring seas, and devouring fires, fulfilling his word; and a watchman here and there echoes the strain, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh." Many who once gave heed to the sure word of prophecy have laid down the truths which bring crosses, and preach smooth things, with gilt edges. Thousands to-day respect the Bible, while it serves to ornament the parlor. Its glittering leaves, securely clasped, can do them no harm there; but he, who with open book dare tell its piercing truths, might prove an unwelcome visitor. Man is rather likely to be capable of less than he really thinks himself to be. He is not used to making worlds, and setting them in motion with an accuracy that makes calculation a certainty to all generations. He has not yet counted the stars. He is ignorant of the exact distance of the sun. He has not yet learned himself, and the saddest of all, he knows not his God. He is busily engaged just now in preventing a disruption of all his works; and if possible to improve the reputation of the race. He is justly alarmed, which increases the anxiety. His besetting sin is, and always has been, "to be as gods." He has attempted too much and failed. Another will take his place, and mismanagement no longer prevail. The face of the earth will be renewed. Then as now, it will continue to hang upon nothing, and the new heavens, like curtains of glory, will be stretched about it.

Of old, God laid the foundations of the earth, and by searching, man has not found out the time. He will create it anew, but has not entrusted man to announce the time in advance. The time of both the end and the beginning are secrets of the Almighty alone. It were wise not to bring the Scriptures into derision by attempting too much for them. Jesus tells us we may know when the end is near, and to proclaim this fact is the watchman's duty to-day. Men not corrupted by defiant unbelief; men of faith, and whose lives honor God; men who preach Christ, and not themselves; men who feel the need of the Spirit and power, and reckon themselves nothing without it; honest men, praying men, godly men, are needed, and the church languishes for more such. To thy post of duty, O watchman. The judge standeth before the door.

Southington, Ct., Aug. 1876.

TROUBLE.—Trouble is a marvelous mortifier of pride, and an effectual restrainer of self-will. When suffering has broken up the soil, and made the furrows soft, there can be implanted the hardy virtues which outbrave the storm. In short, trial is God's glorious alchemistry, by which the dross is left in the crucible, the baser metals are transmuted, and the character is enriched with gold.—Punshon.

"SECTARIANISM."

C. MENDENHALL.

Sectarianism, all must admit, is a great evil. Never was it ordained by the founder of our great christian system. The various subdivisions, with their new-made designations, are altogether unscriptural. Paul, in his day, saw the evil, and warned the church against it. Jesus prayed that his followers might be one. Nevertheless, it is a fact much to be lamented, that of all the religions in the world, the Christian is the most divided. Men become attached to one of these factions, and not only treat all other sects with indifference, but in many instances give evidence of actual hatred.

Strange as it may seem, although worshipping the same God, procuring pardon through the same mediator, they apparently have but little in common. An individual will become imbued with a certain tenet, making it the test of fellowship, at the expense, very often, of the weightier matters of law, mercy and justice. If a man is found wanting, weighed in their theological balance, it matters not how great his piety, how large his benevolence; he must be cast out, because, forsooth, he cannot subscribe to all of the thirty-nine articles laid down by the creed-makers.

A writer has truly said:—"An ardent temperament converts the enthusiast into a zealot, who, while he is laborious in winning proselytes, discharges common duties very remissly, and is found to be a more punctilious observer of his creed than of his word. Or, if his imagination is fertile, he becomes a visionary, who lives on better terms with angels and with seraphs, than with his children, servants and neighbors; or he is one who, while he reverences the "thrones, dominions, and powers" of the invisible world, vents his spleen in railing on all dignities and powers on earth."

The Pharisees were sticklers for their forms, were tenacious for the truth (as they held it); yet our Savior does not speak very highly of them.

The modern Pharisee is in very many instances no better than his ancient progenitor. He has "the Gospel, the truth," and is ever ready to manifest a spirit of exclusion and denunciation against those who differ from his interpretation. Such men imagine they have gained light (for to them any new thing is light), and this is excuse enough to distract and divide the body of Christ. They will ride their "hobby" into a prayer-meeting, presenting their crude and worthless thought in the most unreasonable times and places. A sermon plainly preached upon the great love of Jesus, the practical realities of life, afiords no good for them. A prayer-meeting, where experiences are told, where Jesus and his great work is the theme, is a tame place for our sectarian friend; unless, indeed, he can get an opportunity to bore the people, and kill out the devotional element, with fifteen or twenty minutes talk upon an important point which burdens his mind. He need not necessarily hold an error, but undue prominence of a single truth, to the exclusion of other truths, will make just such an individual as we have described.

Generally we find that those men who are rigid sectarians, filled with bigotry, lack knowledge. They take very limited views, gaining contracted ideas of the great objects for which religion is designed.

There is nothing so far from the spirit of our Master as sectarianism. Men become so wrapped up in their own party as to see no good thing outside. No matter how good a proposition may be suggested, if it comes not through our channel, it mnst be rejected. We once heard a fellow minister object to a certain excellent plan, because it had been adopted by the Methodists. Again, others will sneer at and strive to belittle a great work of grace, because it did not begin with our sect. Rigid sectarians would keep all their energies within their own rank and file, hence universally we find them condemning union revival effort. If a few ministers of the various sects happen to step out and work hand in hand for a common purpose, others will whisper "compromise," "seeking popularity," etc. Surely, such a spirit is un-christianlike, but who dare affirm that it does not exist among all of the sects?

In the great work of saving men, all the followers of Jesus should be a unit. What! can it be wisdom to quarrel over disputed points in theology, while millions are perishing on every hand? Shall we be more anxious to have "our list of names extended on the church book, than to have them recorded in the "Lamb's book of life?" Shall we manifest more zeal in adding to our branch of the church militant, than to have them joined to the church of redeemed ones? Beloved, let us work wherever and whenever we can, for the saving of men.

The first great lesson for all to learn, is their need of Christ. Let us be ready to give the right hand of fellowship "to all who love our Lord Jesus in sincerity." Surely it is far better to manifest a spirit of love, liberality, and forbearance, than to be wasting our strength in smiting our fellow-servants.

No church has a right to claim that they have the whole truth, with no admixture of error. If, as individuals, any dare claim infallibility in faith, let them unite with the infallible church, and not remain in fellowship with those whom they virtually proclaim unsaved.

The spirit of intolerance, which inaugurated the inquisition, with its rack, torture and stake, is too often found within the ranks of Protestantism. May God help us all to show forth the reality of our profession, by pure and spotless lives, avoiding railing accusations, loving all the brethren fervently, ever ready to hold friendly intercourse with those with whom we differ. The field is too large, time too short to spend in bickering and strife.

Let the love of Jesus fill up the heart, and bigotry must fall to the ground. Let us bear in mind, that men may be just as honest as we are, yet have different views as to the plans of God. See that we never abuse any one for believing as we once did ourselves. We never expect to see a union of sects; for men cannot unite upon a creed; but there certainly is no good reason why we should not love one another, interchange civilities, and when occasion demands, work together to redeem men from the power of Satan.

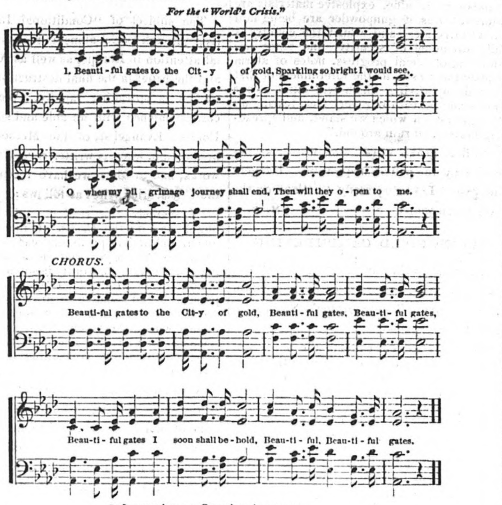
Beautiful Gates. 9

Words by Miss V. M. SALTMARSH. Music by GEO. H. INGALLS.

For the "World's Crisis."



2 Journeying on, I am longing to see
Angels of glory, so fair,
Waiting with joy at the portals for me,
Waiting to welcome me there.—Chorus.

3 Beautiful gates! now I know they are near,
Brighter my pathway has grown;
Light from the City begins to appear,
Glorious light from my home.—Chorus.

4 Beautiful gates! O they say they are bright,
Shining with jewels so rare;
Pilgrims who enter those portals of light,
Pure robes of righteousness wear.—Chorus

5 Washed in the blood of the Lamb that was slain,
Washed and made sinless and white;
So shall I enter, and ever remain
Safe in the realm of delight.—Chorus

SUMMER RELIGION.

Warm weather piety is regulated by the thermometer. The standard it goes by is not the warmth of inward love for Christ, but the warmth of the atmosphere. Its zeal cools in proportion as the weather grows hot. When the glass gets above ninety, the inward emotions are congealed, and piety is "past feeling."

This leads christian professors to spend Sabbath-hours fanning themselves on their piazzas when their pastor goes by on his way to his and their sanctuary. It is not too warm for him to preach, but it is too warm for them to listen. He has toiled through one or two severe summer days to prepare a discourse for their souls; they are unwilling to go and sit for half an hour as the recipients of the "truth as it is in Jesus." What must the world think of such a religion? For on the very next day these self-coddling christians are off to their stores and shops, through the broiling sunshine, or else are hard at work in their own dwellings. It is too hot to worship God for two hours on the Sabbath, but it is never too hot to toil for mammon six days in the week.

If the world wonders at such a form of godliness, what must the Master think of it? The ingenious arguments of the Humes or Huxleys, do not do one tithe of the mischief in shaking our faith in christianity that professed christians do when they make a paltry physical gratification of more account than their eternal welfare. We are not so often tempted to scepticism by the depth of infidel arguments as we are by the shallowness of its professors. It is the want of its hold on christians, that gives the gospel so little hold on society.

We must not count this matter of shirking the claims of God to gratify bodily comfort, a small thing. It is far otherwise. Christ held it a substantial evidence of the genuineness of their faith that many of his early followers cheerfully endured physical trial and torture. But just imagine Aquilla or Priscilla renouncing their religion because the weather was hot!

It is said that lay christians are excused from the church and prayer-meetings because some hard-worked pastors take a six weeks' vacation in mid-summer. But these pastors get no Sunday rest during the remainder of the year; and it is established that even the Spurgeons and Newman Halls must have a let-up once a year, or they soon break in physical and mental force. There is no parallel between the cases.

One of the lamentable effects of warm weather religion is detected in the loose morals of many professors during their summer absences from home. They have evidently left their consciences behind them; for they are oftener seen in the dance, or games of pleasure, than they are in any christian service in the neighborhood. "Nobody knows us here," is not an excuse that passes muster with God.—Evangelist.

A CHRISTIAN who puts off religion because he is in worldly company, is like a man that pulls off his shoes because he is among thorns.

GOOD WORKS.

A believer may look so much at his good works, as we have known many, as to fail to look to the cross and blood of Christ for salvation. Works are good in their place, but they can never in any wise save us fully and to the very uttermost. Let us, therefore, not look to the good works of others, nor those of our own, but to him who can save us from all sin, and present us faultless before his throne. A cripple might as well lean upon his own shadow for support in walking, as for any man to depend upon his good works for salvation. If a man, ascending a steep and rugged mountain, should depend upon a frail reed as a staff for support and safety, he would be as wise as he who expects to climb up to heaven by his good works. I tell you, in God's fear, that there is at this day in Christendom too great an inclination among Christ's professed followers to trust in some way or other to their varied and good works to secure God's favor, and to have a meetness for glory.
